III. A miraculous increase (vs. 10-13). 10. Make the men sit down—Mark tells us that they sat down by companies and in ranks, "by hundreds, and by fifties," so that an orderly arrangement was maintained. Much grass—This indicates that the time was early spring. The men. About five thousand—The women and children would sit by themselves. 11. Had given thanks—Jesus blessed the food and gave thanks in recognition that the Father was the giver of the temporal good about to be dispensed to the multitude. Distributed to the disciples—They were to act with Jesus in this miracle, and were to be in a position to receive the full benefit of the lesson Jesus was giving. The disciples kept on distributing the bread and the fishes until there was no more demand. As much as they would—As much as the people desired. 12. Were filled—There was no scantiness in the amount given out. There is no scarcity in the kingdom of grace. God gives abundantly. Gather up the fragments—Although there was an abundant multiplication of the food supply, there must be no waste. 13. Filled twelve baskets with the fragments—These were the small wicker baskets used by the Jews to carry food that was ceremonially clean, and were here used by the apostles to carry a supply of provisions for themselves. "In all things the Saviour set us an example of frugality, though he had an infinite supply at his disposal, and was himself economical though He was Lord of all."—Barnes. 14. Then those men, when they had seen—"When therefore the people saw."—R. V. This is of a truth that prophet—The people were looking for the coming of the Messiah, and this miracle was viewed in the light of a sign that He who wrought it was the Christ. Jesus had exercised divine power in the multiplication of the loaves and fishes, and He had done this for the relief of the hungry multitude. 15. Jesus not only saw the outward acts of the people as they wondered at the miracle He wrought and admired Him as a benefactor, but He knew their thoughts and their purpose. They believed He was their coming King, and in spite of His diffidence they would make Him the King of Israel; for it was their view that the Messiah should be a powerful temporal ruler. They probably expected to take Him up to Jerusalem and crown Him at the approaching feast of the Passover. To avoid any open conflict Jesus withdrew into a mountain by Himself to pray.

IV. The miracle on the sea (vs. 16-21). The disciples doubtless shared the belief of the people who saw the miracle of feeding the five thousand, that Christ should be crowned king, and they desired to remain with him. For this reason he "constrained them" to enter the ship and cross the sea of Galilee to the other side, toward Capernaum. They were reluctant to go away, for if people were coming to their Master, they wished to receive those that would naturally come to them as his intimate followers. It has also been suggested that the disciples did not wish to leave him alone, since it would appear like desertion. The disciples were in great distress during the night, for one of the sudden storms which sweep the Sea of Galilee from time to time had arisen, and threatened to wreck their boat. Their toiling in rowing had not been effective in bringing the boat far toward the desired landing-place. Jesus was spending the night in prayer while they were in danger of finding watery graves; but he was not unmindful of their distress, and toward morning he came to them, walking on the sea. When they were afraid at his approach, he assured them that it was he and they received him into the boat. The waters became calm and "immediately the ship was at the land whither they went."

Questions.—To what place did Jesus and his disciples go? For what purpose? By what conveyance? What time of year was it? Who besides the disciples were about Jesus? What question did Jesus ask Philip? Why did he ask the question? What was Philip's answer? What suggestion did Andrew make? What course did Jesus pursue? How many were fed? How large an amount of food was left? How did the people regard Jesus after the miracle? Describe the miracle that followed?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Food in the Desert.
I. Christ's gift to his hearers.
II. Christ's lesson to his disciples.
III. An occasion of human error.

I. Christ's gift to his hearers. John's gospel presents chiefly the discourses of Jesus. This narrative is given by way of introducing his great discourse on the bread of life. It is the record of a critical scene in Christ's work in Galilee, which followed a great miracle in Jerusalem, where he revealed himself as the giver of life in the healing of the cripple at the pool of Bethesda. In this record he is revealed as the support and guide of life. At Jerusalem the central teaching was upon the relation of the Son to the Father. In this case it is the relation of Christ to the believer. The place where the multitude gathered was a thoroughly secluded district, well fitted to prepare them for the lessons they were to receive. Jesus sought retirement from the fury of Herod and the chief rulers. The disciples required rest and retirement after their first missionary tour. They needed training in philanthropic work, as well as in spiritual things. The people were eager to hear Jesus' teaching. They evinced a confidence in him which he did not disappoint. He honored their imperfect zeal. We are here made to see Christ's ready discernment of all forms of human necessity, and his power to relieve them. What he would not do for himself, he instantly did for those who forget their own comforts to learn of him. The compassion of Jesus was without respect of persons. He did not raise the question of race or religion. He did not wait until the people cried out from hunger. He provided food for them before they asked it.

II. Christ's lesson to his disciples. It was more to the disciples than to the multitude that the events of the day were significant. They had been taught by degrees what was involved in "leaving all" to follow Jesus. He now taught them what was their mission to the world they had left, and that they had left it that they might serve it more effectually, and were now to love it with a new love. Discipleship involved practical laborious service. Jesus put questions to his disciples which they could not answer, and laid on them duties which they of themselves could not perform. His object was to prove them, and to reveal their ignorance and weakness, that they might appeal to him for help. The proffer of Jesus' own wisdom and power was the answer to his own question. In the reckoning of the disciples there was a large deficit. With Christ there was a great surplus. With the child's gift, blessed and multiplied, Jesus fed the hungry and refreshed the weary with no diminishing of his supply. Having by the miracle taught a lesson of beneficence, Jesus inculcated a lesson in economy. A solemn warning was implied in the command to "gather," and in its reason, "that nothing be lost."

III. An occasion of human error. The human and the divine idea of kingship came into strong contrast as a sequel to the miracle. The multitude imagined that Jesus was the destined deliverer of Israel from the Roman yoke, and were prepared to support his claim as a temporal monarch. Though those Galileans were not representative men, they were fired with the national idea, and they attempted to carry out the national wish with regard to the Messiah. Time and place were, in their estimation, favorable for raising the standard of rebellion. Upward of five thousand resolute hearts would form a nucleus for an army, which they expected would soon include every true Jewish patriot. Instead of surrendering themselves to Jesus and his teachings as the Messiah, the multitude wished him to surrender himself to serve their purposes, and to accept their hosannas. Their proposal to make him king was sincere and enthusiastic. Jesus withdrew to frustrate their purpose, and thus to indicate the nature of the glory he sought. He had much to plead on behalf of the multitude on whom the miracle had been lost, and much to plead in behalf of his disciples, who had been greatly affected by the zeal of the multitude. He retired to the mountain, away from the political designs of men, to watch over his disciples as they toiled in their voyage across the lake.

ARTIFICIAL RUBBER

It may seem strange to speak of a trade conflict in rubber, but seriously there is going to be a bitter and wide reaching fight for rubber between the nations, and it is going to have important consequences. The present position of the rubber trade is that we have it, or ought to have it, all our own way; but it is now, or is soon going to be, one of the most competed industries of Europe and America. The cargo of the Deutschland and other submarines will serve to show the way. At the beginning of the war the European Governments discovered, what indeed was generally foreseen, that they would have to obtain the bulk of their rubber, raw and vulcanized, from the United States. Rubber is an essential to certain trades whose continued production is necessary to the successful prosecution of war, and the European Governments have for economic reasons found themselves compelled to devise some way, outside of trade, to keep up their supplies of pure rubber or else go short of an indispensable material; they have therefore decided to produce their own and to draw up a scheme for assisting those rubber producers who have made some practical advances in the difficult and technical trade of manufacturing artificial rubber.

The success of this extraordinary industry in France and Russia has been surprising. The French quite early in the war took the way of saving their rubber, or of "regenerating" the old and torn motor tires and other forms of old caoutchouc, as the French call crude rubber. Now rubber is sometimes employed pure, but usually it is combined with other substances, particularly sulphur. French chemists are now at work extracting the pure rubber or caoutchouc from old tires and vulcanized rubber. Washing with steam is the method usually adopted, which drives off the sulphur in fumes and melts the rubber without burning it. But the washing has proved only one-half the business. The one thing which this peculiar art of making old rubber feel and look like new requires is to restore the elasticity and compressibility of the original rubber, but this unfortunately it fails to do. The regenerated rubber is chemically pure; it is liquid and can be vulcanized and is also impermeable; it serves well as a varnish, as material for the awnings of motor cars and boats, but has not the elastic quality of pure rubber.

Meantime chemists of other Governments have sought to escape from this dilemma. They are now making rubber from gelatine, but there is still the necessity of saving the old rubber, of washing it and of using it again for tires and tensile purposes. A very successful process has just been patented at Petrograd. The details, which were published lately by the inventors, Dankworth and Kohler, differentiate sharply between the methods at present in vogue. In this new method the inventors resort to dry distillation of old and torn rubber tires, which expels the sulphur and oils. It is stated that the rubber which remains behind can be vulcanized so successfully that the final product has all the properties, elastic and compressibility, of the best Para rubber. If these chemists have brought the regeneration of old rubber to this degree of scientific effectiveness their invention will be regarded as a prime achievement. For we are not likely to have too much rubber; there will always be the need for economy. To an army it provides a further extension of mechanical transport (motors), and to the rubber trade it supplies a great and useful collateral industry.

Reference has been made to the manufacture of artificial rubber, and considering its interest and importance, a few details may not be out of place. The French chemist Paul Razous has published in the Revue Scientifique of July 29, a process of making rubber which will be of great value to workers in this novel field. Gelatine and glycerine are the main materials used, and are prepared by melting and mixing with chromic acid. The material thus evolved having the properties of elastic masses and bands. The gelatine is heated in a vat, glycerine and then chromic acid are added, and the mixture carefully stirred. The final product, while hot, is cast in different shapes and sizes, and in its cold state is found to be elastic, like genuine rubber, and to possess the qualities of resistance to compression and traction. It is dark green in color, heavier than real rubber, but somewhat lighter than water. This artificial rubber should be covered, as it undergoes changes in the air, but when it is properly covered, as with a layer of genuine rubber, it is capable of the ordinary uses of the natural article. It can be heated and inflated, and makes good pneumatic tires, which are said not to burst. On account of its elasticity it can be used for making shock absorbers. The objections to artificial rubber are its weight and its tendency to atmospheric changes. But M. Razous, who has used it, says that the weight does not interfere with the speed of an automobile.—N. CHOOSING
HUSBAND

Miss Virginia Ashurst was known to possess a fortune producing $50,000 a year. Naturally she had no end of suitors, and she was quite sure that all of them wished to marry her money as well as herself and without her money would not think of marrying herself.

She resolved to submit a series of questions to each one of the half dozen men who had proposed to her. These questions were to be propounded anonymously, the men not knowing from whom they came. This was the form of her interrogatories:

"First—State what you consider the claims of a wife on her husband.

"Second—Do you hold that the husband or the wife should be at the head of the household?

"Third—What is the object of your life?

"Fourth—Do you believe in the present system of education applied in schools and colleges?

"Fifth—Should the mother's or the father's views be paramount in the training of children?

"Sixth—Should the wife be permitted to receive the attention of men other than her husband?

"Seventh—Should the husband be permitted to pay attention to other women than his wife?

"Eighth—What are your views as to the use by a husband of money belonging to a wife?"

Miss Ashurst hoped in the replies to these questions, selected with some care, to form an opinion of the inner selves of those who replied to them. Had she asked them herself of her suitors she knew that she could not depend on the sincerity of the answers. She surely had an advantage in not being known.

She was somewhat disconcerted to find that all her suitors were applicants for the hand of this wealthy unknown. The replies were all evidently well considered and satisfactory to her, some especially so in certain numbers, some in others, but altogether they made up a fair average. Yet there was no one that showed in every number just what she wanted. Besides, she was miffed that every one of the men who had tried to make her believe he loved her and would be miserable without her was ready to marry another girl with a fortune. She resolved to send her list of questions to another half dozen of her men acquaintances.

She received replies in every case. Five of these replies were acceptable, some of them being carefully worded and showing that the writer was a thoughtful, well-balanced person, while one treated her examination paper with contempt. This person was Bob Clendenin, a young fellow whom Virginia might have considered as one she would like for a husband had he not been a sort of free lance, apparently oblivious to the seriousness of life. His reply to the number as to the claims of a wife on her husband was that the few claims she had the less likely she would be disappointed. He averred decidedly that the husband should be head of the house. His object in life was to get through it with the least bother. He pronounced the present system of education "rotten to the core." The father's views as to the training of children should be paramount, but they never would be. No father could ever compete with the mother in winning the affection of the children. Consequently they would always be influenced by her instead of him. As to a wife or husband being permitted to pay attention to other men or women, either might do so ad lib unless the other objected.

When it came to the last question, concerning the use of a wife's money by a husband, the reply was that he was incompetent to answer it because he, being poor, would not on any account marry a rich wife, and he knew that such a condition would surely render the husband subservient to the wife, and he had no fancy for any such serfdom.

Miss Ashurst, who had started out with one idea, became captivated with another. She had intended to be guided as to the suitor she should accept by the good, hard sense indicated in the replies of the applicant. The man showing the most depth of thought and feeling in his replies would be favored. But she was much staggered by Mr. Clendenin's examination paper, especially by his reply to her last question, in which he declared that he would not be tied to any rich woman. What staggered her was a desire that sprang up in her breast to make him eat his words.

And so it was that this human attribute which is in both men and women came up to interfere with Miss Ashurst's very sound and practical way of choosing a husband. She resolved to win—if she could—the man who would likely give her the most trouble, for, with his views concerning a poor man married to a rich wife, constant friction was to be expected.

As to how Miss Ashurst won a husband despite his objections to marrying money and how it all turned out after their marriage there is no room here. Mr. Clendenin meant what he said in objecting to be tied to a wife's fortune, and Miss Ashurst, after all, was obliged to call in the little god to get him. After getting him she found him an excellent manager for her estate and paid no attention to it herself.

Was It Supernatural or a Scientific Novelty?

(By F. A. Mitchel)

Mary Richards sat in the dock house working her typewriter. A northeaster was blowing in from the ocean, and the waves as they rolled under the dock shook the structure built on it. There was a telephone instrument screwed against the wall, and suddenly there came a sharp ring. Whether the electric current was stronger than usual or that Mary was influenced by the terror of the storm, the bell seemed to call her to hear some bad news. She hurried to the instrument and, unhooking the receiver, held it to her ear.

"Mary," came the voice of John Talbot, to whom Mary was betrothed and who she supposed was coming up from Florida in a coast steamer of which he was third mate, "take up a board in the northwest corner of my room at home."

There was a click, and Mary knew that communication was shut off. She waited for it to be renewed, then rattled the hook that held the receiver, called, did everything she could think of to attract attention, but could not break the silence. At last, impressed by a feeling of awe, she hung up the receiver and, trembling, returned to her seat.

The George Brewster, in which John Talbot was coming north, was not due to arrive till the next day. Had she put into some port on the coast below? She might have done so to avoid the storm, for she was an old vessel and not considered very seaworthy. But what did this fragmentary message mean? "Take up a board in the northwest corner of my room at home." Mary and John were to be married soon after his return from this voyage. Could the message have anything to do with the preparations that were being made for the wedding?

The next morning news was published of the loss of the George Brewster and all on board. She had floundered at sea off Cape Hatteras. Wreckage had been washed ashore identifying her.

Mary Richards when she began to recover from the shock of her loss remembered her telephone message. How had her betrothed been able to communicate with her while at sea? There was no wireless telegraph apparatus on the Brewster by which he could communicate with the shore. Besides the voice she had heard was his, and he addressed her direct.

John Talbot's mother had died when he was a little boy, and his father had married a woman who had made life miserable for her husband and her stepson. As soon as John was old enough to earn any money she insisted that he should go to work and forced him to bring all he earned to her. This continued till he grew to manhood, when he began to retain his earnings. He had told Mary that he had accumulated several thousand dollars and before leaving on his first voyage had taken the precaution to make a will leaving it to her. But he had not told her where the will or the property was to be found.

Mrs. Talbot was aware that John was saving money, and as soon as news came of his death at sea she began to hunt for it, or, rather, evidence of it. She believed that John had invested his savings in stocks or bonds and that he had kept his securities at home instead of placing them in a safety deposit company; but, although she hunted high and low for anything that would represent money, she found nothing.

Mary for a long while was so crushed by her loss that she thought nothing of the matter of her lover's possessions. One day she met Mrs. Talbot, who said to her with a view to learning something about the missing property:

"I suppose John turned over his savings to you before he went to sea the last time."

Mary replied that he had not done so, and that was all that was said on the subject between them. But Mrs. Talbot's words and manner set Mary to thinking. In this connection she remembered the telephone message—"Take up a board in the northwest corner of my room at home."

Wherever the message had come from, whether transmitted by natural or supernatural means, Mary now connected it with the missing property. After deliberation she concluded to go to a lawyer and ask his advice as to what to do. He agreed to send some one to the Talbot house, watch an opportunity to take up without Mrs. Talbot's knowledge the board in the floor in the northwest corner of John's room. This du was assigned a detective, who e ployed a confederate to decoy stepmother away while the detect went into the room designated removed the board.

One morning Mary received a m sage from her attorney to call at h office, and on arriving there showed her a will executed by J. Talbot, leaving all his property her, and handed her bonds the int est on which was sufficient to m her annual necessities.

The story Mary told has been subject of much thought among s entists, especially those who working on new lines of transmi ting the human voice without a m terial conductor. Some of them b lieve that John Talbot hit upon natural law as yet unrevealed to th world. The physical research pe ple believe that the message was by what we call supernatural mea

RAISED PHLEGM AND BLOOD.

Never neglect what at first seems to be but a slight cold. You think perhaps you are strong enough to fight it off, but colds are not so easily fought off in this northern climate, and if they are not attended to at once will sooner or later develop into some serious lung trouble such as bronchitis, pneumonia, and perhaps that dreadful disease, consumption.

Miss Kaye McDonald, Sydney Mines, N.S., writes: "Last winter I contracted a severe cold, and it settled on my lungs. I would cough and raise phlegm and blood. I had the cough for a month, and had medicine from the doctor, but it did not seem to do me any good. I really thought I had consumption.

My friends advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which I did, and it gave me great relief. I am very glad I used "Dr. Wood's," and would recommend it to every one."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's," when you ask for it as there are a number of imitations on the market, which some dealers may try to palm off on you as the genuine.

See that it is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees is the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

Many Women Suffer
From Pains in the Back

When the back begins to ache it is a sure sign that there is something radically wrong with the kidneys.

What you want is a kidney medicine. Doan's Kidney Pills are not a cure-all but a medicine for the kidneys only.

Mrs. J. Melanson, Plympton, N.S., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial, telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me. For years I had suffered so with my kidneys I could hardly do my housework. I used several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief. I have used five boxes and to-day I feel like a new woman. I cannot recommend them too highly."

Doan's Kidney Pills bear the trade mark of a Maple Leaf and are put up in an oblong grey box. See that you get "Doan's" when you ask for them.

Price 50c. a box, 3 for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

FARM AND GARDEN

NEW INSECT ENEMY OF THE PEACH.

An insect destructive to the peach and kindred fruits, believed to be new in the United States, has been discovered by entomologists of the United States Department of Agriculture in the District of Columbia and its environs. This insect, which in its adult form is a brownish moth and in its larval stage a small white and pink caterpillar, attacks both the tender shoots and fruit, causing serious losses.

Because of the habits of the worm, the usual control methods, such as spraying with certain arsenates, will probably not be effective. The smooth young shoots, owing to their rapid growth, are protected by the poison solution for only a very short time after the spray is applied, and hence it is almost impossible to poison them. Entomologists who have been investigating the pest will continue to study it in the hope of developing control measures.

The insect, known to science as Laspeyresia molesta, is believed to have been introduced from Japan. So far as known, it has not been found in America other than in the District of Columbia and in adjoining territory in Maryland and Virginia. The specialists are desirous of knowing if the insect has attacked peach, plum or cherry trees elsewhere in the United States.

The presence of the insect can best be determined in most cases by the nature of its injury to peach trees. It bores into practically every tender twig and causes new shoots to push out from lateral buds. These are attacked in turn, the abnormal stimulation of lateral growth producing a much branched and bushy plant. A copious flow of gum from the twig ends often follows the attacks of the caterpillars.

In attacking fruit the young caterpillars generally eat through the skin at or near the point of attachment of the fruit stem. The larva, as it grows, makes its way to the pit, where it feeds on the flesh, which soon becomes much discolored and more or less slimy. Larvae entering at the side of the fruit are more likely to eat out pockets or cavities in the flesh.

The full grown caterpillar spins a whitish silk cocoon in which to pupate. Moths emerge in the spring for egg laying by the time the shoots are well out.

CHEMISTRY AND AGRICULTURE.

In the annual report of the division of chemistry Dominion Experimental Farm, for the year ending March 31, 1916, prepared by Frank T. Shutt, M. A., D. Sc., Dominion chemist, and recently issued by the Dominion Department of Agriculture, considerable attention is devoted to the study of the subject of "Sugar Beets for Factory Purposes."

In this report, Prof. Shutt states that this "investigation carried on for a number of years, has conclusively shown that beets of excellent quality for sugar extraction can be grown in many widely distant portions of the Dominion." Among the factors to be considered in sugar beet growing are the quality of the beet, labor, with its availability and cost. Considerable space is also given to results of investigations carried on to ascertain the relative value of field roots. The results of these point out clearly that care must be exercised in selecting the variety or varieties of field roots grown. In the analysis of some 26 varieties of mangels the richest root contained 13 per cent. dry matter and 6.66 per cent. sugar, while the poorest contained 7.32 per cent dry matter and 2.86 per cent. sugar. These great and important differences represent real differences in feeding values. The same is true with turnips, analysis showing that between the richest and poorest of some 32 varieties there existed a difference of 4.53 per cent. dry matter, which, assuming that the feeding value is measured by the percentage of dry matter, means that 2,000 lbs. of the best variety are equivalent to 2,560 lbs. of the poorest. Further investigations were carried on with regard to fodders and feeding stuffs, and a large number of fertilizing materials were analyzed during the year. The report also contains the result of investigational work with fertilizers conducted by Supervisor B. Leslie Emslie, on the experimental stations at Fredericton, N. B., and Kentville, N. S. This report, which contains much valuable information, can be obtained on application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

TO TEST YOUR OWN SEED.

In the seed laboratory grain is tested to determine the percentage of vital seeds by placing one hundred kernels between blotters, keeping them at a suitable temperature and supplied with the proper amount of moisture in special germinating chambers. The results of such a test show what proportion of the seeds are vital, but a more accurate idea of the value of the grain for seed could be gained from a soil test. Such tests are not practicable in a laboratory, where thousands of samples are under test at one time.

Anyone can test seed for himself by putting one hundred seeds taken "just as they come" from the grain he wishes to test, in soil in a flower pot, box or other convenient receptacle, and keeping it moistened, but not wet, in some place where it will not be too warm in the daytime and where it will be cooler, but will not freeze, at night; the alternation of temperature favors germination. By noticing the number of plants produced, whether they come up quickly and are strong or weak, one can determine the suitability of the grain for seeding purposes more accurately than from the results of a test which he does not see. If seed that is known to be of strong vitality can be planted under exactly the same conditions as the seed whose vitality is being determined, the test will be more valuable.

Cleaning grain over a good fanning mill to remove from one third to one-half of the bulk, including all the light, shrunken and immature seeds, will greatly improve its quality as seed.—Seed Branch, Ottawa.

NOTES.

If every tree planter would remember that there is a substitute for cultivation, and that if he finds himself too busy to devote any time to his trees through the growing season he can employ with very good results a much shorter method, the general average loss might be much diminished. This substitute for cultivation is mulching, which merely consists in throwing around the tree for a diameter of four feet, or two feet out from the stem, a layer of stable manure or litter of some kind, and keep enough to prevent grass and weed growth. Straw, corn-stalks, leaves, will answer very well, but stable manure is much the best because of its fertilizing properties. By keeping a mulch of this kind constantly renewed, as fast as it decays, a tree may be brought to bearing size in fine condition.

The loss each year in young pigs is much greater than it should be, and much greater than it would be if the proper care were taken of the sows before farrowing and while the pigs are young. Too often little or no attention is given to the sow before she is to farrow. Sometimes even shelter is neglected. Then if a heavy rain and cool night finds the young pigs without protection several of them may die.

Constant care is one of the secrets of success in the breeding or feeding of stock of all kinds. It is only the man who likes work of this kind who will make any real success in it.

The results of ten-year experiments on 23 fields in Missouri show an average return of $5.60 from applying a ton of ground limestone once in a corn, oats, wheat, clover rotation. The largest return was secured on clover, second on corn, and lowest of all on wheat. These tests seem to show that $3 a ton is the highest price that a man can usually afford to pay for ground limestone for this purpose. On a sour soil, where lime is absolutely necessary and makes the difference between a clover failure and a good stand, the lime has a still higher money value. About 1,200 pounds of lump lime, or 1,600 pounds of water slacked lime, furnish the equivalent of 2,000 pounds of ground lime-stone for this purpose, but the ground limestone is much more economical to use. It should be applied at the rate of two tons per acre under the average conditions of these tests, but, of course, this depends largely on the sourness of the land.

FRETFUL BABIES

Mrs. John M. Weaver, Blissfield, N. B., writes: "I can speak very highly of Baby's Own Tablets. I have used them for my children and find they are the best medicine a mother can give her little ones. I would strongly recommend them to all mothers who have fretful babies." The Tablets regulate the bowels and stomach; break up colds and simple fevers; expel worms; cure vomiting and indigestion, and make teething easy. They are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HEROES NOT DEAD.

Many Believe Lost Celebrities Are Still On Earth.

A well-known London clergyman told a writer in London Answers the other day that he had discovered among his parishioners an unshakable belief in a rumor that Lord Kitchener was still alive, and that the report of his tragic end was a Government ruse to hoodwink the enemy.

The story seems to have originated in the minds of some of our Indian troops, who steadfastly refuse to believe that their beloved white chief had found a watery grave, and who are convinced that when the signal to march into Berlin is given, the great soldier we all revere will appear again at their head.

It would seem that seldom does a great man die prematurely without the story that he is still alive securing a firm hold upon the popular mind.

All over these islands are to be found people who refuse to accept the statement that another gallant hero, General Gordon, breathed his last under Arab spear-thrusts at Khartoum.

They insist that he still lives—somewhere in the heart of the Soudan—the life of a sheik commanding a wandering tribe, and that in his own good time he will reveal his identity to the world he has shunned so long.

Another fine fighter, Sir Henry Havelock-Allan, will never get a burial certificate from his numerous admirers at Tyneside. The canny Northcountrymen decline to believe that he died in 1897. He will turn up again when it suits his purpose, they assert with emphasis, and it is a wise policy to agree, with inward reservations, if any.

Charles Stewart Parnell, "the uncrowned king of Ireland," is similarly immortal. In almost any part of "the distressful isle" you will find champions of the once great parliamentarian who cling to this belief with a faith that is almost pathetic. Some day Ireland is "coming to her own again," they say, and their brilliant patriot and leader will be found at the head of Irish affairs when that day yawns. Nor is the belief confined entirely to the Land of the Shamrock.

The writer remembers chatting with a London 'bus-conductor, who seriously informed him that the "Mad Mullah," who was contesting British rule in Egypt at about that time, was none other than Parnell.

In certain rural parts of England the celebrated "Tichborne claimant" still lives, a deeply-wronged man, cheated out of his inheritance, and his backers are happy in the thought that their idol is merely waiting for the death of the present holder to take possession of the estate for which he fought, long years ago, so strenuously.

Such a hold has this obsession upon the rustic mind in the more remote parts of the country that an appeal for funds to prosecute afresh the claimant's "rights" has, more than once since this notorious person's demise, found an instant response.

General Hector Macdonald, who died in peculiarly unhappy circumstances in Paris soon after the South African War, still lives, in every sense of the word, to his countless friends and admirers in Scotland and about the Border.

Not only is he reported to be pursuing his old profession, but the extraordinary preparedness of the Chinese army to-day is attributed to "Fighting Mac's" genius, and there are men north of the Tweed who are prepared to swear that they have seen their old comrade-in-arms in the flesh at the head of the manoeuvring troops near Peking.

Sometimes the notorious malefactor makes a similar appeal to the popular fancy. Go to the West Riding of Yorkshire, for instance, and you will find men, and women, too, who ridicule the idea that Charles Peace, burglar and murderer, ever suffered the last dread penalty at the hands of outraged justice. Someone else, they will tell you darkly, was hanged in his stead, and Charles, with an unquenchable hatred against society at large, still wreaks vengeance on his fellow-men.

He, the Yorkshireman avers, was the mysterious perpetrator of the thrilling Whitechapel horrors; at least one great tunnel tragedy lies at his door, and, in short, any crime that baffles Scotland Yard to-day is credited to the musical cracksman.

THE POULTRY WORLD

(POULTRY HOUSE VENTILATION.)

At this season of the year the question of poultry house ventilation confronts poultrymen.

The King system of ventilation seems to be entirely satisfactory in a cow barn, but in a poultry house the demand for fresh air is not so much greater and the heat given off by the birds is so much less that the same principle does not seem to apply. The hen does not give off body moisture by means of perspiration or does she give off moisture by means of urine, consequently the breath, which is the only means left, must be heavily saturated. The removal of this moisture laden, foul, cold air presents a very perplexing problem.

Houses of all kinds have been built and tried out, from the tight, glass front or greenhouse type to the extreme, open front, or so-called fresh air house.

At the present time poultry authorities consider that a combination of glass and cloth give the best results. Successful houses may be of many different types, and different ventilating systems may be used, provided a few definite principles are followed.

The roof of the house should be as low as caring for the birds will permit, thus reducing the number of cubic feet of air space a bird. Low houses are warmer, and more of the front may be left open.

All open or cloth fronts should be located on the south side of the house and should be well up from the floor. Low openings allow cold winds to blow in on the floor of the house.

Glass windows, if used, should be placed at either end of a colony house and at either end or below the open space in each section of a long house. Either windows or open front should be so located that the sun may reach every part of the interior of the house at some time during the day.

Each section in a long house should be divided by a cloth curtain or tight board partition. Long houses without wind breaks are cold and draughty.

Cloth curtains or windows on the south side of the house should not be entirely closed except in very severe weather, and then only when the curtains are very thin. A curtain which slides up from the bottom on the outside of the house is very desirable, as it may be left part way down and still keep out a driving storm. Houses should be well aired out each day, even though the curtains may be open only a short time.

When frost collects on any part of the interior of the house, more ventilation is needed. A good test for moisture can be made by trying to blow dust from the sill or other woodwork. If the dust can be blown around, the house is dry, if not, more ventilation is needed. A dry wall and roof give considerable protection against cold, but a damp, frosty wall gives absolutely none, even though it may be practically air tight.

Always protect poultry from wind and storm, but give them enough fresh air to remove all moisture from the houses.—Roy E. Jones in New York Sun.

SOME TIPS TO GET EGGS.

"Beginners in poultry-keeping often wonder why some hens will lay steadily when eggs are worth but ten cents a dozen and lay only an occasional egg or loaf continually when eggs are 35 cents a dozen," says Farm and Fireside. "I used to blame the hen, but now I know it isn't her fault.

"I have found that the time of year that the hens lay best is in the spring when there is plenty of green feed and an abundance of exercise. By feeding green products in the winter and compelling them to keep in action I can best imitate nature and bring spring conditions to my hens. The question is, does it pay? It pays me.

"Cabbage and any of the beet family are green feeds which I used profitably to feed my chickens in the winter. Green cured alfalfa steamed or boiled, sprouted oats, or pumpkins have also been profitable green feeds for my chickens."

NOTES.

Vegetables should form a good part of the diet for poultry throughout the entire year.

Equal parts of corn, wheat and oats by weight makes a good scatter feed.

Sprouted oats is one of the most productive egg foods for winter feeding.

Plenty of exercise, good food and dry air are necessary for winter eggs.

It has been found that a few thorough applications of crude petroleum to the interior of poultry houses will destroy completely the common red mite infesting chickens.

Eggs of inferior market quality, as to size, shape and color, should not be used for hatching because the pullets hatched from them may lay the same kind of eggs.

Leghorns are light birds and fly high. On this account it is difficult to keep them confined. On places where the chickens are to be confined heavier birds will be more satisfactory, besides when a fowl is wanted for the table the heavier birds supply the most meat.

The utility advocates can all cry more utility regardless of all else, but the fact remains that the poultry-breeder with utility coupled with good standard requirements is the one that will add the best balance to his ledger. The buying public are fast becoming educated along these lines.

Sciatica Vanishes Instantly If Nerviline Is Used

CAN YOU BEAT THIS CASE?

No ordinary liniment will even relieve Sciatica. Nothing but the most powerful kind of a remedy can penetrate through the tissues and finally reach the Sciatic Nerve. You can always depend on the old-time "Nerviline." Nothing made to-day is as good for Sciatica as Nerviline was when first produced about forty years ago. All this time the same old "Nerviline" has been curing sciatica, lumbago, Rheumatism, and is considered to be without an equal in relieving pain or soreness anywhere. "Nerviline couldn't be made stronger or better," writes James E. Edwards. "The way it cures Sciatica is to me simply a miracle. For years I suffered frightfully. I ruined my stomach with internal dosing. I rubbed in gallons of oils and liniments—none were strong enough. One good rubbing with Nerviline relieved. I kept on rubbing and shortly was cured. My father cured rheumatism in his right arm and shoulder with Nerviline, and my mother cured herself of chronic lumbago with Nerviline. Our family simply swears by Nerviline and we are never without it in our home. We find that for external pain, for coughs, colds, earache, such minor ills it is a veritable family physician. 25 cents at all dealers.

The Soldier and the White Plague

A very interesting sketch by a soldier of what happens in a military sanatorium for tuberculosis has just been published by the Military Hospitals Commission. Rest, unlimited fresh air, and proper feeding of course play a large part in the treatment organized by the Military Hospitals Commission; but exercise, carefully graduated, and interesting occupations are also employed with most valuable results in restoring the patient to health and energy of body and mind.

Of the [illegible] invalided soldiers now being cared for by the Commission in Canada, 311 are suffering from tuberculosis, besides 54 remaining in English sanatoria.

All these 66 men were passed by medical officers as sound in wind and limb at the time of enlistment. Some of them, doubtless, in their eagerness to serve at the front, concealed facts which would have aroused the doctor's suspicions. Others did not know that their lungs were affected. It is often difficult to detect the trouble in the early stages.

In [illegible] of the 66, the disease was discovered before the men had a chance to go overseas. That is, it developed under no greater hardship than that of camp life—no more severe than the experience of a hunting excursion in the woods, which so many people undertake as a holiday recreation.

What does it mean, this discovery of 66 "consumptives" even among the picked men who should be above the average in health and strength?

It means this. The seeds of the disease have been sown in thousands of apparently healthy folk, and simply lie quiet till some new circumstance gives them a chance to spring up and attack the body infected by them. Then they give the man a fight for his life.

If there is one thing certain, it is that the disease can be stamped out.

This can only be done by combining prevention with cure.

Most of consumptives can be cured, if the disease has not been allowed to get very far. And the example set by the thorough treatment now given to tuberculous soldiers should be followed in dealing with all others attacked by the disease.

[illegible]

Those who have the disease can and must be taught how to avoid giving it to others. [illegible]

Good ventilation, sunlight, and good food thoroughly masticated and digested—with these on our side we can defy the enemy.

Now, more than ever before, it is urgently necessary to increase the health and efficiency of every Canadian. [illegible]

Governments, municipal authorities, anti-tuberculosis leagues, and all of us as private citizens, should act more energetically than ever, and [illegible] the efficiency of the methods used.

A little handbook entitled "Fighting Tuberculosis," by Lieut. [illegible] C.A.M.C., [illegible] at Ste. Agathe, has just been published by the Military Hospitals Commission for the soldiers concerned. Similar pamphlets have been got out by certain local organizations and issued [illegible].

The seeds of safety in such publications should be spread as widely and cultivated as actively as the seeds of danger are now being spread and cultivated by our neglect.

OPEN LETTER TO THE WOMEN OF CANADA FROM LADY GWENDOLEN GUINNESS

Captain the Hon. Rupert Guinness, A.D.C., C.B., C.M.G., R.N.V.R., Senior Officer of the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserve, and his wife, Lady Gwendolen Guinness sailed a few weeks ago for England after having spoken in almost every town of any size in Canada from Sydney and Halifax on the Atlantic, to Vancouver and Victoria on the Pacific.

Their aim was to organize Committees to secure recruits for the Overseas Division of the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve, and the work which they launched and which was unreservedly helped along by the Hon. Mr. Hazen for the Canadian Government, has already had splendid results, and hundreds of good recruits have joined the Navy under the auspices of the R. N. C. V. R.

Before leaving, The Lady Gwendolen made arrangements to have a specially designed souvenir pendant distributed through the various recruiting centres to the Mothers or Wives or Sweethearts whose influence had helped to secure recruits.

This pendant is a very pretty one of silver—gilt—and bears the motto "I helped to serve."

The badge is now, we are informed, being distributed by the Committees, and will doubtless be worn by many women as a badge of honor, as well as a souvenir of their loved ones. The illustration gives some idea of its general appearance, and the following is the open letter written by her Ladyship:

The Pendant Offered by Lady Gwendolen Guinness.

To the Women of Canada:

In a journey throughout the Provinces of Canada, from Atlantic to Pacific, I have had the opportunity of personally witnessing the splendid spirit and untiring work of patriotic women everywhere in the Dominion.

I am convinced that here, as in Great Britain the debt which is owed by the Women of the Empire to our Navy is not forgotten.

The iron hand of Naval Dominion alone shields us from the ruthlessness of an enemy who has not scrupled to make war on the helpless and defenceless. The power of the Navy protects our loved ones on their journey to the battlefields, and preserves our homes in safety and prosperity. Recognizing this debt, I am sure that every Canadian woman will do her utmost to secure that support for Naval defence which has long been asked for from Canada.

I am asking every woman who obtains a recruit for the Overseas Division of the Royal Naval Canadian Volunteer Reserve to accept a small silver badge, as a souvenir of her effort and sacrifice towards upholding the Cause of Humanity and Civilization, and bringing the struggle in which we are all engaged to a speedy and a triumphant issue.

(Signed) GWENDOLEN GUINNESS.

The new menace of unrestricted [illegible] piracy adds further interest to the campaign for Naval Recruits and enforces the necessity of increasing naval effort, and it is hoped that a still more generous response will be given to the Naval Recruiting Committees' Call.

In the meantime, we feel we voice the feelings of many of our readers in extending our thanks to the Lady Gwendolen for the happy thought her gift embodies and to Captain Guinness and herself for their tireless exertions on behalf of the Cause.

Spanking Doesn't Cure!

Don't think children can be cured of bed-wetting by spanking them. The trouble is constitutional, the child cannot help it. I will send FREE to any mother my successful home treatment, with full instructions. If your children trouble you in this way, send no money, but write me to-day. My treatment is highly recommended to adults troubled with urine difficulties by day or night. Address

Removing White Spots.

Probably you will find white rings on some of your varnished tables, left by vases that were not carefully wiped free from water. These need careful treatment if they are to be removed without injury to the surface of the table. Have ready three flannel cloths, one moistened with linseed oil, one with alcohol, and one with furniture polish. Rub briskly with the oil, then with the alcohol, being careful not to use enough to take off the varnish, and then apply the furniture polish last of all. The spot will disappear entirely.

SERVICE TO ALASKA

C. P. R. Steamer Will Make Three Trips for Tourists.

As was the case during the past season, the C. P. R. steamship Princess Charlotte, will make three round trips in the Alaska tourist service next year, which become effective June 5, 1917.

The list of tourist sailings between Victoria, Vancouver and Skagway, which has just been announced by the B. C. Coast Service, provides for three round trip sailings for the Princess Charlotte, seven for the Princess Alice and seven for the Princess Sophia, making 17 round trip sailings all told for the summer season of 1917.

The advent of the palatial steamship Princess Charlotte to the Alaskan tourist trade last summer was such a pronounced success that the company had no alternative but to arrange for her return to the northern run next year, when it is expected tourist travel north will break all records. The schedule has been arranged earlier with a view to giving plenty of time for the arrangement of advance bookings.

The company proposes making a feature of this delightful travel route and specially illustrated and descriptive literature is being prepared for distribution all over the continent. The accommodation on the Princess Charlotte will be largely reserved for parties booking in the east. A large number of inquiries regarding the northern tours have already been made in the east by parties who were unable to take the trip last summer.

"Mrs. Flubdub says she is going to Palm Beach for a rest."

"How inconsistent people are. Just as much gayety going on there as anywhere."

A POPULAR IDOL.
(Judge.)

Willie Willis—What's a popular idol, pa?

Papa Willis—It's the fellow who is in between the fellow he has just licked and the fellow who is going to lick him.

NOT TOO STRICTLY.
(Washington Star.)

"I suppose you built up your colossal fortune by attending strictly to your own business?"

"Yes," replied Mr. Dustin Stax. "But I made it my business to keep informed as to what the other people were doing."

GENEOLOGICAL.
(Judge.)

His Better Half—Dearie, what do you call those who come after you?

He—Duns, drat 'em!

THE HUBBY!
(Boston Transcript.)

Edith—I suppose a lot of men will be made miserable when I marry.

Marie—Why, how many men are you going to marry?

EARLY INFORMATION.
(Washington Star.)

"It's a great thing for a man to be well informed."

"Sometimes," replied Mr. Dustin Stax. "But there isn't so much use of it unless you get the information well in advance."

A SURE PROOF.
(Puck)

What could we give her to make the [illegible] realize that money means nothing to us?

"How about a dozen egg-cups?"

STIRRING TIMES.
(Buffalo Express)

"I've had some stirring times myself," said the wag, after he'd listened to tales of lion-hunting and gold-prospecting.

"Yes?" queried one of an interesting throng.

"Yes, I worked at a soda fountain for a time in my youth and every day or so I had to keep the chocolate from boiling over."

WILLIE'S MISFORTUNE.
(Boston Transcript)

Mrs. Blank—I suppose, Willie you are glad that spanking has gone out of fashion.

Willie—Huh! It always takes my folks a couple of years to catch up with the styles.

ALL HE COULD HOLD.
(Washington Star)

"Has your boy Josh completed his education?"

"I reckon so," replied Farmer Corntossel. "I don't say that he's got all he needs, but I suspect he's got about all he's able to hold."

DIFFERENT.
(Baltimore American)

"I heard a woman—she was young, too, and did not look hardened—begging earnestly, pleadingly, for one more chance, and she could not find one to give it to her."

"Was she a first offender?"

"No, she was a charity worker at a church bazaar raffle."

SAME OLD ONES.
(Life)

Hokus—Did you make any new resolutions this year?

Pokus—No, just the same old ones.

INDIGNANT AUNTY.
(Baltimore American)

"Do you assimilate your food, aunty?"

"No, I doesn't, sah. I pays cash down fo' it."

BRAIN TROUBLE.
(Boston Transcript)

"Cholly has brain trouble."

"Is that so? What kind?"

"It troubles him to think."

HELD UP.
(Baltimore American)

"I was held up in this city before I had been here a day."

"Didn't you get a chance to cry out?"

[illegible]

PUDDIFOOT'S ERROR
(Puck)

Jones—What is it that Puddifoot never seems to get any further?

Hobbs—I think it must be because he's following the rules for success laid down by multimillionaires.

JUST AS GOOD, AT TIMES.
(Washington Star)

"Truth is mighty," exclaimed the idealist.

"Yes," replied Dustin Stax. "But a well-organized rumor will answer just as well if you want to get the stock market going."

THE PARROT'S VOCABULARY.
(Yonkers Statesman)

Yeast—I see a Massachusetts man has a parrot which has a vocabulary of over [illegible] words.

Crimsonbeak—I didn't know there were that many swear-words in existence.

BOSTONESE.
(Baltimore American)

[illegible] a perambulating [illegible] circumnavigating his itinerary from [illegible] of America?"

"He meant he was a tramp beating his way from Boston."

TWOBBLE'S DOUBT.
(Birmingham Age-Herald)

"Has your daughter finished her musical education?"

"I suppose so," answered Mr. Twobble, "but sometimes when she is playing one of those classical pieces it seems to me that she is starting to learn all over again."

MILDMAY

The two Schnurr boys who were taken to Walkerton last week on a charge of theft of money were allowed to go on suspended sentence on Monday and have appeared in our midst again.

There was a good crowd in the local skating rink on Saturday evening.

Mrs. Rela Schwalm has opened up Millinery parlours in the Royal Hotel block.

Miss Mildred Pfohl, teacher at S. S. No. 13, spent the week-end with Mary Ulrich.

Mr. John Northgraves principal of Neustadt public school was in town on Saturday.

A number of our youthful sports attended a dance in the country south of Mildmay and report a long early morning of it and of course a good time. They got home around 6 a. m. Saturday.

Mr. Ed. Kalbfleisch made several business trips to Walkerton both last and this week. He expects a big season's business in Ford autos this year.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Helwig and daughter Celeste made a business trip to Toronto last week.

A large number of our residents are storing away a supply of ice. This will certainly help to keep cool during those sizzling July days to come.

KINLOSS

We see the people are taking advantage of the good weather, getting out their next year's supply of wood.

The Red Cross Society of our village held a very successful meeting on Saturday and the usual supper in the evening. We were pleased to have some of the boys from the neighbouring villages of Kingarf, Bervie and Riversdale with us. Come again boys and bring some others with you or you will be too late to have your name on the Red Cross quilt.

Mr. Reg Colwell, and Will Smith who have been spending the winter at their homes here left for the West accompanied by Mr. Fred Moulton of Kingarf.

We are pleased to see Abb out again after his recent attack of mumps and looking none the worse.

Mr. Sam Nesbitt and his friend, Mr. Scott spent a pleasant evening on Mr. Hewitt's ice last week.

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Kirktown, "Spruce Lawn", Glamis, was the scene of a pretty wedding on Tuesday evening, Feb. 27th, when their third eldest daughter, Martha Florence, was united in matrimony to Mr. Wilbert Woods of Langham, Sask, Rev. E. A. De Mille officiating. The bride looking charming in a gown of cream satin and embroidered net. After the ceremony and congratulations were over the bridal party and guests numbering about 50 partook of a sumptuous repast. The happy couple left on Wednesday morning for a short honeymoon to Markdale, and other points. They will leave shortly for their new home at Langham, Sask. Their many friends join heartily in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Woods much joy and happiness.

FORMOSA

Mrs. John Steffler received the following letter recently from a Canadian Tommy in the Field:—Just a few odd lines to thank you for a pair of socks which I was lucky enough to get a day or so ago, also your note and I must say your town is to be congratulated on the good work you have done for us over here. I assure you it makes us feel good to know our folks at home are looking after us. Socks come in pretty handy when its wet. At present the weather is like our own Canadian weather, that is, we have snow and it is fairly cold at the present time. I will put my name and number on here as we are not allowed to put it at the end, so if you would care to write I would be only too glad to get it. A. J. Nicholson, No. 304475, 33rd. Batt. C. F. A, British Army P. O, London, Eng. We like our mail over here and of course the more there is the better we feel. I came from Toronto, and believe me sometimes I think there is no such place on the map, but of course this game cannot last forever, can it? and it's sure that some of us will be lucky enough to get home. I must close now. Again thanking you for the socks.

Nurse Goes To Front

Miss Marion Hueghan, daughter of Mr. R. E. Hueghan, and a graduate nurse of Stratford Hospital, received word from Ottawa on Monday of her appointment to go to the Front. Miss Hueghan is expected here Wednesday night on a short visit to her father before leaving for Montreal.

Hydro Staff Busy

Hydro Engineers are reported to have examined the course of the Saugeen lately for suitable locations for auxiliary power plants. Three possible sites are said to have been located—Near Traynor's Bridge in Brant; at a point north of the 6th con. Brant; and also near Port Elgin.

Hanover Hot For Hydro

Hanover citizens held a public meeting last week to discuss Hydro and decided practically unanimously to go ahead and get Hydro as soon as possible. One of the manufacturers who spoke expressed the opinion that the cost of production would not come down again for five or six years. The citizens favor going right ahead in spite of present day conditions and putting Hanover on the Hydro map.

Narrow Escape

Mr. James Hyslop had a thrilling experience while driving home from Mr. John Whitehead's during the electrical storm Saturday night. A lightning bolt, resembling a great ball of fire, struck the road about a hundred feet ahead of his horse and burst. The animal was terrified, rose on its high legs and fell over in a heap, and did not recover for several minutes. Mr. Hyslop also felt some effect of the shock.

Chum Got One Too

Jack McGatity's friends will be interested to know that when Jack received the Military Medal for bravery under fire at the Somme on Sept. 11th his chum, Dan Dandenau of Hespeler who has frequently visited the McGatity home in Brant, likewise received the coveted medal for identical reasons. The gallant Dan went across with the 34th Battalion. His parents are well-known citizens of Hespeler.

Even Turnips Are Doing It

Turnips which used to be so cheap that the farmers couldn't afford the time to give them away, are rapidly approaching the luxury stage. Mr. John Ernest of Brant brought in two loads on Tuesday which brought him a shade over $70. Even at that price, which amounts to 45 cts. a bushel, they are a good deal cheaper than potatoes and other garden commodities.

DIED AT HIS POST

Leith Russell Was Working Gun At Full Speed When German Shell Exploded—Walkerton Comrades Pay A Feeling Tribute To His Worth

Reeve Robt. Russell received a comforting letter from two of Leith's Walkerton comrades on Thursday, telling how his son gamely met his death on the battlefield in France. The letter reads.—

Somewhere in France,
Feb. 18th, 1917.

Mr. Robt. Russell:—

Just a few words of sympathy from the boys of the battery in the death of your son, Leith. Leith had been with us since we left Walkerton, over a year ago now, joined the battery with us in England, and had been through many dangerous days on the firing line on the Ypres salient and on the battlefield of the Somme. Always game, he was in every raid and bombardment since we came to France and was considered one of the best and most reliable men in the battery. It was early in the morning of Feb. 13th, still quite dark, and a barrage was being fired on the German lines, while the boys of the front line were going over the top. But while Leith and his crew were working their guns at full speed, a shell exploded in their pit and killed them instantly. They never knew what happened them, death was instantaneous. The remains were carried out of the lines and interred in the Canadian cemetery some miles back. We lost good comrades that morning. They were good men but the fortunes of war were against them and they died at their post. Yours in sympathy, his comrades.

Called To Beamsville

At a special meeting of the Official Board of the Methodist Church a unanimous invitation was given to the Rev. T. R. Todd of Niagara Falls to become pastor here to succeed Rev. J. M. Haith who has accepted a call to Woodstock.—Beamsville Express.

Expect To Move Soon

Boys of the 160th write that they are back again at Witley Camp and expect to go to France before Easter. The Battalion had a visit lately from W. S. Gould, formerly County Clerk of Bruce who is in England. "Bill" was keen for a transfer to the 160th Batt'n, but the authorities would not permit it.

Former Walkerton Girl Weds

Mrs. Little of Brant, attended the wedding of her niece, Miss Bessie Burrell, near Markdale last Wednesday, March 7th. Miss Burrell is a graduate of Walkerton High School and is well and favourably known in Walkerton and Brant. Since leaving here she has taught school for nine years. The groom, Mr. James R. Baird is a Mount Forest man. The happy couple will make their home at Mount Forest.

Back In France

Reeve Robt. Russell had a letter on Tuesday from his son, Jim, stating that he was back in France again. He asked for the addresses of his brothers John and Leith, not having heard of Leith paying the supreme sacrifice on the Firing Line. Jim has already seen hard service at the Front. He spent eleven months there before the authorities sent him to Canada last Fall in charge of a party of invalides.

THREE WALKERTON BROTHERS IN KHAKI

Philip, Adam and Norman Denny
Soldier Sons of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Denny

FEW WALKERTON FAMILIES have done as well as Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Denny of this town, who have given three stalwart sons to help win the Empire's battles. Norman, who was the first of the brothers to reach the firing line, enlisted with the 34th Battalion and went to France with the 4th Batt'n 1st Can. Division. He has had three slight wounds, but never once in fourteen months did he miss a trip to the trenches. His brother Philip, also enlisted with the 34th Batt'n but was turned down owing to defective eyesight. He is now in England with the 160th. Before the war he served three years with the 32nd. Adam, who was Military Policeman while the 160th was quartered in Walkerton last year, is also with the Bruce Batt'n. The above photograph was taken at a reunion of the three brothers in England a few weeks ago when Norman was back to "Blighty" on ten days' leave.

Lutherans Extend Call

The Lutheran Congregation, who have been without a pastor since Rev. H. R. Mosig removed to New Hamburg at New Years, have decided to extend a call to Rev. H. Walbaum of Kennel, Sask., a former popular pastor of Elmwood Lutheran Church. If the reverend gentleman accepts, it is not expected that he will assume duty here until early summer.

New Houses Going Up

Buildings operations will be more active around here the coming Spring than they have been for several years. Mr. John Bilger is planning to erect a handsome brick residence on his property at the head of Gibson St. Contractor Alex Hass will put up a brick residence in the West Ward for sale or to rent. The firm of R. Truax & Son are preparing to erect three storey and a half brick residences on Gibson St. in the vicinity of the roller rink. Henry Hossfeld will make extensive alterations to his residence which will be veneered with red pressed brick.

Successful Box Social

The Box Social at Baird's School on Friday night was a fine success in every way. Over a hundred dollars was realized. Mr. Wes Abel acted as auctioneer and kept the bidding lively. The program which followed was good from first to last. Mr. Walter Findlay made a bright, snappy chairman. The program included singing by the Hopper brothers, recitations by Miss Eleanor McGatity and Miss Margaret Hossfeld; Highland Fling, Mary Spohn; instrumentals, Miss Connors; School Children's drill; and music by Miss Florence Norton. during the evening.

An Educative Talk

Rev. J. H. Dyke, Field Secretary of the Muskoka Free Hospital, gave an interesting talk illustrated by slides at the Town Hall Sunday night. X-ray photos showed the development of consumption in the lungs. The speaker pointed out that in seven cases out of ten the battle against tuberculosis is lost by the patient not consulting the family doctor in time. Two hundred and eighty-two patients are now receiving treatment at the Free Hospital and of those only 39 are able to pay anything towards their keep. The list of Walkerton subscribers to the Fund will be published in the local papers shortly.

Death Of Mrs. O'Hagan

Last Friday morning there passed away a much respected and well known woman near Chepstow, in the person of Mrs. Eugene O'Hagan widow of the late Eugene O'Hagan. Mrs. O'Hagan was the eldest daughter of Nicholas McEntee, and some forty-seven years ago was married to Eugene O'Hagan. She has lived with her family, four sons and four daughters, forty years in Greenock, and was known for her charity, kindness and benevolence. Her husband predeceased her twenty years ago and about two years ago she lost her eldest daughter, Mrs. A. Dietrich. The funeral, which was large, took place on Monday. Interment was in Chepstow.

A Double Tragedy

Mr. Hugh Birss, a former ex-Mayor of Walkerton, and his wife both passed away at their home at Brampton on Saturday morning under tragic circumstances. Mrs. Birss awoke in the morning to find her husband lying dead in bed. The shock was so great that she expired a few hours later. Particulars are meagre, the only word received being a short telephone message received by Mr. Robt. Goode on Saturday morning. Mr. and Mrs. Birss lived here for a number of years, the former conducting a boot and shoe business. He was highly respected in the town and filled the Mayor's chair for a term. On removing to Brampton, he became a director of the Williams Shoe Co. and has two sons travelling for the firm. Mr. Birss was 67 years of age. The funeral took place at Brampton on Monday.

Too Sick To Appear

Tony Zuber and his housekeeper, Mrs. Emma Helwig, were summoned to appear at Police Court on Friday to answer a charge of conspiracy to obtain money from two well-known citizens. The charge was laid several months ago when Zuber was tried and found guilty of writing a threatening letter, but owing to a technicality the conspiracy charge had to be laid over at that time. Zuber put in an appearance before Magistrate Tolton on Friday, but Mrs. Helwig sent a doctor's certificate stating that she was sick and unable to appear. Lawyer O. E. Klein, who is to appear for the two defendants was also absent owing to sickness. Crown Attorney Dixon appeared for the Crown. The magistrate adjourned for a week. Mrs. Helwig's interesting physical condition threatens to throw the wheels of justice out of gear. Because the if Magistrate should decide to send her and Zuber up for trial, they would be due for trial at the Spring Assizes in ten days. Zuber now wants the Town Council to have Mrs. Helwig sent to the Hospital at the town's expense. Mayor Johnston says that Zuber has means and should pay his own bills.

Coming Home On Furlough

Miss Winnifred Warren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Warren, who has been engaged as missionary in China for several years, sailed for home on furlough Saturday.

Stayed At His Post

Mr. N. Eidt had a telegram on Tuesday from Ottawa reporting that his son, Edward G., Eidt, was reported wounded on Feb 21st, but pluckily remained at his post. This is the third casualty reported in about a month among Walkerton boys of the Trench Mortar Battery to which Ed. belongs, the other two, Alvin Wilton and Leith Russell, being fatalities.

Death of John Bester

Mr. John Bester, an old resident of the Formosa neighborhood, passed away at the Bruce County Hospital on Thursday. He had been operated upon for cancer of the stomach some weeks ago. He is survived by a wife and grownup family who live in Michigan. The funeral took place on Friday, the remains being interred in the R. C. Cemetery.

Removing To Brantford

Mr. Wm. Pryne who has been engaged with Pletsch Bros. leaves next Monday for Brantford to take the position of head miller in the 200 bbl. plant of the Dominion Flour Mills Co. Mr. Pryne, who was one of the oldest and most highly respected business men of Brussels, came here a year and a half ago after his mill at Brussels had been destroyed by fire. In the removal of Mr. and Mrs. Pryne and Miss Pryne Walkerton loses good citizens. Miss Pryne has been a highly valued member of the Methodist choir and has generously assisted with her beautiful voice at patriotic entertainments or whenever opportunity offered to help a good cause.

Les. Huether Here

Leslie Huether B. A., son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Huether, now of Guelph, was up from Toronto last week for a couple of days, calling on old friends who are legion in this town, before leaving for Overseas. Les has been acting as Instructor in connection with the University Company in Toronto since he enlisted last April and has had a part in training no less than five drafts for Overseas. He has now secured a commission in the British Naval Air Service and leaves for England next week. On Friday night the local branch of the Bruce Preparedness League took advantage of his presence in town to present him with a five-dollar gold piece on behalf of the Town of Walkerton and to wish him Godspeed and a safe return.

Brant Family Bereaved

Deep sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. John Scanlon of Beaver Glen Farm, Brant, in the death of their eldest son, John Francis Scanlon, which occurred in Toronto on Sunday afternoon. Deceased, who was a bright young man of 31 years, had been suffering for some time from tubercular trouble of the spine and since October last, his condition had been serious. The deceased got his earlier schooling at Walkerton and and Formosa Separate Schools and later attended St. Michael's College, Toronto, where he graduated in 1909. He then took a business course and since then had been employed successively as stenographer and bookkeeper at O'Keefe's Brewing Co. in Toronto. Besides his sorrowing parents, he is mourned by two brothers and one sister: James V. of Brantford, Peter at home and Mrs. W. Merchant of Dunkeld. The funeral took place on Wednesday morning. Interment being made in the Formosa Cemetery.

Memorial Service

Rev. R. Perdue preached an impressive sermon at St. Thomas Church Sunday night in memory of Private Adam Leith Russell, the latest of Walkerton's soldier-heroes to fall in action. The church was completely filled, citizens of every denomination being present. "For what purpose is this waste" was his text, the words of Judas Iscariot, when Mary, the sister of Lazarus, broke the box of costly ointment of the Master's feet. The same question is asked to day by some who complain at the gifts that go forward to the boys at the Front. The best we can give them is not one-thousandth part good enough for them, said the reverend gentleman. The same question is asked regarding the war. For what purpose this waste of lives? This war is a holy war and those who lay down their lives are martyrs. These men are called upon to lay down their life for God, for truth, and justice. To the sorrowing hearts, he said God does not want us not to be sorry but he wants us to be joyful as well. These boys are called upon to die the noblest death that man can die. They are not really dead but only sprung to life. We are only separated from our loved ones for a comparatively short time. Rev Mr. Perdue read the letter from Leith's comrades, which is reproduced in another column, telling how Leith died at his post and was regarded as one of the best men in the battery.

THE TOWN COUNCIL

Votes Down Resolution to Stop Dancing in Town Hall Until After the War—Will Pass Local Milk By-law.

The Town Fathers held their third monthly meeting of the year Monday night. While there was no great volume of business up, the session marked the first division of the year on a resolution.

The entire Council were present:—Mayor A. P. Johnston, Reeve Russell, Couns. McKinnon, Sanderson, Truax, McGregor, McCarter and Vogan.

Requests from Chief of Police Ferguson and Night Watchman Swanston for new suits of clothes were granted.

Mayor Johnston said he had a telephone message from Dr. Sinclair asking permission to have Tony Zuber's housekeeper, Mrs. Emma Helwig sent to the hospital at the town's expense. The Mayor contended that Zuber ought to pay the shot and would have nothing to do with it. The Council backed the Mayor in his action.

The Daughters of the Empire asked for refund of rent of Hall for recent patriotic concert. Granted.

Chief Ferguson reported $13.25 police court fees collected during February.

Town Treasurer Collins advised investing $1500 Sinking Fund in War Bonds. A by-law was passed permitting the Treasurer to do so.

Will Draft Milk By-law

A letter from the Provincial Health Inspector urged the advisability of having a Milk By-law for the regulation of milk sold in the town. A model By-law, such as has been passed in many other places was enclosed with his letter. A committee of Couns McGregor, Truax and McCarter was named to prepare a by-law for consideration at next council meeting.

S. A. Rife & Co. submitted a statement regarding no. of people employed etc. for 1914, 1915 and 1916. The statements were referred to the Finance Committee, who reported that the statements were not verified as required by the by-law and that a proper statement be asked for. The Committee reported that the Statement from the Canadian Bobbin Co. was properly made out and congratulated the Company upon its prosperous showing.

Fighting H. C. of L.

Mr. John Legate wrote the Council that there was an elm just outside his fence which he had long admired the beauty of, but at the present time he felt the ground near its roots would be better employed growing a few hills of potatoes and asked permission to remove the tree. The Council would like to "help win the War" by enlisting in Mr. Legate's "thrift and production" effort and left the matter in charge of the Streets Committee.

On With The Dance!

The following resolution presented by Couns. J. W. Sanderson and A. McCarter, resulted in the first split vote in the Council this year; "while so many of our fellow citizens are dying on the fields of France, therefore we wish to prohibit the use of the Town Hall for balls or dances until the cruel war is over."

It looked as if the resolution would carry, when Mayor Johnston plunged in, and called for a division with the result that it was "canned".

In standing firm for the dance, the Councillors did not profess to be defending the rights of the boys who are sticking around home. If they were trying to do the Home Guard a good turn they neglected to say so. They claimed that there is a class of young men who won't pay—but who will give a dollar-and-a-half to attend a dance for patriotic purposes. "On with the dance! We need the money!" was the main idea advanced by those opposed to the motion, or in other words, "We love our Country, but—Oh, you one-fifty!"

Mayor Johnston thought the resolution a mistake. You get money from dances you wouldn't get any other way. Young men would pay a dollar and a half that way who wouldn't give a cent to patriotic purposes any other way. He called for a vote on the question.

Coun. Sanderson said it seemed a cruel thing to give that class of young men an opportunity to ease their conscience by paying money for a night's fun, not caring a button how the war goes.

Coun. McCarter—I don't think it's right.

Coun. Russell thought it wasn't seemly when men were dying on the battlefield for the folks at home to be going in for a jolly time.

Coun. Vogan expressed himself similarly to Mayor Johnston.

Coun. Sanderson thought the people whose sons were on the battlefield would feel differently about it.

The motion was defeated on the following division:—

Yea—Sanderson, Russell, McCarter—3.

Nay—McGregor, Vogan, McKinnon, Truax, Mayor Johnston—5.

CURRENT COMMENT

THE SUBMARINE NOT A BLUFF.

Lord Robert Cecil, Minister of Blockade, has made a statement showing the number of vessels sunk by German submarines since the new "frightfulness" began to be something less than one for every one hundred ships that have arrived at or left British ports. However, Sir Robert declares that the menace is there, although not fatal, but its terror lies in its uncertainty and erratic wanderings. This uncertainty keeps New York harbor congested with vessels, which are kept in port by this German menace. Neutrals are also afraid to take risks, and it has long been a matter of surprise to us how British owners and especially British sailors brave the perils of the deep, of submarine and mine. Surely these sailors must be well paid for thus facing death. They leave port, home, and many of them wives and children, not knowing that they may go to the bottom at any moment, and many do go to the bottom. We daily read such cable, as this: "The ship was torpedoed by a submarine, and out of a crew of fifty eleven men were drowned." To our mind the merchant marine just now is a more hazardous calling than is the navy.

The figures presented by Sir Cecil bear out the prognostication of Henry Clews & Co., as made in their weekly report. Great Britain had a total ocean tonnage of nearly 20,000,000 before the war, or almost one-half of the world's tonnage. The losses from the beginning of the war to the new submarine campaign were about [illegible] tons, of which 2,500,000 tons were British and the remainder neutral. These losses, however, have been very largely compensated for by new construction, so that, according to an estimate of the United States Shipping Commissioner, the net loss of world's tonnage in January was about 200,000 tons. Of late the output of new tonnage has been immensely increased in all parts of the world by high freights and prospects of their continuance for a long period ahead. From this latter fact it follows that submarines will have to increase their present destructiveness very considerably before they can possibly even approach the starvation of England. Much distress and inconvenience may be accomplished, but starvation is practically impossible because for a variety of reasons the threat cannot be carried out. First, it would require a fleet of submarines many times larger than the present one to accomplish such a purpose. Second, the British navy seems tolerably able to cope with the difficulties, and has evidently found various successful means of defence, such as destroyers, nets, aeroplanes, traffic lanes, convoys, etc. The submarine now appears to be practically powerless against war vessels, and its effectiveness against merchantmen when armed is much reduced. At British ports there are between 1,000 and 1,200 arrivals and departures per week, each sailing offering an opportunity to the submarine.

This new York banking firm also states that in the States alone there are now 400 steel merchant ships under construction with a tonnage of 1,700,000 tons. Japan and Norway are also turning out a large new tonnage. What Great Britain is doing in this connection is not officially known, although she is much the largest ship builder in the world, and has lately turned her attention to building merchant tonnage with increased vigor. The hope of defeating England by submarines is doomed to serious disappointment.

The New York Sun has come to the conclusion that the Hohenzollerns must go. It says:

One step there is which, if the Allies would take it all together, would go far to advance the effectual and permanent pacification of a distracted continent. The blood-saturated house of Hohenzollern must go! Let it. Let it finally percolate through the might hypnotized German mind that this hideous quarrel was imposed upon the world by the appetite and choice of that Gargantua who prances about the abattoirs he has made, uttering his superblasphemies of infallibility: "Where the offence is, let the great axe fall!"

And it adds: "The egotism and selfishness of the Hohenzollerns should prove their downfall. What dynastic reasons could warrant the holocaust at Verdun, invoked to afford a pedestal to that plunderer of chateaux the Crown Prince? Truly he proved himself a Prince of Darkness for 300,000 men, sacrificed only to buttress the despotism which in all the German dominions has throttled all mental freedom."

The British Government should be told that the Canadian who refused a hereditary title the other day received more congratulations than the one who accepted such a title.

No wonder that there are bread riots on in New York. A New York City official estimates the increase in the prices of these articles of daily diet, from the low prices of 1916 to the high prices of 1917, thus: Onions, 100 pound bag: 1916, $1.75; 1917, $15. Potatoes, 180 pounds, 1916, [illegible]; 1917, [illegible]. Cabbages, per ton: 1916, $7; 1917, $160.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I must have dropped it," he murmured, and thrust the offending hand behind him out of sight.

With a quick gesture Signa took out her own handkerchief, and, stooping down, drew it through the long grass drenched with dew; then put her hand upon his arm timidly and drew his hand toward her.

"No, no!" he said, huskily, quivering at her touch, but she smiled up at him with a look of deprecation, and tenderly wiped away the red stain; then wound the handkerchief round his hand.

Pale and trembling he stood beside her, so near that his coat sleeve touched her dress.

"Thank you!" he murmured almost inaudibly. "You have spoiled your pretty handkerchief." Then he stopped abruptly, and looked away from her.

"And may I not do even that, when you have done so much for me?" she said, reproachfully. "Do you think I do not know how much you have done, and how much more you would have done? You would have risked your life——" Her voice broke, but she struggled with it. "You would have leapt from that hideous tower to save me, and I may not do so small a thing as this!" She sighed, then she laughed softly. "Let me go now."

He turned and looked at her, and her eyes fell before the passionate [illegible] in his.

"No," he said; "stay—stay one moment. Signa—" He paused, and as he leant over the side of the seat his hand went out toward her with an imploring, caressing gesture. "Signa, will you listen to me? I have something to say to you." She did not speak, but she looked up at him, a swift, fearful, passionate glance. "I feel that it should not be said now—just after I have been of some slight service to you, just now that you may think I am entitled to your gratitude—but, ah! Signa, the words have been on my lips these weeks past. I have said them to myself a thousand times. Can you not guess what they are? 'I love her—I love her!' Signa, I love you!"

Like heavenly music the words ring in her ears. Mechanically her lips [illegible] and inaudibly she echoes them, as if they were something infinitely precious—too precious to be real.

"I love you!" he murmured, bending over her, his hand still outheld, his face pale with the passion of love and anxiety. "From the first day I saw you—there by the sea—my heart went out to you. When I saw your sweet face that day for the first time, I knew that it was the face of the one woman in the world for me, and from that hour to this my love has grown, has so grown that now it has mastered me—Oh, my darling—let me call you so, if only for this once—if you knew how truly, how devotedly I love you, you would love me even for pity's sake. I am not worthy to offer my love to you. I am not worthy to receive anything at your hands but a simple 'No,' and yet I must speak. Signa, I who speak to you thus of love, am—oh, Heaven, if I could but call back the past—one so stained and besmirched by the world that my love is not worthy the acceptance of any woman, least of all of yours, the queen and keen of womanhood, and yet—and yet, see now, Signa, my darling, if—if you can bring yourself to think of me as one whose whole life from this time forth shall be spent in devotion to you, in worship of your purity and loveliness, then—ah, then——"

He stopped, and his face grew deadly pale.

"Speak to me," he said, at last, as she remained silent. "I—I can bear it, though the world may be the bitterest in all the world for me, I will take my wasted life from your path. I will—oh, Signa, speak to me, though it be only to tell me that I have loved in vain."

Trembling, but with a keen, ecstatic joy, she raised her eyes and looked at him.

For a moment he leans over her, as if too dazed to understand the look, then he bends over her, and lays his hand heavily upon her shoulder.

"Signa!"

With a faint cry she leans toward him, and her head drops upon his arm.

Speechless, he draws her to him with a passionate gesture, and strains her to his breast.

"Oh, my darling, my darling!" he murmurs, hoarsely. "Is it true? Is it 'yes'? Do you, can you love me?"

For answer her face nestles still more closely against his bosom, and her hand creeps slowly up to his face.

With a passionate gesture he takes it and presses it to his lips, and draws [illegible] his arms, and so, with her [illegible] against his face, [illegible] the world to the past, the present, to life itself in the one moment of ecstatic bliss which we poor mortals enjoy on earth.

Above them the placid moon sails on, bathing them with its soft light as if with a benediction. A bird, startled from its rest, flies seaward with a faint chirp; the sound of the murmuring [illegible] floats toward them; all nature seems to sympathize and to join in harmony with this one moment of human passion.

Then at last Signa raises her head and looks up at him with eyes heavy with happiness, and her hand slides from his embrace as a crimson flush of maidenly shame suffuses her face.

"Am I dreaming?" she murmurs.

He kisses the half-parted lips.

"No, darling, you are awake, and this is real. Let me kiss you again, and you shall see."

"No, no!" she pants, drawing her face from him. "I know now that it is real. But why—ah, why do you love me? You said that you loved me, did you not?" with a sweet accent of incredulity.

"I love you, I love you!" he whispers in her ear. "Why? My darling there is nothing to wonder at in it. Any man might well love you for your beauty, but [illegible] I prize it dearly, and am half foolish with pride of it—is be nothing with me? Why? Why, Signa, even that poor fool who has just gone—even he loved you."

She shudders.

"No! Don't speak of him."

"And why not?" he murmurs.

She looks beyond him with softly beaming eyes, tremulous with an ecstasy of doubt and belief, of wonder and delight.

"It seems so strange, so wild a dream," she says, softly. "That you who have seen so much, who have seen, all so many beautiful and graceful women, should think of loving me!" and she laughs falteringly.

A slight shade crosses his face, as if her words had touched a jarring chord.

"Signa," he says, slowly, and with an intense earnestness, "in all my life, varied and eventful as it has been, I have never known what love was until I met you. Do not doubt that whatever may happen——"

Her eyes turn toward him with a sudden startled expression.

"Happen!" she whispers.

His lips twitch, and his hand closes on hers.

"Let come what may in the future, never forget that, as there is a heaven above us, I loved you with all my heart and soul. I swear to that, Signa!"

"Jove laughs at lover's perjuries," she murmurs, with a smile up into his dark eyes. "No need to swear. I know it. I cannot tell you why or how—I know it, but I feel it. Yes, let come what may I shall always remember that you loved me this night, this one glorious, perfect night in my life. Ah, if it would but last!" and her glance goes up to the moon with mild wistfulness.

"The night passes, but the day comes!" he says, and his voice is lighter, as if he had cast the shadow of some dark thought from his mind. "The day comes, the long day which you and I, Signa, have to be happy in, that day when we shall be together, one in mind and body and soul!"

Almost solemnly his voice rings in her ears, and she lays her head upon his breast, and presses her lips to the senseless coat.

Then she laughs—a low, rippling laugh of excessive happiness—like the falling of water from a cup over-filled.

"What will Aunt Podswell say?"

He laughs in harmony; then he shrugs his shoulders.

"Aunt Podswell," he says, "will get upon the warpath: she will unearth the hatchet and thirst for my scalp: there will be wrath in the Podswell wigwam when it is known that the beautiful belle of Northwell has given herself to the obnoxious Hector Warren. The storm of the other day will be as nothing to the howling tempest which awaits us."

"That storm! How I love to think of it," murmurs Signa, almost fondly. "How happy I was, and how brave and good and kind—and how bad and wicked you were!"

"As how?" he says, smoothing the silky hair with a proud, caressing hand, as a miser might nurse and fondle his gold.

"Oh, do you not remember? You would not drink out of the same cup."

He laughs, but there is a thrill of passion in the laugh.

"No, I dared not; it seemed sacrilege, profanation, and when at last you made me, I thought that my lips touch where yours had been, and all my strength was needed to keep me from clasping you in my arms, and——"

"What would Archie have said?" she whispers, her face all aglow. "But about my aunt, I don't understand."

"No!" he says, with a grave smile. "Do you think she will welcome me with open arms as her—what is it—nephew-in-law? Poor, unknown, an adventurer, a half-suspected opera-singer! I am a pretty fellow to carry off the prize!"

Signa is silent for a moment, then she looks up at him.

"What does it matter?" she says, simply. "What does it matter; though all the world stood with upraised hands and shouted 'No!' I should not care. I think—yes, I think I should be all the more glad to come," and her head droops. "But—but are you so very poor?"

"At this moment I am richer than the man who owns the biggest mine in Peru! Do I not hold in my arms the most precious thing in all the world?"

"Ah! so poor and worthless a trifle!" she falters. "But tell me."

"Poor?" he says, and he looks down at her with a faint smile. "It is an elastic term. Answer me, Signa, would you be content to live the life of a poor man's wife? To depend upon his right arm and brain for daily bread?"

"If it were your right arm and brain," she answers, proudly, "and if I could not live then, I could starve and still be happy if I knew that you were not starving too!"

"There shall be no starving," he says. "There will be enough for our modest wants, Signa."

She sighs and a vague shade crosses her brow.

"What's amiss?" he asks, with half smiling tenderness.

"No—thing. Yes, I am disappointed. I was hoping—hoping that you were very poor."

"Quite the mendicant?"

"Yes, quite the mendicant! Because then I should seem quite rich, and it would be so sweet to feel that I had something to give you besides myself."

"I did not know I was making love to an heiress," he says, still with the half smile.

She laughs.

"An heiress, Hector! I have a miserable hundred a year, or thereabouts, it is miserable now that you are not quite poor, but if you had been——" and she sighs again.

"A hundred a year or so," he says, thoughtfully. "Signa, don't be disappointed before there is any occasion. A hundred a year is very welcome to an adventurer——"

"Really," with vivid delight.

"Really and truly," he says. "You are quite an heiress. A hundred a year! I was thinking of a little cottage——"

"Oh, yes!"

"But now we may lift our heads to a villa and—perhaps a pony-chaise."

She nestles closer to him.

"I am so glad! Don't think meanly of me, but I am so glad. I wish—ah! how I wish it were thousands!"

"Never mind," he says, cheerfully and magnanimously, "a hundred is something. I am a lucky man. My treasure of pure gold is gilt outside also!" Then his light tone of raillery changes suddenly to one of deep tenderness, and he murmurs, "My child! My child!"

"Why do you say that?" she asks, looking up at him.

"Why? Because you are like a sweet, innocent child, who wears her heart upon her sleeve; but not for a daw to peck at, but to gather into his own dark bosom—so!—and cherish for evermore!"

There is silence for a moment, then he starts, and lays his hand upon her shoulder.

"My darling, you are wet with dew. Great Heaven! how thoughtless of me. We must go."

"Must we? Ah!"

"Yes; even now you may catch cold. Let me brush the dew from your dress."

And he goes down on his knees to do so, and as he looks up at her, she stoops and kisses him.

"Shall I tell you—shall I make a shameful confession?" she whispers, her face and neck a burning red.

He nods, holding her hand, his eyes drinking in the light down pouring from hers.

"Shall I? I feel as if I must! Well, then, when you knelt and wiped the wet from my dress the other day at St. Clare, I felt tempted—ah! fiercely tempted—to stoop and kiss you as I kiss you now. Ah, my love! my love!"

* * * *

"Gracious Heaven!" "Bless my soul!" "Signa!" "What is the matter?" "Mr. Warren!"

These and similar ejaculations, uttered in a sort of chorus by Mr. and Mrs. Podswell, greet the pair as they enter the Rectory drawing room; Hector Warren rather pale, and still bearing about him the evidences of his climb up the tower, Signa dew-drenched and pale to the lips, but with a soft gleaming light in her violet eyes.

Mary, standing at the back, staring with all her eyes, guesses at the truth in a moment; but the worthy pair of guardians are thicker-skulled, and still utter ejaculations open-mouthed.

"Signa, what does it mean?" at last gasps Aunt Podswell, rising and clutching her shawl round her with an irritable excitement and wrath.

Signa takes off her hat and sinks softly into a chair with her eyes bent on the ground, not ashamedly, but with a heavy, dreamy consciousness.

"Well!" demands Mrs. Podswell, snappishly, "can't you speak? Are you aware of the time? Where is Lady Blyte? Why have you left the Park? And what—what——" "does he mean by being in your company," she would like to add; but the dark eyes, fixed so calmly on her, are too much for her.

"Let me explain!" says Hector Warren, coming to the table, and putting his hat down with the easy, graceful self-possession which poor Sir Frederic so madly hates. "Miss Grenville has left the Park——"

"I suppose she can speak for herself!" breaks in Aunt Podswell, glaring at him. "I don't understand. Josiah, why don't you speak?" turning upon the rector, who stands rubbing his chin, and with his eyes like saucers.

"I—ahem!—I was about to do so, my dear!" he says, meekly. "Signa, what does this mean? You—you have upset your aunt exceedingly. Why have you come here so unexpectedly, and at this—moment"—with a glance at the clock and a solemn shake of the head—"at this—er, really unseemly hour?"

Signa raises her head, as if with an effort to recall herself from blissful dreamland to the unpleasant reality of the situation.

"Miss Grenville is tired," says Hector Warren. "Let me explain. Happening to be in the park, I met with Miss Grenville; and hearing from her that, for reasons which she will no doubt explain to you, she wished to return home, I offered to escort her, and here she is. Don't be alarmed, my dear Mrs. Podswell, nothing serious has happened."

"Nothing serious? But it is serious. Do you mean to tell me that you have persuaded this foolish girl to leave Lady Blyte at a moment's notice, and without—without informing her ladyship?" demands Aunt Podswell, fairly meeting the dark eyes in her wrathful indignation.

Hector Warren inclines his head almost impatiently. He does not care, so far as he is concerned, how fierce and long the storm may rage, but he sees the drooping head beside him, and wishes to get the tempest over for her sake.

"Yes, that is it, exactly. I plead guilty, Mrs. Podswell. I am sorry you should be upset. It is enough to upset you, I admit. But Signa——"

"Signa!" echoes Mrs. Podswell shrilly; and she throws up her head. "By what right do you speak of my niece by her Christian name, Mr.—er—Warren?"

"By the right she has bestowed upon me in promising to be my wife," he says, quietly.

"Your—your——" gasps Mrs. Podswell; while the rector flushes and shuffles as if the floor had suddenly become red-hot.

"My wife," repeats Hector Warren, mildly. "I am sorry to spring this news upon you in this way, and I hope to lay my proposal before you in proper form to-morrow, Mr. Podswell," and he looks at the rector, who gapes like a fish and shakes his head as if it were of no use to appeal to him. "Until then——"

"Excuse me one moment, I cannot permit this absurd—I say absurd—nonsense to go further!" says Aunt Podswell shrilly. "I would have you remember, Mr. Warren, that this young lady is not unprotected. My husband and I are her guardians, and answerable for her welfare."

Hector Warren inclines his head.

"And a part of our duty—the greatest part is that we should not allow her to fall into the hands of—of——"

"An adventurer," puts in Hector Warren, calmly.

"You have said the odious word, not I, sir, but it has been spoken, and let it stand."

FLORAL ARISTOCRATS.

Orchids Are Not Parasites, and It is Difficult to Raise Them.

Aristocrats of the flower kingdom—and probably the least understood. You hear them called parasites, which is only one of the common mistakes made about the orchid. You see a hundred different shapes and a dozen different colors grouped together, each shape perhaps a distinct family and each with a separate name.

In the first place, orchids are not parasites. A parasitical plant is one which gets nourishment from another plant. Certain orchids live on trees, but they get their food and drink from the air by means of aerial roots. We call them epiphytes. Other orchids get their nourishment directly from the ground. They are called terrestrial orchids.

People don't understand, either, why orchids cost so much. They fail to see why a tiny plant is sold for, say, $1,600. If they realized that rare orchids may have cost a long trip into a tropical jungle to obtain and that it takes from eight to ten years to raise a plant from the seed with patient care and treatment, they could see why these flowers remain in the aristocratic class.

Only the orchid grower can understand all the details of his art but the flower lover can easily learn to distinguish the various types.

Quivers Were Really Full.

It seems very doubtful whether even war will stop the falling of the birth rate. The tendency is for it to go down—down—down in nearly all the countries of Europe.

It is in pioneer settlements in new countries that families are generally largest. Out on the prairie life is deadly dull if there aren't plenty of little feet running in and out.

Alice Morse Earle, who writes so delightfully of Colonial days and Colonial ways, has much to say about the large families of the early settlers of New England. In those days large families were eagerly welcomed. Children were regarded as a real blessing—happy the man that had his quiver full of them.

For the Colonial farmer, and especially to the frontiersman, every child is an extra help on the farm. In New England, when land was portioned out, there was in the early days a portion for every woman and every child in the family, so that if one's child was not born with a silver spoon in its mouth, it came into the world in the proud position of a landed proprietor.

Families of twelve, thirteen, fourteen, fifteen were so common that no one considered them remarkably small. Sir William Phips was one of the twenty-six children, all with the same mother; Green, a well known Boston printer, was married twice, and had thirty children.

Among the clergy large families were the rule. One widely known, had twenty-six children, another twenty, another eighteen and so on.

Nearly Every Girl Can Make Herself Pretty and Attractive

SOME WHOLESOME TRUTHS EVERY GIRL SHOULD THINK ABOUT

Probably you know just such a girl. Perhaps she is sixteen—good to look at, and pretty—quite interesting because she reflects the graces and charm that give promise of happiness to herself and others. But she is not strong. The color in her cheeks, once so rosy, has faded away—her eyes are listless—the buoyancy of spirit and vigor she once possessed are sadly lacking. Parents, friends, this girl needs Ferrozone—needs it that her blood may be renewed—needs it to restore the nerve force that growth, study and the development of her fresh youth have exhausted. This girl will become a queen with Ferrozone—which will restore her color—bring back her old-time energy—give brightness to her eyes and vivacity to her spirits. In Ferrozone every girl finds strength—then she can do things. In Ferrozone there is endurance—that drives away morning tiredness and languor. For the girl or woman that wants to be happy, healthy, winning—who values rosy cheeks, laughing eyes and abundant good spirits, nothing can compare with Ferrozone. 50c per box, or six boxes for $2.50. Universal Service and Four Men.

(St. Louis Republic.)

Universal service, according to a common sense plan, would not mean the putting of a rifle upon the shoulder of every boy. Far from it. It would simply mean that every boy, on reaching a certain age, would be fitted into the scheme of his country's defence. If the nation needed him it would know where to find him, what he was good for, and how to use him.

Let us take, for instance, four men of 24 years each, who have been fitted into this scheme. The first is a laborer of 160 pounds weight, sound and strong. He has been given, during selected periods between the ages of 17 and 21, the training of an infantryman. He is called to the colors in the hour of need and a rifle is put into his hand. He is a trained soldier, available for immediate service. The second man drives a motor truck. He is not put into the line with a rifle, but is attached to the ambulance corps or quartermaster's department as a part of the army's transportation system. Both of these men are in perfect health and condition.

But the third man has a blemish—a stiff knee. He could not march three miles a day. He is a machinist—the expert operator of a turret lathe. He is as necessary and valuable a part of the military machine as the soldier or the motor truck driver, but his place of service is in the munition shop instead of in the field. The fourth man is slight and delicate; he is under weight and lacks in chest expansion, he would not last sixty days in a strenuous campaign. But he is a skilled accountant and will be invaluable as the army's representative in the accounting department of a factory which has been taken over as a munition plant, and to this service he is assigned.

Universal service, rationally organized, would not attempt to put every man into the fighting line; contrariwise would insure not preparedness but unpreparedness. It would involve a top-heavy fighting force on the one side and a cripple of sustaining forces on the other. Practically carried out universal service would so organize the manhood of a nation that, in the event of war, every citizen would be placed, with the minimum of delay and friction, in the position where he would be of the greatest value to his country.

Instead of wasting the energies of the nation's manhood upon useless and barbarous tasks a rational scheme of universal service would make forever impossible just such wasting of energy as has been witnessed on the Mexican border during the last few months. And it would have a most powerful influence upon the preparedness of the nation for the conquests of peace. How many boys do you know who have lost years by "drifting" before they found out the thing to which they were best adapted? What kind of effect upon the citizen would it have if the government looked over every boy at the age of 17 and saw to it that he received, in school or shop or mine or railroad yard or plowed field or counting room or laboratory, the training best calculated to enable him to do the thing which would help his country most in the hour of its need? Can anything be thought of which would be a better preparation for the citizenship of peace than this?

Progress.

(Chicago Tribune.)

Because we travel in automobiles and aeroplanes, because we build skyscrapers and raise [illegible] movies, because the whole machinery of our physical life has been complicated, accelerated, and specialized [illegible], we put [illegible] down as progress and [illegible] little or nothing [illegible].

We can be sure that we take pains [illegible] registered in our mental habits. An acute observer of American life, long a resident of this country, has said that the most serious of our faults is our refusal to submit to persistent mental effort. We are mentally lazy, in short.

The charge is true and undoubtedly we can find its explanation in the rapidity of our external life and our inevitable preoccupation with it. We substitute for the hard and sustained effort mere surface apprehension and easy, though shallow, generalization.

We pride ourselves on our knowledge, that is, our information, but we do not sift this industriously and patiently. We know thousands of facts our forbears did not dream of, and we do not stop to think that many of [illegible] of facts are pragmatically valueless. The men of former times had less to think about and thought more of what they had to think about. They had to hold their facts longer and [illegible] to a mastery of them.

The newspaper is responsible for this in large degree. It has widened men's horizon and increased their stock of information. In so doing it has performed a service of value, but the service has been paid for. Our command over life, which is the test of real knowledge, is not greater in proportion to our increased information. We are tempted to move rapidly with a swiftly running current of reported events which we do not take the time and effort necessary to relate to one another and interpret.

Reading, which maketh a full man, if it is orderly, purposive and well digested, may become a mere anodyne or a pastime. We read more extensively than our fathers and probably think less of what we read. The short story displaces the three decker novel, the movie the five act drama, the newspaper the essay and debate.

The Germans have a word which we may translate "one-distinctness." It is a significant word expressive of the solid, determined, untiring digging upon which alone a solid structure of real culture, of lasting achievement, can be built. There is nothing more needed in American life.

TEETHING TIME A TIME OF WORRY

When baby is teething he is a time of worry to most mothers. Baby's little gums become swollen and tender; he becomes cross, does not sleep well, is greatly troubled with constipation, colic or diarrhoea and sometimes even convulsions seize him. During this period nothing can equal the use of Baby's Own Tablets. They regulate the bowels and stomach and make the teething so easy that the mother scarcely realizes baby is getting his teeth. Concerning the Tablets, Mrs. Arthur Arsenault, New Town, N. B., writes:—"I used Baby's Own Tablets when baby was getting his teeth and I found them an excellent medicine." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Party of Bride Hunters.

In quest of brides sixty young Japanese residents of California saw Japan for the first time when the Panama Maru of the Osaka Shosen Kaisha touched Yokohama from San Francisco on September 26th. The Japanese were all born in America, and were all on their first trip to their home country. Most of them are engaged in farming in California, although a few are in business in San Francisco. During their stay in Japan they will be directed by the Rev. U. Terasawa, for the last fifteen years a Japanese missionary in San Francisco. They will stay in Japan for three months during which time they will visit practically all the leading districts of Japan. Accompanied by their brides whom they will select while here, and will return to their homes in California early in January. Four Japanese girls, also born in America, were passengers on the Panama Maru.—Exchange.

Antiquity of Passports.

Passports are a very ancient institution. Some of the old monkish chroniclers mention as an achievement on the part of King Canute that he obtained free passes for his subjects through various continental countries on their pilgrimages to the shrines of the apostles Peter and Paul at Rome. [illegible] pilgrim was furnished with a document in the nature of a passport called "Tractoria de [illegible]." Why People Feel Depressed In the Cold Weather

Why is tiredness and languor so prevalent just now? A physician explained that the cold of winter drives blood from the surface of the body to the liver. Nominally one-fourth of the whole blood supply is in the liver, and when more blood is accumulated in that organ everything goes wrong.

No better remedy exists than Dr. Hamilton's Pills, which are composed of pure vegetable extracts of Mandrake and Butternut, and possess wonderful liver stimulating powers. It's a marvel the way Hamilton's Pills clear the blood of the poisonous humors. They put new life into worn out bodies, build up the appetite, bring back a reserve of nerve energy that tides over the cold days of winter and the depressing days of spring. For sterling health and body comfort get a 25c box of Dr. Hamilton's Pills today.

True Blue.

The expression "true blue" which we hear so often, has not even an English parentage, but is said to have been a Spanish saying which meant that the blood that filled the veins of the aristocracy of Spain was blue in color, while that of the inferior races was more or less black, and the proverb that "true blue will never stain" instead of meaning, as is generally supposed, that "a noble heart will never disgrace itself," actually refers to the "blue aprons" worn by butchers on account of their not showing blood stains—a far jump from the blue blood of the haughty Spanish aristocrats to the humble apron of a butcher's boy.—London Express.

Why Cats Purr and Lions Roar

One of the most interesting discoveries made lately is that of Sir Richard Owen that the lion roars, instead of purring, simply because the hyoid bone in his throat is loose.

In the cat this bone is stationary, so that the cat purrs and cannot roar, but in the lion and tiger the hyoid is loose, and therefore even when calling to their mates the larger members of the cat family roar. The roars of the jaguar and leopard are [illegible], barking coughs, an interval of about one second separating the [illegible] efforts," says this observer. They may be easily reproduced or imitated by sawing a piece of thin board with a coarse toothed saw. The cheetah, however, calls with a decided mew, very much like that of the cat.

R. I. Pocock, superintendent of the London Zoo, explains that those felidae or cat family that have an elastic ligament between the ceratohyal and the upper elements of the suspensorium (lion, tiger, leopard, jaguar) roar, but never purr; while all the other species of the felidae, with normally constructed hyoids, purr, but never roar, and among these are the cheetah and puma.

Thrilling Moments With The Royal Flying Corps

War Office Gives Vivid Picture of An Air Squadron in Action on French Front.

"The following bombing will be carried out by No. — Squadron at night (10 p.m., 12 midnight and 2 a.m.): At each of these times three machines each carrying eight twenty-pound bombs, will bomb respectively I——, C——, H——."

Thus the operation order read one evening in France. Just an ordinary order, too, for bombing is carried out day and night incessantly. Bombing by night is usually carried out on towns and villages known to be resting places of the German troops, and it is part of the work of the Royal Flying Corps to see that the Hun never rests.

Fritz, after a hard spell in the trenches, is withdrawn to some shell-torn village behind the lines to rest. He enters the ruined house that forms his billet, and with a sigh of contentment at reaching such luxury after the miseries of trench life prepares to sleep in peace. He dreams of home, and then out of the night comes the terror of the air.

A bomb falls in his billet, exploding with a terrific report and doing more damage to the already ruined walls. Possibly a few of his comrades are wounded or killed. Other explosions take place close by and the whole village is in turmoil.

Fritz does not sleep again. His nerves are jangled, and all possibility of sleep is gone. The next day he is in a worse condition than after a night in the trenches. This continues night after night. The damage to German morale is enormous.

From the aerial point of view things are different. A pilot warned for night flying takes it as he takes everything else, with apparent unconcern. He realizes that he will have an uninteresting ride in the dark; the danger from "Archie" will be small, for an aeroplane is a difficult target to keep under observation with a searchlight, and the danger from hostile aircraft will be smaller still.

He leaves the aerodrome and quickly climbs up into the darkness. Below him are the very faint outlines of fields, woods and villages. Ponds and streams show more distinctly, and the roads show faintly through the night. He is usually alone and has no observer to bother about. When he has attained sufficient height at a signal from the leader he heads for the lines.

Over the trenches the star shells of the infantry may be seen, occasionally the flash of a badly concealed gun glints in the darkness or the exploding bombs of a trench-raiding party cause tiny sparks to glimmer far below. Probably the enemy, hearing the sound of engines, will turn on his searchlights and sweep the sky with long pencils of light. The pilot may be picked up for a second, and a trifle later the angry bang, bang, bang of "Archie" may be heard, firing excitedly at the place where the aeroplane ought to be but is not—the pilot has probably dipped and changed his course since he was in the rays of the searchlight. He may be caught again for an instant, and the performance is repeated.

Before long the vicinity of the target is reached and he prepares to drop his bombs, usually eight in number. A little before he is over the spot the first bombs will be released, for the trajectory of the bomb follows the course of the machine if the latter keeps on a straight course, and when it explodes the aeroplane is still overhead. Down far below will be seen a tiny burst of flame; possibly a large fire blazes up and the pilot knows that his work is good. He then turns and repeats his performance until all his bombs are exhausted, when he turns for home.

Bombs are usually dropped from a low altitude at night in order to be surer of getting the target. If during the performance any local searchlights are turned on "Archie" gets busy and a merry game of hide and seek in and out the beams takes place. If the aeroplane is very low, and bombs are sometimes dropped from a height of only a few hundred feet, it is highly probable that the bursting shells do more damage than the aeroplane's bombs, and it is almost impossible to wing an aeroplane by night.

Over the lines the pilot probably meets more searchlights, dodges them, and gradually descends. Below him he sees the aerodrome of the surrounding squadrons lighted up for landing purposes. Should he be in doubt as to which is his own he fires a certain combination of signal lights and is answered from below. He then lands, hands his machine over to the mechanics and turns in.

So much for night bombing. By day it is different. Though at night it is the billets which usually form the target, by day bombing is carried out for the purpose of damaging specific objects. Railroads, dumps of stores and ammunition and enemy aerodromes are the favorite targets.

The raiding machines fly in formation and are surrounded by other machines used solely for protective purposes. Generally a raid is carried out by machines from two squadrons, the bomb carriers belonging to a corps wing and the escorting machines to an army wing.

All the machines meet at a prearranged rendezvous well on our side of the line at a certain time and a given altitude. There they manoeuvre into their correct formation. A Flight Commander leads the raid and his machine is distinguished by streamers tied to it.

When he sees that all the machines are in their correct positions he fires a signal light and the whole body move off to their objective. Needless to say, such a cloud of aeroplanes presents a tempting target to "Archie," and shells burst all around the machines. As, however, Fritz nearly always seems to fire into the brown with the hope of bagging any of the machines, casualties rarely result and the formation is not disturbed.

Once over the target the fighters scatter and patrol the neighborhood while the bombers discharge their missiles on the objective. Usually, unless anti-aircraft fire is very heavy, they descend a few thousand feet to make surer of the target, and when their work is completed rise again to the level of the escort.

Results can usually be fairly judged by day. An ammunition dump quickly shows if it is hit, and stores soon burst into flames. Railway stations or junctions show clearly damage to buildings or overturned tracks, but the damage to the track itself is hard to estimate. Aerodromes may be bombed for the purpose of destroying enemy machines in their hangars or merely in order to spoil the landing by blowing holes all over the place. It is with great delight that a pilot remarks in his report that a hostile machine, surrounded by mechanics, was about to ascend, but that just as he had descended to within a few hundred feet and obtained a direct hit, with the result that the enemy machine, including the surrounding men, "seemed to be severely damaged."

One officer on a bomb raid saw his chance in this way, descended to 500 feet under intense rifle fire, successfully bombed the enemy machine which was just emerging from its hangar, and then tried to make off. Unfortunately at this moment his engine petered out, possibly on account of the enemy's fire, and he had to descend.

By skilful planing he managed to descend about three-quarters of a mile away, in full view of the enemy. Instead of giving up the ghost and at once firing his machine, this officer, [illegible] and utterly unperturbed by the German fire or by the Huns making across country to take him prisoner, commenced to inspect the engine. Luckily he found the cause of the trouble at once, put it right—it was only a trifling mishap—adjusted the controls and swung the propeller.

The engine started, he jumped in with the nearest Hun only a hundred yards off, and opening the throttle raced over the ground and into the air, pursued by a futile fusillade of bullets. His engine held out, and he safely regained his aerodrome after having been reported missing by his comrades. For this escapade he received the Military Cross—a well earned reward.

When all the bombs have been dropped and the formation resumed the machines head for home. It is on the homeward journey that events may be expected, for time enough has elapsed for the Hun to detail a squadron to intercept our returning machines and pick off any stragglers that may fall behind.

It is a favorite Boche manoeuvre to detail some of his slow machines to entice our fighters away from the main body, and when this has been accomplished to attack the remainder with Fokkers, which dive from aloft on to the bombing machines. The trick is now well known and the fighters rarely leave their charges until the latter are in comparative safety.

Sometimes a Hun of more sporting character than his brothers will wait alone for the returning convoy, hiding himself thousands of feet up in the clouds until he sees his moment. Then singling out a machine he will dive at it, pouring out a stream of bullets as he falls. Sometimes he achieves his object and a British machine falls to earth, but whatever the result the Hun does not alter his tactics. He dives clean through the whole block of machines, down many thousands of feet, only flattening out when close to the ground.

The whole affair is so swift—just one lightning dive—that long before a fighter can reach the Hun the latter is away thousands of feet below and heading for home and safety. Every Fokker pilot knows that once his surprise dive is over he has no chance against another machine—the build of the Fokker only allows this one method of attack—and he does not stop to argue about it. His offensive dive becomes a defensive one—that is the sole difference.

Sometimes a large squadron of German machines, composed of various types of aeroplanes, intercepts a returning formation. If it attacks a grand aerial battle ensues. The British fighting machines spread out in a screen to allow the bombing machines a chance to escape and then attack the Huns as they arrive. In one place one British aeroplane will be defending itself from two or three German machines; close by two or three of our busses will be occupied in sending a Hun to his death; elsewhere more equal combats rage and the whole sky becomes an aerial battlefield, where machines perform marvellous evolutions, putting the best trick flying of pre-war days very much in the shade. No sooner has a pilot accounted for his foe, by killing him, forcing him to descend or making him think discretion the better part of valor, than he turns to the help of a hard pressed brother, surprising the enemy by an attack from the rear or otherwise creating a diversion.

A single shot in the petrol tank proves fatal: loss of pressure ensues, the engine fails, and the pilot is forced to descend. He can usually land safely, but should he be in enemy territory he must fire his machine and prepare for a holiday in Germany. Should he be fortunate enough to plane over our lines little damage is done; the tank can be repaired and the machine made serviceable again. But for the time being he is out of the fight. Sometimes the escaping petrol may ignite and the pilot and observer perish in the flames—the most terrible fate of all.

The aerial battle ends in one of two ways: one side is outmanoeuvred, outnumbered and has lost several machines and flies to safety, or, the more usual thing, both sides exhaust their ammunition, only a limited quantity perforce being carried, and the fight is of necessity broken off. Meanwhile the bombing machines have probably crossed the line in safety, and their duty is finished. Should they be attacked by a stray machine they are armed and quite capable of guarding themselves against any attack except one in force.

During these homeward raids photographs of the target are frequently obtained or should the staff require any district crossed on the journey taken they are generally secured by bombing machines. It is wonderful what minute details may be seen in a photograph taken at a height of from eight to twelve thousand feet, and our prints, which are far superior to those taken by the Hun, have revealed many useful points which would otherwise have remained unknown.

The camera is generally attached to the machine, though it may be used by the observer holding it in his hand in a more or less ordinary manner. In appearance the camera is quite unlike the usual type of lens and bellows arrangement and greatly resembles the cheap fixed focus enlarger used by some amateurs. It is fitted with a large aperture lens and a roller blind shutter working at fairly fast speeds, though not so fast as would be imagined when considering the speed of the aeroplane from which it is used. By careful calculation it has been arranged that the camera photograph an area exactly equal to that represented by the squares on one of the largely used maps, if the exposure is made at certain altitude.

When it is remembered that a single machine crossing the line is heavily shelled it may be conceived what an immense concentration of "Archies" is made on the raiders on their return. It is remarkable what feeble results are obtained considering the intensity of the bombardment, but rarely is a machine brought down, though casualties naturally occur occasionally. Sometimes an officer is hit with remarkable results, and at least one pilot had a remarkably narrow escape when returning from a raid.

Lieut. C., in company with other machines, had successfully bombed his target and had meanwhile been heavily shelled, with the result that his engine was not giving its full number of revolutions and he lagged a little behind the rest of the formation. No hostile aircraft appeared and all went well until he was about to cross the lines when a terrific bombardment was opened on him.

He dodged and turned to the best of his ability, but a well-aimed shell burst just above him and a piece of the "Archie" hit him on the head, not seriously wounding him, but knocking him unconscious. The machine deprived of the guiding hand, immediately got into a dive and commenced a rapid descent from 10,000 feet, carrying the unconscious pilot with it, to be dashed to pieces on the ground.

Whether the rush of air, the sudden increase of pressure or the passing off of the effect of the blow caused the disabled man to come to his senses is not known, but when the machine was only a few hundred feet from the ground Lieut. C. recovered his senses sufficiently to realize his position and managed to pull the machine up and make a landing. He then lapsed into unconsciousness again. Had he remained in his state of collapse half a minute longer he would inevitably have been killed.

Another curious case of wounding was that of Lieut. H., who was also returning home from a bomb raid, when passing through the heavily-shelled zone, his machine was hit by a shell which passed through the floor by the pilot's seat and out at the top without exploding. Lieut. H. thought it must have been very close to his leg, but he was so fully occupied with manoeuvring to dodge other shells that he had no time to think of it.

He crossed the line and began to plane down when he was aware of a feeling of faintness, but pulling himself together he landed his machine, taxied up to the sheds and attempted to get out. It was only then that he realized that his leg was shot almost completely off above the knee; the lower part was merely hanging by a piece of skin.

Incredible as it may seem, the shell which hit his machine also tore through the leg—luckily without exploding, unknown to Lieut. H. Probably the force of the blow and excitement of the moment caused it to pass unnoticed, and the torn nature of the wound helped to close the arteries and prevent his bleeding to death. He recovered, and though no longer flying, is still engaged in doing his duty for the duration of the war.

The Bluebeard of Belgium

Some Incidents in the Gentle Rule of General Von Bissing.

In the long list of infamous Huns whose names have placed black blots on the pages of history during the last two and a half years, none stands out with greater prominence than that of General von Bissing, the Military Governor of stricken Belgium.

I have known him intimately for close on 30 years, And I have no hesitation in saying that all the opprobrious epithets one can collect are not too harsh to apply to a monster in human form who has, by his private and public conduct, lost all claims to the consideration of decent men and women.

He is an accomplished liar. He is a profligate of the worst type. He is a traitor to those who have befriended him in his hour of need. A wrecker of woman's honor, a man devoid of a spark of pity, a spy, a proved murderer—Von Bissing has aptly been called the Bluebeard of Belgium.

From the time he was a mere youth studying at the Military Academy, Von Bissing showed indications of worthily maintaining the traditions set by that notorious band of well-to-do young fellows who go in for an army career in the Fatherland. He was of good social position, and his people were rich. It was easy, therefore, for him to become a member of that dangerous band of unspeakable profligates and rakes known as the Borussians, of which the Crown Prince became the head and tail, the moving spirit in every form of devilry devised.

If memory serves, it was at the personal invitation of young Von Bissing that I paid my first visit to one of these frequent debauches, attended by men who had no idea of decency or decorum, of honor, or of the fitness of things. Von Bissing was then as arrogant, self-centred, and cunning as he is to-day, and it was on his suggestion that some of the wildest of the wild escapades were carried out.

Commencing about seven o'clock in the evening with a full-course dinner, these orgies would often continue for 12 or 14 hours. Wherever they chanced to be held, the place would be secured in advance for pretty women and girls, who were invited to attend. Their morals did not matter, so long as they were pretty and fascinating and could drink to excess. At one of these debauches Von Bissing distinguished himself by drinking eight magnums of champagne and several liqueurs and then walking unaided; and for long after he was hailed as a hero, until the Crown Prince—himself one of the greatest degenerates of modern times—eclipsed the feat shortly before the outbreak of the present war by drinking a dozen, although he finished up in a most unprincely attitude under the table.

A BEAUTIFUL VICTIM.

At these affairs, the prude was not wanted. Women with any sense of decency were not to be found there, and this suggested to Von Bissing an infamous idea, which he put into practice, and I feel bound to relate it because it throws such an illuminating light upon his character even in those days, when he was unknown to fame.

With that paramount desire always to be top dog, which was so characteristic of him, Von Bissing on one memorable occasion persuaded by a deliberate lie a young woman to be his guest who was as pure as he was vile.

The affair took place at a villa on the outskirts of Bonn, and the girl, whose home was at Liege, had come there to pursue her calling. Her parents were poor folk, but the girl had a beauty which may be described as fatal, and it attracted the licentious eye of Von Bissing when he went to make a purchase in the tobacco establishment where she was employed.

From that moment her fate sealed. Von Bissing pestered her with his attentions, waylaid her when she left business, and finally persuaded her to join himself "and a few friends at a quiet little dinner."

At first everything was in order, but as the wine commenced to circulate freely the girl found her ears assailed by coarse jests and when a move was made to the dancing hall she begged Von Bissing to take her home.

Flushed with the triumph he had achieved in securing such a beauty, and with the wine he had consumed, the man who later in life murdered Nurse Cavell and countenanced unspeakable atrocities, refused. He insisted that the girl should stay, endeavored to ply her with wine, and generally behaved like the brute he was.

When he left her for a few minutes to attend to some trivial matter the agitated girl sought the protection of a young captain in the Blue Hussars, and appealed to his manhood, only to find that she was in a hotbed of profligacy where no single man could be found to protect a defenceless girl.

Enamoured of her beauty, Von Bissing was so persistent in his attentions that, beguiled by a tongue skilled in every part of lovemaking and lying, the girl threw up her humble post, and was installed by Von Bissing in a pretty little villa. Then at last he tired of her, and within a year of making the acquaintance of the heartless scoundrel she had joined the great army of unfortunate women who eke out an existence in the [illegible] of Berlin.

This is only one of a score of disgraceful episodes of a similar character in which Von Bissing was concerned. Just as he was responsible for an innocent girl being driven to a life of shame, so, later on, was he the cause of husbands and wives being separated through his pestilent attentions to pretty women. Utterly selfish and lacking moral balance, he cared not a jot who suffered so long as his own base desires were gratified.

A PLOT THAT FAILED.

Whatever else may be said of him, however, Von Bissing was ambitious. He loved power, and he rode rough shod over any opposition which threatened to interfere with his military progress. He had many original ideas and a certain amount of brains, and he had a knack of bringing himself constantly before the public.

By the time he was on active service in Alsace he was known throughout Europe as a typical German tyrant, and while in Alsace he devised what he put up as an original plan to thwart a growing Socialistic tendency in the Fatherland. At that time Socialism in Germany meant absence of patriotic sentiment and [illegible], and Von Bissing's cunning scheme was to provoke a riot by some means or the other, and then to organize raids on all the Socialistic newspapers, in secretarial offices, as well as on prominent private workers, including Deputies to Parliament, and lock them up. He also intended to muzzle the press, close down "People's Houses" and similar institutions controlled by the Socialists. Every detail of the proposed raids and arrests were carefully worked out, and although the scheme was only an elaboration of one devised by Bismarck, Von Bissing was very proud of it.

Unfortunately for him, however, the plans were stolen and given to a Socialist newspaper, and published with [illegible] sarcastic comments. The disclosure of the scheme was worth thousands of votes to the Socialists at the next election, and so unpopular did Von Bissing become that he thought it expedient to retire from the public gaze for a time.

At that time the American Ambassador was straining every effort to get personal audience of the [illegible] Governor to intercede on behalf of Nurse Cavell, Von Bissing could not be found.

A NIGHT OF INFAMY.

Search was made high and low, and at last it was discovered that Von Bissing was on one of his periodical bouts of infamy. He was, as a matter of fact, carrying out another of those disgusting outrages which have made the names of certain German and Prussian officers stink in the nostrils of all decent-minded people, and on this particular night, when the life of a noble Englishwoman was hanging perilously by a slender thread, and when a word from him could have saved her, Von Bissing was nowhere to be found.

I had the terrible story of his whereabouts from the lips of one of the women in whose company he spent the time during which Dr. [illegible], the American representative, was making search for him.

She is a pretty Belgian woman, little more than a girl, at present resident in a London suburb, and working for a living as happily as can be expected of one who has gone through such a terrible ordeal. She was at the time of which I speak, the [illegible] bride of a Belgian (who was shot before her eyes in Antwerp), and was unable to escape. She, however, managed to reach Brussels, where her [illegible] lived, and it was here that both girls came under the notice of Von Bissing one afternoon as he was riding through the streets, accompanied only by an [illegible].

According to my informant's own pitiful story, Von Bissing had her and her sister followed to their little home. The same night a knock came to the door, and on the threshold stood Von Bissing, whom she recognized at once, and another man, both in mufti.

At that time the Governor had issued a proclamation to the effect that all allied soldiers hiding in Belgium must report themselves to the German authorities within 24 hours to be interned in Germany. Those who omitted to report themselves were to be shot, as well as all persons suspected of harboring them, and Von Bissing's tale was, when he visited my informant like a thief in the night, that she and her sister were suspected of harboring a French soldier.

Trembling with fear, she denied it and Von Bissing thereupon laughed drunkenly, and dispatched his companion with an order for several bottles of wine. When it arrived both girls were forced to drink, and Von Bissing were in less than half an hour in such a condition of reckless drunkenness that they were ripe for any unspeakable outrage.

Both girls, my informant told me, made frantic efforts to escape, and the sister screamed so much that Von Bissing, fearing lest his visit should become known, gagged her with a silk handkerchief.

Then ensued a scene so degrading that even the meagre details it is possible to publish will send a thrill of horror through the country. Both girls were ordered by these drunken scoundrels to divest themselves of every article of clothing, let down their hair and dance. So mad was the mood of the debauchers that to refuse might have meant certain death, so to the best of their ability in such dreadful circumstances they obeyed. Von Bissing and his friend kept drinking, and when they tired of the spectacle they bound the two girls to the bedpost and with their small military canes beat them over the legs and body.

Von Bissing and his friend stayed at the house for nearly five hours, and when the girls were untied from the bedpost my informant's sister made a mad rush to the window and hurled herself through. She was dashed to death in the courtyard below. Whether the dramatic act sobered the two brutes to some extent or not my informant was too agitated to remember. She fainted, and when she recovered consciousness Von Bissing and his friend had disappeared.

A STORY OF 1870.

Another story about Von Bissing shows him in the light of a pilferer. Almost as soon as he took over the military governorship of Belgium he made strenuous efforts to suppress La Libre Belgique. When a search was made for this elusive journal, which appeared one week in Brussels and another in [illegible], and was [illegible] delivered to the governor's palace, it always failed. Von Bissing offered £1,000 to anyone who would betray the printers, and successively increased it to £2,000 and £3,000, but without result.

The German police searched everywhere, but in vain, and the anger of Von Bissing knew no bounds when one number recalled an incident told by the late Sir W. H. Russell, the famous correspondent of the Times in 1870.

Describing the burning and sacking of the imperial chateau of St. Cloud, at which he was present, Russell declared that one of two German officers who were particularly active in pillaging, was Lieut. von Bissing, in whom La Libre Belgique recognized the Governor of Belgium.

Von Bissing offered £5,000 for the betrayal of the (to him) obnoxious publication, but without result.

HOW TO FEED FARM POULTRY FOR PROFITS

Egg Production Depends Largely Upon Proper Methods of Feeding, and Upon Egg Production, Especially Winter Egg Production, Depends the Profits—Any one Can Follow This Practical Advice.

One of the leading principles in poultry keeping is successful feeding for egg production. The number of eggs laid by a farm flock decides, to a very great extent, whether the flock is a source of profit or loss to its owner.

To obtain the best results from successful feeding the flock must be composed of well matured birds. These birds should be strong, healthy and vigorous when put in the laying pen in the fall of the year. Any birds that contract colds or other ailments should be removed from the flocks. This is essential to prevent disease from spreading.

Experiments have shown that birds lay more eggs during their pullet year period of usefulness. The farmer should see that the large majority of his flock is composed of pullets. To be exact, the flock of one hundred hens should consist of seventy-five pullets and twenty-five yearlings. The yearlings should be kept primarily for breeders, and the pullets maintained to serve as winter egg producers. The twenty-five yearlings should be selected during the laying season of the pullet year and, if possible, during the winter months. Those birds which are winter egg producers should be selected and leg banded and the remainder sold in June or July.

STIMULATING EGG PRODUCTION

The pullets should be forced to secure a large egg production, but the yearlings should be fed rather sparingly during the early part of the winter. High feeding would tend to stimulate egg production, and this is not desirable, as it affects the fertility of the eggs and also weakens the vitality of the chickens. The breeding yearlings should be fed liberally before the breeding season opens, to stimulate egg production. Hatching eggs should be available about March 15th, and mating should be done at least ten days before that date.

Egg production is largely controlled by the method of feeding. Abundance of litter should be scattered on the floor of the hen house. Even as much as ten to twelve inches is often advisable in order to provide exercise for the birds. The grains should be scattered in the litter, [illegible]. It is a good plan to stir the straw or chaff with a fork directly after feeding. If this practice is being followed the litter can be kept from forming into a compact state and the grains given be more incorporated readily in the loosened material. To secure her food the hen must work, and this is the best possible way of making the birds take their daily exercise.

The laying hen must have an abundance of good, palatable, nutritious food. A variety of feeds should be fed, as each kind of grain serves a different function in the production of eggs. Certain grains are known as heat producing foods, others serve to maintain and build up tissues and organs of the body, others furnish energy to carry on the various functions of the body, and still others to supply material for egg production. When it is understood that each kind of grain performs its special duty, the importance of variety can be readily appreciated.

It is a well-known fact that fowls prefer whole to ground grains. The larger part of the ration, therefore, should consist of whole grains. Such grains as corn, wheat, oats and buckwheat are used to a very great extent to supply the whole grain ration. Corn is an excellent winter feed, being a great heat producing food, and very appetizing. It has great fat producing qualities and should be fed with judgment. As the weather becomes warm in spring the amount of corn in the laying ration should be gradually decreased. Wheat is undoubtedly one of our leading poultry feeds. While good, sound wheat is preferable to any other grade, good results can be obtained by feeding shrunken or frozen wheat, provided the grain is not too badly damaged. It is often more economical to feed slightly damaged wheat than wheat of good milling qualities. Oats make a good poultry food when they are of good quality and contain a low percentage of hull. Poor oats should never be used for poultry. Whole oats may be fed either whole or crushed with good results. Buckwheat makes one of the best poultry feeds we have, but being a strong laxative feed must be fed with considerable judgment. It is high in flesh and fat producing qualities and can be fed to good advantage in the autumn and winter. Buckwheat should never be fed in spring or summer, and at no time should it constitute more than one-third of the laying ration.

The best laying ration we know of in whole grains is as follows: Two parts corn, two parts wheat and one part buckwheat or oats. Feeding should be done twice daily, early in the morning and about three o'clock in the afternoon. The grain should be thrown in the litter and enough fed in the morning to keep the hens busy for several hours. Feeding in the afternoon should always be done early enough to enable the birds to pick up a full meal before going to roost. Any grain which may remain in the litter over night will be picked up the following morning before the attendant makes his morning visit. The amount of feed required must, in all cases, be regulated by the attendant. No definite amount can be given from day to day. A good plan is to brush away some of the litter and see if there is any grain remaining before feeding. The litter should be free from grain at least once each day.

DON'T OVERFEED WITH WET MASH.

In addition to the whole grain ration already mentioned, some ground grains should be given. Such feeds as wheat bran, ground or crushed oats, middlings and cornmeal serve [illegible] as Blatchford meal, gluten meal and beef scraps, should be added to the ground grain ration. A good mash mixture is composed of as follows: Wheat bran, 200 lbs.; ground or crushed oats, 100 lbs.; middlings, 100 lbs.; middlings, 100 lbs.; cornmeal, 100 lbs.; beef scraps, 100 lbs.; Blatchford meal, 20 lbs.

This mash should be fed in a self-feeding hopper, which should be before the birds at all times. Before putting the mash in the hopper it should be thoroughly mixed. This mash can also be fed as a wet mash by moistening it with water or sour skim milk, preferably the latter. Care must be exercised not to overfeed with wet mash, as overfeeding causes laziness and a retarded egg yield. The wet mash should be fed in troughs and only what the birds can pick up in a very few minutes. When properly fed, wet mashes, due to their palatability, stimulate egg production. Dry mash feeding is more largely followed with large flocks, as by this method labor is minimized, but when the flock is moderate in size both methods could be followed with good results. Wet mashes should be fed every other day, or at least twice a week, for best results. The proper time for feeding this mash is at noon or shortly after dinner hour.

Beef scraps supply the animal food so necessary for maximum egg production. Green cut bone can also be used to good advantage providing it is fresh. Great care must be exercised in feeding green cut bone and very small quantities used. Overfeeding with cut green bone upsets the digestive organs and reduces the egg yield. Sour milk is also a good animal food and should be more largely used for poultry feeding.

During the winter months some form of green food must be supplied. Mangels, turnips, cabbage, sprouted oats, clover or alfalfa hay may be fed. Mangels are perhaps the best and should be fed if possible. Split the mangel in two and spike the pieces to the wall and the birds will consume large quantities of them. The same method can be used in the feeding of turnips or cabbage. Sprouted oats can be grown in a warm room or basement by soaking the oats for twenty to twenty-four hours in lukewarm water and then spreading them out in a layer about one inch thick on the floor. They must be kept moist and occasionally stirred to prevent moulding. As soon as sprouting commences they must not be disturbed but should be watered daily. Feed to the laying stock when about three inches in length. Clover or alfalfa hay, if of good quality, also makes excellent green food for laying hens and should be fed regularly, either cut and steamed or fed dry as litter, allowing the birds to pick off the leaves.

Oyster shells and grit should be kept before the birds at all times. Oyster shell is largely composed of lime from which the hens make egg shells, and grit aids in the process of digestion.

As the egg is composed largely of water it is very important that water or sour milk be kept before the birds at all times. The milk should be sour and thickened, and the water fresh for best results. If milk is used the drinking utensils should be kept perfectly clean.

To obtain the best results from feed and labor expended the birds must be properly housed. It is not necessary that the house be warm or costly, but it must be comfortable, dry, and free from draughts. These, together with plenty of light, are the essentials for poultry housing. Each bird should be allowed four to four and one-half square feet for Leghorns or other light breeds, and five square feet for utility breeds such as Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds or Orpingtons. The smaller the house, the more costly will be the housing problem. It has been found that hens can be most economically housed in lots of about one hundred. To accommodate one hundred hens the house should be twenty feet square. This gives the maximum floor space with the least possible outlay. The windows or curtains should be on the south side, and the roosts on the north wall.

Only by proper breeding, judicious feeding and comfortable housing can the highest egg yield be expected from any flock of laying hens.

Humors of Cleric's Life

During a ministry extending over twenty years I have heard some very strange remarks by parishioners (says a country vicar).

I knew very well in my first curacy, in a village in Lincolnshire, a woman whose daughter had been to the infirmary for a slight operation. On her return home I saw the daughter standing at the garden-gate with her mother.

"How do you do, Mrs. S——," I said, "And how is your daughter?"

"Good morning, sir!" she said. "Mary's a sight better, and she can breathe all right now, since the 'polypus' was taken out of her nose."

The vicar at that time was a very old man. He had been in the church forty-two years. During my last year there I was practically in charge of the services, but now and then, when he was able, he occupied the pulpit. His eyesight was bad, and he was altogether unfit to compose fresh sermons, so had to fall back on old ones.

One Sunday morning we were astonished with a discourse, as nearly as I can remember, as follows:

"We are standing to-day," he said, "face to face with a great power in Europe. We are on the verge of war." (Long pause.) "We are, urge—we are—we are on the brink of war with Russia. I—er—well, I mean we will now proceed to consider the next point."

In the vestry, after service, I asked him about this projected war, as I had seen nothing about it in the papers.

"That sermon," he said to me, with a very far-off look in his eyes, and a slight suspicion of a smile—"that sermon I wrote in 1854!"

On a certain occasion when the ring would not go on easily, the bridegroom said:

"[illegible]"

"I plight thee my troth" is very often transposed to "I plight thee my rote."

I am not answerable for the following, but it was told me:

A very haughty and dignified archdeacon was marrying his butler to his cook.

"Wilt thou have this woman to be thy wedded wife?" he said.

"Thank you, sir!" he replied, [illegible] with his forefinger, "Thank you, sir! After you, sir!"

A very rapid extempore preacher was discoursing on the subject of Jonah in the whale's belly; but his tongue got tied up, and he said "[illegible]." Instantly correcting himself, he said: "Of course, I mean in the belly of the whale!"

I was once guilty of making a horrible blunder in reading the First Lesson on the night when the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah is related. The words are that the Lord rained upon them "brimstone and fire" from heaven. But, for some unaccountable reason, I said "brimstone and treacle" from heaven. It is always best to go straight on when you make these slips, as probably not a dozen people would detect the mistake.

There is a story told of a Cambridge undergraduate who had to read the lessons in chapel. He was young and nervous. The lesson was Gad's interview with David, and David's reply to Gad was partly at the bottom of one page and partly on the top over the leaf. It was printed thus:

"And David said unto"—then, turning over the leaf—"Gad, I am in a great strait."

In his confusion he added the word [illegible] as he turned over the leaf, and so read the sentence thus:

"And David said unto Gad, G.D., I am in a great strait!"

One Saturday, in a certain remote country, I had to bury a man who evidently belonged to some sect, as a large number of men followed the coffin.

On the way to the grave a man stepped up to me and asked me to say a few words after I had read the burial service. "He was a great pal of mine," he said, "and a right down good sort."

I did say a few words [illegible]

Had Pneumonia

DR. WOOD'S
NORWAY PINE SYRUP
CURED HIM.

A cough is an early symptom of pneumonia. It is at first frequent and hacking, and is accompanied with a little tough, colorless expectoration, which soon, however, becomes more copious and of a rusty red color, the lungs become congested and the bronchial tubes filled with phlegm making it hard for the sufferer to breathe. Males are more commonly attacked than females, and a previous attack seems to give a special liability to another.

On the first sign of a cold or cough you should get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent the cold from developing into serious lung trouble.

Mrs. E. Charles, North [illegible], writes: "Two years ago my [illegible] a very bad attack of pneumonia [illegible] doctors said he was going [illegible] A friend came in to see [illegible] to get Dr. Wood's Norway Pine [illegible] I got three bottles, and they [illegible] quite clear his chest of the phlegm, and now he is fine and well.

I shall never be without it in the house as it is a very valuable medicine."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

The genuine is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—Wholesale trade is better than for last week, while the crisis which confronted industries through a scarcity of coal has been relieved for a time by liberal shipments during the week. The railway situation is still a depressing influence on general trade, although the immediate danger of shutdowns has been removed. Dry goods wholesale houses report increases, and while dress-goods are behind last year, gents furnishings, carpets, woollen goods, etc., show increases, placing the general trade in a satisfactory condition. Current orders are fair. Hardware lines are only seasonably active, as February is normally a quiet month. Grocers are only moderately active. Country collections are good, and city payments are fair.

Montreal—The railway congestion is less acute than last week, although manufacturers are still handicapped by the inability to get raw materials, and wholesalers and jobbers find it impossible to get deliveries of goods expected several weeks ago. Wholesale trade is fairly good, and travellers are already sending in satisfactory orders for fall delivery while current orders are fair. All manufacturers of textiles are behind in their deliveries, but wholesalers are satisfied to take goods whenever they can get them, in consideration of the appreciation in value in the meantime. Fur dealers report that stocks are well cleaned out. The hardware trade is seasonably quiet. The tea market was steady at last week's advance, and the general grocery trade is fair. Leather is firm, with the small stocks holding values steady. Collections are fair to good.

Ottawa—Better communication has resulted in heavier orders from salesmen. Wholesale trade is fair; furs have been fairly active for the season, and stocks are well cleaned out. Commercial obligations are being fairly well met.

Hamilton—The coal situation is less acute than it was a week ago, as a lessening of the blockade at the frontier has made it possible for local industries to secure fairly good supplies. Wholesalers state that spring trade looks exceptionally good. Liberal orders are being shipped out, and autumn orders are already coming in. Hardware lines are seasonably quiet. The building trade is rather inactive. Money is plentiful, and collections are well up to normal.

London—Western Ontario trade conditions are quite satisfactory, and the outlook for the 1917 crop is very promising. Wholesalers have shipped good spring orders, and buying for fall requirements has been satisfactory from the wholesale points of view thus far. Country trade is good through Western Ontario, and payments are good.

Winnipeg—Mercantile business is fair. Spring goods are being received by the jobbers and wholesalers, and the business community is preparing to meet an active inquiry for spring commodities. Payments are good, especially in the country.

Calgary—Business conditions in Alberta show a great deal of improvement over the same period of last year. Retail trade is fair, and most of the better firms have considerable stocks of goods bought at lower prices. The buying movement is quite well sustained.

Vancouver—Retail trade is holding up well, and the general feeling in trade circles regarding the future is one of optimism. Collections are more satisfactory, and the volume of business is quite satisfactory to wholesalers and jobbers, as well as to the retail trade.

Quebec—Wholesale trade is showing up favorably, dry goods are fairly active, wholesale and retail, other lines are up to the average. Collections on the whole are fairly satisfactory.

MILBURN'S
LAXA-LIVER PILLS
THEY NEVER FAIL TO DO GOOD.

Mrs. J. Shelleworth, Halifax, N.S., writes: "I take pleasure in writing you concerning the great value I have received by using your Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a sluggish liver. When my liver got bad I would have severe headaches, but after using a couple of vials of your pills I have not been bothered with the headaches any more."

"Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills clear away all waste and poisonous matter from the system and [illegible] as well as cure all complaints arising from a liver which has become inactive."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

CANADIANS to-day have the opportunity of helping to win the war by investing in the third Canadian War Loan. Every $100 counts.

THE people of New Brunswick have voted out their Provincial Government because it could not present a clean record. Any Government with "Bob" Rogers as a member stands in danger of a similar fate.

THE difference between the Ontario Government and the Ontario Opposition is this: the Government concedes reforms when these can no longer be resisted, while the Opposition advocates reforms until it creates the body of public opinion which forces the Government to move.—Globe.

IT is no longer assumed that as a matter of course the newspapers will give gratis of its space to promote the interests of this "cause" and that "charity" and such publicity is now purchased as a matter of good business, as an investment yielding gratifying returns.—Printer & Publisher.

THE epidemic of measles that raged throughout Ontario for the larger part of last year proved to be the most severe known in the province since the compilation of records was commenced. In an average year there are from 4,000 to 5,000 cases of measles, but during 1916, 22,000 cases and 227 deaths were reported. Spinal meningitis was the most fatal disease, 66 per cent of the cases reported ending fatally.

PHILADELPIA housekeepers opposed to the high cost of living hope to improve things by not pouring oil on the troubled waters, but by emptying their little vessels of kerosene on meats, fish etc., exposed by dealers who put on baloon prices on their goods. For finding out odd ways of doing things it is not easy to outdo an ingenious female. For a real Quaker City this must give the business men quite a shake.

AT the Fairs and Exhibitions convention in Toronto, Mr. E. J. Bushell, manager of the Kingston Fair, during the discussion upon the president's report, made an illuminating statement, in saying that when he took over the management "his fair board was spending $70 in advertising and there was a deficit." "Last year," he said, "we spent $600 in advertising and the business of the fair showed an increase of 400 per cent., and there was a surplus." Argument like that and proof like that need no auxiliary comment in order to show that it pays to advertise.

SENT UP FOR DISLOYAL TALK

For the first time in the history of Wellington County a citizen appeared before the Magistrate last Wednesday charged with the serious crime of sedition. The defendant, Alexander Stewart, a Canadian born citizen of Scotch parentage, 52 years old, is a prosperous farmer of Minto township living about a mile from Harriston. He was given a preliminary hearing and committed for trial at the coming Spring Assizes. In the meantime he was released on [illegible] bail.

The alleged offence was committed at the public market place at Harriston on Thursday, February 1.

The chief witness on behalf of the crown was John Rowland of Walkerton, a well known drover, and there was but one other person present, a young farmer named Pridham.

Was Too Good For Soldiers

The following is the text of the charge laid against Stewart: That on February 1, at Harriston, he spoke seditious words with the intent to cause dissatisfaction and discontent among his majesty's subjects and promote public disorder, to wit, when referring to a certain load of old rags then present, "No doubt they'll make them up for clothes for the soldiers, (meaning thereby the soldiers of the crown) and its too damn good for them at that" and then referring to the said soldiers, "They're only a lot of bums and loafers and I have to help keep them." And further, when questioned as to what he had done, "I would not send any of my sons to fight for England." And further in answer to questions as to whether he did not know that England had protected him and given him all the liberties and freedom and that he ought to be ashamed to talk so, he said, referring to the said soldiers, "I can fight my own battles and get along without the old country or any of the soldiers helping me, because they are no good."

Corroborative Evidence

The evidence offered by Mr. Rowland and Mr. Pridham was corroborative in every particular, and the conversation alleged to have taken place was started by Stewart, who did not know Rowland, and that he had two sons at the front. Stewart has three sons, none of whom are in khaki. Stewart admitted saying some of the things attributed to him, but declared that he had reference in his remarks to some who had enlisted around Harriston, whom he said were anything but creditable to the town. Nicol Jeffrey, counsel for the defendant, took the ground that Stewart was in the habit of passing jokes in a serious manner, and that this was one of them, but both witnesses declared he appeared very much in earnest. Mr. Rowland wrote the facts to the militia department some time ago, and the matter was turned over to Col. Sherwood, Dominion Commissioner of Police, who took it up with the attorney-general's department at Toronto, and Col. MacDonald, county crown attorney, laid the information.

Rev. Dr. Minifie, Belgium Relief Agent, preached at Knox Church Sunday night.

Rev. Father Granottier, of Owen Sound, passed away on Friday last. He was aged 81 years and had resided in Owen Sound for the past 55 years where he was revered and respected by the whole community.

BILLY McDONALD TOO MUCH FOR 'EM

The following sketch of a well-known Liberal member, Wm. McDonald, of Chesley, member for North Bruce, appears in the Sunday World from the pen of Tom King:

The boy that makes them all sit up is William McDonald, Liberal member in the Legislature for North Bruce. He may not be as able as McGarry or as brilliant as Dewart, but if he writes half as well as he talks, his newspaper, the Chesley Enterprise, deserves a big circulation. He spoke on the address on Tuesday night and there was never a dull minute from beginning to end. He affects a quaint delivery which adds immensely to the force of his speech. Indeed no verbatim report could do him justice.

Mr. McDonald does not think much of our "Castle of Folly" in Rosedale, which he wants turned into a home for returned soldiers. Speaking of the coal famine he said:—

> "The university is closed, schools and factories are shut down, the people are borrowing a bucket of coal at a time from their neighbours, but the upper ten of Toronto and Hamilton can always toast their tootsies at the fine hot radiators at Government House.

Mr. McDonald thinks it wrong to gamble, and that all people who gamble should be treated alike. If a boy plays marbles for keeps, he told the house, a policeman takes him down to the jail, but if the boy grows up and starts a big gambling house called a race track he may aspire to the highest honor of the state. Mr. McDonald is also a strong prohibitionist, and thought it a shame that all the Toronto Daily papers for years published liquor advertisements. If he wanted his boy to go to hell, he said, he would tell him so privately, but he would not give him that advice through the columns of the Chesley Enterprise. The Enterprise had never had a dollar off the booze, but he realized that big city papers needed a lot of money to keep them up. He was glad that the Globe, Star, World, Mail and News saw the error of their ways, but could not understand why the Telegram still ran liquor advertisements.

> "I cannot understand (he said), why a man big enough to refuse a knighthood and a senatorship in one day should be weak enough in his old age to fall down and worship at the shrine of Bacchus."

Mr. McDonald has a way of pausing two or three times during the delivery of a sentence, before he gets to a period, and at the rest places he is often greeted with laughter. He uses this device to draw an unsuspecting opponent to close quarters, and then to give him an upper cut. He got in a neat one on the suffrage question the other night. The dialogue ran something like this:

> Mr. McDonald—There is a woman in my home town who is [illegible] years old, and has the rheumatism (laughter). Yet up to August 1, had knit 175 pairs of socks for the soldiers at the front. (Applause.)
> Sir William Hearst—Is she a Tory?
> Mr. McDonald—Yes, she is a strong and consistent life-long Tory.
> Sir William Hearst—I thought so. (cheers from the Government benches.)
> Mr. McDonald—Yet if Mr. Rowell sat in your seat he would give that woman a vote. (Applause and laughter from the opposition.)

OUR WESTERN LETTER

Written for the Telescope
By an Old Bruce Boy.

March came in here as a gentle lion. On the first of the month the clerk of the weather seemed undecided whether to order wind or snow so we got a little of both, finishing up with a small snow fall during the night. The weather since has been ideal. I have heard and read many tales of persons being lost in blizzards on the prairie. I now realize how easily this could happen. Some two weeks ago I started for town some nine miles distant. I had just got nicely away when it came on to snow very heavily with a strong wind further North West and I was travelling East. In a short time the snow got so heavy I could hardly see the horses and there were no signs of the fences on either side of the road. When I left the broken partly wooded country and started across the open valley I could see nothing. The snow drifted my eyes full as fast as I could dig it out. I had on a heavy fur coat, but it felt as if it were split down the back to the waist and the wind was blowing right through me. The horses could not leave the road as it was heavily drifted on both sides but I felt as if they were going off to the right all the time. I reached town all right but didn't try to go home till next day. I heard later that a neighbour started that day for the south end of Snake Lake (a small lake south of here.) He had got on the lake when the storm hit him. His horses left the track and he drove round on the lake for four hours before he found shelter.

A lot of our young men have gone or are in training to go to the Front. A lot also have gone across the line to escape service. Where will they be if Uncle Sam comes in and conscription is ordered in the U. S. A.? These people who didn't think Canada was worth staying with or fighting for in her day of trial should be kept out in the future. A country that isn't worth fighting for can't be worth much as a home. Prohibition seems to be working all right in this part of the Province. I haven't looked for any blind pigs so haven't found any, but we have some neighbours who would nose out whisky if there was any and none of them have been able to get next to a boot leg. One neighbour had some Indians working for him last fall. On a certain Saturday night these members of one of Canada's first families became uproariously drunk. Our friend started a strict investigation hoping he might find the source and so replenish his own jug. What was his chagrin to find the drunk had been engineered on flavouring extracts bought at the grocer's.

Alex McDonald of Ontario, Oregon writes,—We could not get along without the Telescope. It is like a letter from home.

Advises The Use Of "FRUIT-A-TIVES", The Famous Fruit Medicine.

MR. ROSENBURG
[illegible] Cargrain St., Montreal,
April 20th, 1915.

"In my opinion, no other medicine in the world is so curative for Constipation and Indigestion as "Fruit-a-tives". I was a sufferer from these complaints for five years, and my sedentary occupation, Music, brought about a kind of Intestinal Paralysis—with nasty Headaches, belching gas, drowsiness after eating, and Pain in the Back. I tried pills and medicines of physicians, but nothing helped me. Then I was induced to try "Fruit-a-tives", and now for six months I have been entirely well.

I advise any one who suffers from that horrible trouble—Chronic Constipation with the resultant Indigestion, to try "Fruit-a-tives", and you will be agreeably surprised at the great benefit you will receive". A. ROSENBURG.

WAR LOAN

DOMINION OF CANADA

Issue of $150,000,000 5% Bonds Maturing 1st March, 1937

Payable at par at Ottawa, Halifax, St John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary, Victoria, and at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

INTEREST PAYABLE HALF-YEARLY, 1st MARCH, 1st SEPTEMBER.

PRINCIPAL AND INTEREST PAYABLE IN GOLD.

ISSUE PRICE 96.

A FULL HALF-YEAR'S INTEREST WILL BE PAID ON 1st SEPTEMBER, 1917.

THE PROCEEDS OF THE LOAN WILL BE USED FOR WAR PURPOSES ONLY.

THE MINISTER OF FINANCE offers herewith, on behalf of the Government, the above-named Bonds for Subscrip- tion at 96, payable as follows:—

10 per cent on application;
30 " 16th April, 1917;
30 " 15th May, 1917;
26 " 15th June, 1917.

The total allotment of bonds of this issue will be limited to one hundred and fifty million dollars, exclusive of the amount (if any) paid for by the surrender of bonds as the equivalent of cash under the terms of the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915.

The instalments may be paid in full on the 16th day of April, 1917, or on any instalment due date thereafter, under discount at the rate of four per cent per annum. All payments are to be made to a chartered bank for the credit of the Minister of Finance. Failure to pay any instalment when due will render previous payments liable to forfeiture and the allotment to cancellation.

Subscriptions, accompanied by a deposit of ten per cent of the amount subscribed, must be forwarded through the medium of a chartered bank. Any branch in Canada of any chartered bank will receive subscriptions and issue provisional receipts.

This loan is authorized under Act of the Parliament of Canada, and both principal and interest will be a charge upon the Consolidated Revenue Fund.

Forms of application may be obtained from any branch in Canada of any chartered bank and at the office of any Assistant Receiver General in Canada.

Subscriptions must be for even hundreds of dollars.

In case of partial allotments the surplus deposit will be applied towards payment of the amount due on the April instalment.

Scrip certificates, non-negotiable or payable to bearer in accordance with the choice of the applicant for registered or bearer bonds, will be issued, after allotment, in exchange for the provisional receipts.

When the scrip certificates have been paid in full and payment endorsed thereon by the bank receiving the money, they may be exchanged for bonds, when prepared, with coupons attached, payable to bearer or registered as to principal, or for fully registered bonds, when prepared, without coupons, in accordance with the application.

Delivery of scrip certificates and of bonds will be made through the chartered banks.

The issue will be exempt from taxes—including any income tax—imposed in pursuance of legislation enacted by the Parliament of Canada.

The bonds with coupons will be issued in denominations of $100, $500, $1,000. Fully registered bonds without coupons will be issued in denominations of $1,000, $5,000 or any authorized multiple of $5,000.

The bonds will be paid at maturity at par at the office of the Minister of Finance and Receiver General at Ottawa, or at the office of the Assistant Receiver General at Halifax, St. John, Charlottetown, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg, Regina, Calgary or Victoria, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

The interest on the fully registered bonds will be paid by cheque, which will be remitted by post. Interest on bonds with coupons will be paid on surrender of coupons. Both cheques and coupons, at the option of the holder, will be payable free of exchange at any branch in Canada of any chartered bank, or at the Agency of the Bank of Montreal, New York City.

Subject to the payment of twenty-five cents for each new bond issued, holders of fully registered bonds without coupons will have the right to convert into bonds of the denomination of $1,000 with coupons, and holders of bonds with coupons will have the right to convert into fully registered bonds of authorized denominations without coupons at any time on application to the Minister of Finance.

The books of the loan will be kept at the Department of Finance, Ottawa.

Application will be made in due course for the listing of the issue on the Montreal and Toronto Stock Exchanges.

Recognized bond and stock brokers having offices and carrying on business in Canada will be allowed a commis- sion of three-eighths of one per cent on allotments made in respect of applications bearing their stamp, provided, however, that no commission will be allowed in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by the surrender of bonds issued under the War Loan prospectus of 22nd November, 1915, or in respect of the amount of any allotment paid for by surrender of five per cent debenture stock maturing 1st October, 1919. No commission will be allowed in respect of applications on forms which have not been printed by the King's Printer.

SUBSCRIPTION LISTS WILL CLOSE ON OR BEFORE THE 23rd OF MARCH, 1917.

DEPARTMENT OF FINANCE, OTTAWA, March 12th, 1917.

THE STAR OF HOPE

In the Garden of Eden
The Star of Hope arose
With promise of salvation
From all Satanic foes.

And all along the ages
This Star of Hope hath led
God's people looking forward
To Christ, our living head.

Enoch, Noah, Abraham,
And holy men of old
Relied upon that promise
More precious than gold.

This Star of Hope beamed brightly
Through generations all,
From Eden's garden shining
Even unto Bethlehem's stall.

Where Christ, the Lord of glory
Was in a manger laid.
An angel told the story
To men that were afraid.

"Fear not" replied the angel,
"Glad tidings I do bring.
The Babe laid in the manger,
Is God's annointed King."

His reign is everlasting,
His kingdom hath no end,
May we for our salvation
On Christ alone depend.

For under the whole heavens,
No other name is known
By which we gain salvation
But Jesus' name alone.

News About Town

In a letter to Mr. John Cunning- ham of Enniskillen, Pte. Albert Condy refers to the particularly cold weather that has prevailed in France the past month. He was greatly tickled to see Chester Cunningham the other day, the first boy from home that he has met since he enlisted in a Western Battalion and started off for the Front last year.

Waller Bros. yesterday loaded three carloads of turnips at this station to be shipped to New York. The price paid—40 cents per bushel of 50 lbs.—was probably the highest figure realiz- ed for turnips in the history of this country. But, compared with the price of potatoes in Toronto—$3.65 per bag—the turnips are not too expensive even at the above figure. The big ho- tels chefs cook our turnips and serve them up under a high-sounding name and the public never suspect that they are eating turnips from the Township of Carrick—Mildmay Gazette.

Cold February In France

Ed. Eidt writes from France.—We have had very cold weather the past month, everything frozen hard as iron with just a little snow here and there in the hollow. The nights have been clear and moonlight—bright as day. But its mighty cold up on the guns these days. I have a big black dog- skin coat and the scarf mitts sent me from home, and lots of heavy socks so I'm O.K. for the cold. It's showing signs of Spring over here now. It thawed to-day and to-night it's quite warm. We'll have some more wet weather but will be issued with rubber boots again I hope.

More About Lottie

Since publishing the article in re- gard to Miss Lottie Tillotson, we have been in touch with the Dominion Immigration Office in Ottawa, and we find that Miss Tillotson never saw Hawaii, where she was supposed to have spent years. Moreover, in enter- ing Canada she declared that she was born in Quebec, whereas she was born in Uncle Sam's domains. The result is that she has so compromised her- self that if she ever dares to set foot on Canadian soil again a notice to the local police office or to the Immigrat- ion Office in Ottawa will ensure her prompt deportation. The probability is that for a time at least she will exer- cise her peculiar talents in church circles on the other side of the bound- ary line rather than on this side.—Christian Guardian.

Never Had Such Success Before

W. A. YACKELL, Ingersoll, Ontario, says:

"In the Spring I purchased 3½ tons of fertilizer from the Homestead a- gent. I never had such large yields or as good grain since I have been farming.

At intervals through the fields, where the fertilizer was not sown, I could see a vast difference in both quantity and quality of the grain. Am intending to use more this season and can certainly recommend Home- stead goods to intending purchasers as I believe they are the best on the market."

Well Paid

JOHN KIRBY, Stratford, Ontario, says:

"I used 300 pounds of Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on my root crop and had the best crop of roots ever grown on my farm. I was certainly well paid for the money I invested in this fertilizer."

A Great Difference

ANGUS ARMOUR, Dorchester, On- tario, says:

"I used the Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on my oats last Spring, and am well satisfied with it. I purchased a ton from a local agent, which sowed about 10 acres of the 15 acre field, and I could see a great difference on what was fertilizer from what was not. I have no hesitation in recommending it for oats or wheat, as I sowed it with wheat this Fall."

FARMERS ASK PLEBESCITE

On Reciprocity Question—So They Unanimously Agree at big Toronto Gathering—Brant Delegate Makes Suggestion on which All Unite.

One of the local delegates to the United Farmers Convention at Toron- to has furnished the Telescope with the following well-written report.

The third Annual Convention of The United Farmers of Ontario met in Toronto last week and in point of numbers and enthusiasm the conven- tion was far and away the best this young organization has ever held. On Thursday afternoon, the second day of the convention, St. James' Parish Hall was packed with 800 earn- est and enthusiastic delegates to dis- cuss and consider the proposed plat- form of the Canadian Council of Ag- riculture, and to listen to addresses from the men from the West who are making themselves felt in their west- ern organizations. It would be im- possible in an article like this to give even a synopsis of all the splendid addresses delivered at the convention. T. A. Crerar of Winnipeg, President of the Grain Grower's Grain Co., told of the growth of his Company from its organization a few years ago, and to-day its business has so expanded they employ a staff of 190 in their head office, paid their share-holders a seven per cent dividend and also paid a 9650 war tax last year. H. W. Wood Pres. of the United Farmers of Al- berta, a big man with a big heart, a- mong many other good things declar- ed that the farmers were not organiz- ing with the intention or for the purpose of other necessary and useful interests, but for the purpose of seeing that the farmers get a square deal. Kenneth McKenzie, Sec. of the Can- adian Council of Agriculture, (an or- ganization that is intended to repre- sent all the Agricultural Organiza- tions from the Atlantic to the Pacific) is another big brainy man from the West. Are you adequately represent- ed in public affairs? he asked. Are your interests looked after in parlia- ment? The politician comes around at election time and tells you you are the back-bone and sinew of the country, and that is truth, but do you know that in this agricultural country, where agriculture is the most impor- tant industry, in a parliament of 149 members there are 14 farmers. The proposed platform of the Canadian Council of Agriculture consists of some 12 or 13 clauses. The first five or six relate to the Tariff, and call for the immediate reduction by one half on all British imports, and a gradual reduction so that complete free trade with the Mother Country be reached in five years.

Clause 2, calls upon the Dominion parliament to accept the Reciprocity offer of the United States made in 1911 which is still open for acceptance, and it was around this clause that the most of the discussion took place.

Delegate after delegate arose some of them avowing themselves Tories, some Grits, but all in favor of the clause, but afraid if it were adopted it would wreck the United farmers of Ontario. E. C. Drury of Barrie de- clared with vigor, that if Reciprocity was good in 1911 it was good to-day, and if it had not been be-clouded and be-deviled by the politician of both sides it would be in operation to-day. He was willing to tack on a rider to the clause condemning the G. T. P. and New Market Canal fool schemes if that would do any good. Brant's delegates did not take as active a part in the discussion as some others, but if it is just possible that this conten- tious clause would have been under discussion yet, had not Herman Monk arose and moved, that Clause No 2 be adopted and that the Dominion Gov- ernment be not "requested" but in- structed to submit the question to the people in the form of a Referendum. This was carried by a unanimous standing vote, and with cheering and applause from all parts of the crowd- ed house.

The remaining planks of the plat- form which call for a direct-tax on all unimproved land. Tax on incomes over $4,000, Abolition of patronage system, Publicity of Campaign funds, Federal franchise for women in Prov- inces where they have the franchise, were all adopted.

A meeting of the Shareholders of the United Farmers Co-Operative Co was held on Friday. This is a joint stock Co. whose stock is held either by individual members of the United farmers of Ontario or by Clubs. They are capitalized at $10,000, have $5,000 subscribed, $1,000 paid up, and did a business of $152,000 last year. That's some business said Mr. McKenzie in commenting of the Manager report. I'd like to see any business concern doing $152,000 business on $4,000 Capi- tal.

A Resolution was passed to increase their Capitalization to $250,000. The Board of Directors is composed of such men as E. C. Drury Simcoe Co, C. W. Gurney of Brant, J. J. Morrison Wellington, W. C. Good Brant, Wm. McCrea Wellington, R. H. Halbert Dufferin, and other prominent far- mers.

No Listening On Phones

Listening on party telephone lines and repeating the conversation thus overheard is to be a punishable offence, according to legislation to amend the Ontario Telephone Act introduced by Hon. I. B. A Vegetable Garden for Every Home

IN this year of supreme effort Britain and her armies must have ample supplies of food, and Canada is the great source upon which they rely. Everyone with a few square feet of ground can contribute to victory by growing vegetables.

Four Patriotic Reasons for Growing Vegetables

1. It saves money that you would otherwise spend for vegetables.
2. It helps to lower the "High cost of living."
3. It helps to enlarge the urgently needed surplus of produce for export.
4. Growing your own vegetables saves labor of others whose effort is needed for other vital war work.

The Department of Agriculture will help you

The Ontario Department of Agriculture appeals to Horticultural Societies to devote at least one evening meeting to the subject of vegetable growing; manu- facturers, labor unions, lodges, school boards, etc., are invited to actively encourage home gardening. Let the slogan for 1917 be, "A vegetable garden for every home."

Organizations are requested to arrange for instructive talks by practical gardeners on the subject of vegetable growing. In cases where it is impossible to secure suitable local speakers, the Department of Agriculture will, on request, send a suitable man.

The demand for speakers will be great. The number of available experts being limited, the Department urgently requests that arrangements for meetings be made at once; if local speakers cannot be secured, send applications promptly.

The Department suggests the formation of local organizations to stimulate the work by offering prizes for best vegetable gardens. It is prepared to assist in any possible way any organization that may be conducting a campaign for vegetable production on vacant lots. It will do so by sending speakers, or by supplying expert advice in the field.

To any one interested, the Department of Agriculture will send literature giving instructions about implements necessary and methods of preparing the ground and cultivating the crop. A plan of a vegetable garden indicating suitable crops to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free of charge to any address.

A PUZZLING CASE

Stay! I was astonished; not at seeing him there exactly, but at the idea that instead of remaining in seclusion after the tragedy of the previous night, he had ventured out into society so soon. Upon my word, considering how he professed to love Mazzucata, it was hardly decent, but the young men of the present day have no hearts, nor palates, either, seeing they appreciate neither women nor dinners to the extent which such delights demand. Now, when I was a young man—but there, I must digress no longer, but come back to the story and to Gilbert, who, as I said before, was seated in the writingroom looking at an envelope he had just addressed.

So absorbed was he in his own thoughts that he did not notice me when I entered, and as we had the apartment to ourselves, I determined to try the effect on him of a little surprise. Evidently he was thinking of the Mazzucata tragedy, so if I suddenly asked him about the Black Carnation, he would be so startled that he might blurt out the truth, whatever it was, about that ridiculous flower. My interview with Dallas had put me on my guard against giving a man time to collect himself and tell lies, so I judged it wisest for my purpose in this instance to startle Tressinger, and, so to speak, bounce all he knew out of him. Having thus made up my mind I stole quietly behind him and sharply uttered the cabalistic words used by Dallas an hour previous.

"What about the Black Carnation?"

Such a cry as he gave I never heard before and I trust I never will again for it made my blood curdle to hear it as he sprang to his feet with a horrified face.

"Major Granby," he gasped at length, "Major Granby!"

Being an old soldier, I have always my wits about me, and therefore seeing he was more upset than I bargained for, I touched the bell and ordered a glass of cognac when the waiter appeared.

"Major!" said Gilbert, again recovering himself with an effort, "what do you mean?"

"About the Black Carnation?"

He put up his hands to his face with a kind of groan and fell back in his chair as though in a faint. I own I was much puzzled at this extraordinary behavior, and would have spoken at once so eager was my curiosity, when, fortunately, the brandy arrived. Having sent the waiter out of the room, I took the glass in my hand and approached Gilbert, who still remained seated in the arm-chair, with his face covered.

"Here, my boy, take this," I said, in a kind tone, for I felt sorry for the way in which I had startled him. "Drink it down and you will feel better."

With a sigh, he removed his hands from his face and took the glass, the contents of which he drained at one breath, then looked up into my face with a forced smile which he strove to render as careless as possible, but the attempt was not successful with me.

"Well, Major Granby, you rather startled me."

"So I see, but why should my remark startle you?" I asked, looking at him sharply.

"Because I did not know you knew anything about the Black Carnation."

"Nor did I until this morning."

"Who told you about it?" asked Gilbert, nervously.

"Dallas."

"Dallas!" he repeated with a start, "the fellow to whom you introduced me last night?"

"The same."

"And what does he know about the Black Carnation?"

"I am not aware of the extent of his knowledge. I call on him this morning, and when I was going he said: 'Ask Tressinger about the Black Carnation.' What he meant I do not know."

"I know, however," muttered the young man, thoughtfully; "yes, I know, so I have no doubt she told him also."

"Who told him and what?"

"Mazzucata told him about the Black Carnation."

"What is the Black Carnation?" I asked, desperately curious regarding this mysterious flower.

Tressinger hesitated a moment and looked steadily at the carpet, then raised his eyes and met my eager gaze.

"I don't know why I should not tell you," he said, at length, in a low voice; "it is a flower."

"An artificial flower?"

"No, a real flower."

"Rubbish! whoever heard of a Black Carnation?"

"No one; but it exists for all that."

"I don't believe it."

"I do! I must, because I have seen it."

"Seen a Black Carnation! You are joking, Gilbert."

"Upon my word of honor I am not. I have seen a natural carnation as black as your hat."

"Dyed or painted?"

"No! grown by nature."

"Impossible. Nature does not indulge in such freaks."

"Perhaps not often, but in this case she has created a black flower."

"Well," said I impatiently, "whether this flower be natural or artificial, what has it to do with the death of Mazzucata?"

"It was a sign that she was to die."

"Why? did she belong to a secret society?"

"I don't know."

"Do you belong to a secret society?"

Tressinger looked at me in some surprise at my question.

"I? No! Why do you ask?"

"Oh, because—because—well, I hardly know how to explain myself."

"Major Granby," said Gilbert, after a pause, during which he eyed me keenly, "you seem to take a great interest in the death of Mazzucata."

"Yes, I do. I want to know who killed her."

"And your reason?"

"Not a very worthy one. I have detective fever."

"In this instance I would advise you not to have detective fever."

"In Heaven's name, why?"

"Because you will never find out who killed Mazzucata."

"You, too!" I cried curiously; "why, Dallas said exactly the same thing to me."

"Dallas said the same thing," rejoined Gilbert, with lively interest; "why, what has he to do with it?"

"That's just what I wish to find out."

My companion rose to his feet, and took a few turns up and down the room with a perplexed look on his face.

"I can't conceive why Dallas should say that," he muttered, after a pause; "he cannot suspect her."

"Her!" said I, overhearing this remark, which was not meant for my ear, "oh, it is a woman, then?"

"No, no! certainly not," replied Gilbert, sharply; "who said such a thing?"

"Dallas, then you."

"What! did Dallas say that the crime had been committed by a woman?"

"Well, he hinted as much, and now you——"

"I! I said nothing, I meant nothing, it was a slip of the tongue."

"Slips of the tongue sometimes tell more than the most carefully prepared speech," I observed, with a sagacious nod of my head.

"I wish you would stop talking like a sphinx," cried the young man, in an ill-tempered tone, resuming his seat. "What do you mean by all this questioning?"

"I wish to find out who killed Mazzucata."

"Then you never will find out."

The agreement of Dallas and Tressinger on this point puzzled me greatly, and it seemed as though I were likely to learn as little from this latter as I had done from the former, which, in desperation, I determined to appeal to his love of life by showing him the perilous position in which he stood.

"Listen to me, Gilbert," I said, gravely, laying my hand on his shoulder; "I knew your uncle intimately and promised him before he died to do all I could for his nephew. The time has now come when I can do a great deal—that is, if you will be plain with me."

"What do you want me to tell you, major?" he asked, in a wondering tone.

"Tell me all about Mazzucata and this Black Carnation."

"To what end?"

"Because I want to find out who killed this woman, and it seems to me that there is a clue to be found in this flower you speak of."

Tressinger remained silent for a few moments in deep thought, and then spoke out plainly.

"I will tell you all I know, but I am afraid it will neither solve the mystery nor go any way towards elucidating it. I know no more than you do who killed Mazzucata."

"You know that it is a woman."

"No, I do not, it is only my fancy."

"Then why are you and Dallas agreed on this point?"

"Dallas puzzles me," said Gilbert, evading the point of my question, "and I cannot conceive why he should make any mention of the Black Carnation."

"Confound you and this Black Carnation. What does it all mean?"

"I wish I knew. However, I will make you as wise as I am myself, and then you can draw your own conclusions."

I waited impatiently for the story, and seeing this he began without further preamble, which was just as well seeing that my curiosity was bringing on a fit of bad temper.

"I met Mazzucata some six months ago at Monte Carlo, where she was then singing. You know I was brought up to be a singer, and have studied at Milan, so on being introduced to her she took a great interest in me on this account. From interest we rapidly passed into a state of affection for one another, and from thence to ardent love. I really believed she loved me truly. Oh, yes, I know what you are going to say, that she had many lovers before she met me. I am aware of all that—she told me all about her past life, and believe me, major, she was not so bad as people make out. Every singer's reputation is at the mercy of a scandal-loving public, and because my poor Marietta disregarded the conventionalities she laid herself open to censure, therefore her fair fame suffered, but I believed in her, despite all scandal, and would have made her my wife, had she lived."

"Dallas also."

"I know all about Dallas' infatuation. He met her eighteen months ago in Italy, and persecuted her with his attentions, but beyond accepting such attentions as a pretty woman is accustomed to receive from a man she gave him no encouragement. Still notwithstanding her coldness, he persisted in his suit and offers of marriage, so she promised to give him an answer when he returned from his tour in the east. Meanwhile she met me, and as I tell you, we fell in love with one another; she promised to become my wife when we heard that Dallas had returned."

"You heard yesterday, I suppose, for he only told me he only came back to town in the morning."

"Exactly, ill news travels fast, you know. Well, she was going to tell him to-day that she intended to be my wife, when the catastrophe of last night occurred and robbed me of the woman I adored."

He buried his face in his hands, much affected, and respecting his grief, I remained sympathetically silent until he recovered himself.

"But what has all this to do with the Black Carnation?"

"Everything; listen. Marietta would not tell me anything of her girlhood, and to this day I am absolutely ignorant of her name."

"It is Mary Magullan, according to Dallas."

"Mary Magullan," he replied, scornfully, "that is a lie she told Dallas to keep him quiet, but it is not her real name, for she told no one, not even to me. No one knows her real name, least of all, Dallas, and my knowledge of her life does not extend further back than her debut in La Scala three years ago as Marietta Mazzucata."

"She is Irish."

"Yes, I am aware of that, but I don't know which part of Ireland she came from."

"Do you know if she had any enemies?"

"Not that I ever heard of, but she must have had some unknown enemy, for on several occasions she told me she would die a violent death, and would receive a warning in the shape of a Black Carnation."

"Which you saw?"

"Well, to tell you the truth I did not believe there was such a thing in existence as a Black Carnation, but she assured me there was, and that she would receive one and be killed shortly afterwards."

"Well, did she receive the warning?"

"Yes! two days after she arrived in England I called at her hotel, and without a word she handed to me a flower, which was nothing more than a carnation, coal black. She then said she would be killed shortly, but refused to tell me any more, so I know nothing of the person who sent her the token, or who killed her."

"Didn't such a warning unnerve her?"

"Yes! she was in a terrible state of mind, and wanted to forfeit her engagement. Indeed she did so, and was going back to Paris to-day with me, when we were to have been married at once."

"But why did she sing last night?"

"The manager persuaded her, and she told me that she felt safe on the stage, as no one could kill her before a thousand people. Yet you saw what happened. Oh, the demon who killed her, if I could only find out who it was!"

I took his hand and comforted him as well as I was able. "We will search for the assassin of Mazzucata together, Gilbert."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.
Number Two.

Discarding the theory that Dallas murdered Mazzucata out of sheer jealousy, I firmly believe that she met her death at the hands of an emissary of some secret society, and that the Black Carnation was the official notice of her death. My reasons are as follows:

She was Irish, and therefore likely to be connected with some organization for the purpose of freeing her country.

She refused to tell Tressinger from whom she expected the token of a Black Carnation, and was doubtless sworn to secrecy, on that and other points.

She duly received the fatal token and expected her death.

She was killed by an infernal machine, which is plainly the method employed by secret societies.

The explosion took place in public so as to show all other members of the society that nothing could protect them from death if they once incurred the wrath of their organization.

CHAPTER IV.

My conversation with Gilbert afforded me much food for reflection during the next few days, as it tended rather to deepen than to solve the mystery of Mazzucata's death. I must own that the episode of the Black Carnation seemed to favor the idea that she had fallen a victim to the vengeance of a secret society. This being the case, as I now began to believe, my suspicions regarding the criminality of Dallas were set at rest, and I sought him out with the idea of securing his co-operation in hunting down the dastardly assassin who was guilty of this wicked crime.

On calling at his rooms, however, I found that he had departed from town for a few days' rest, being, as his valet informed me, quite unnerved by the opera house catastrophe. His servant was unable to give me further information, so, considerably disheartened by this unforeseen absence of Dallas, I came away in a very downcast frame of mind.

It was now nearly a week since that tragic occurrence, but up to the present no arrest had been made in connection with the crime, and it seemed as though the mystery would never be solved. It is true that the papers notified the public that the police had a clue, which would undoubtedly lead to the discovery of the assassin, but the papers always make that statement, though, in nine cases out of ten, it is quite untrue. Scotland Yard, infallible as it deems itself to be, knew nothing further than that Mazzucata had been killed by the explosion of an infernal machine, while the curious episode of the Black Carnation, which might have given them a key to the riddle, was quite unknown to the authorities.

As to Gilbert Tressinger, he and I had many conversations together about the tragedy, but neither of us could come to any satisfactory conclusion, and, indeed, differed considerably in our theories on the subject, for while I leaned to the opinion that it was the work of a secret society, he thought it more likely to be the outcome of some circumstance connected with the unknown girlhood of the singer.

Things were thus at a standstill when I inquired for Dallas and found this matter, for my detective fever was more virulent than ever. I went straight to Gilbert's house in Curzon street, with the idea of ventilating a theory, which I had lately formed concerning the Black Carnation.

Gilbert was engaged with some visitor in his drawing-room, so I took my seat in the smoking room, which was very comfortable, and read the morning papers. While thus occupied, I heard the sound of voices raised in anger, and became aware that Gilbert and his visitor were having high words. Only a thin wall divided the rooms, and though I could not make out what they were fighting about, I heard a word here and there which roused my curiosity considerably. One of the voices was Gilbert's, the other that of a woman, and it was this latter that seemed to be the noisier of the two. First imploring, then wrathful, this woman seemed to be urging Tressinger to do something against his will. That it was connected with the opera house crime I knew perfectly well, for I twice caught the words "Black Carnation" pronounced by the woman in a menacing tone of voice.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson X. March 11, 1917.

Jesus the Bread of Life.—John 6: 22-40.

Commentary.—I. Seeking for Jesus (vs. 22-29). 22, 23. On the day following the feeding of the five thousand, a part, at least, of the multitude desired to see Jesus again. They saw that he did not enter the boat to go across the sea with his disciples, and they expected to find him on the east side. 24. They also took shipping—Boats had come across the sea from Tiberias, a city built by Herod Antipas on the west side of the Sea of Galilee and made by him the capital of his province. These boats were used by the people in going to the west side of the sea in their search for Jesus. They landed in the plain of Gennesaret, a few miles south of Capernaum. Seeking for Jesus—Their search was to be richly rewarded, but not in the manner they were expecting. 25. Rabbi—Master, teacher. When camest thou hither—Their seeking for Jesus was prompted largely by curiosity. This question shows that they were living upon a low plane. "They expect something miraculous. Christ does not gratify their curiosity. If the feeding of the five thousand, which they had witnessed, taught them nothing, what good would it do them to hear of the crossing of the sea?" Cam. Bib. 26. Verily, verily—This word repeated has the effect of a solemn oath. Jesus is about to rebuke them for their unworthy motives, that he may lead them to something vastly higher. Not because ye saw the miracles—The miracle had been wrought primarily to convince the people of the Messiahship of Jesus and secondarily to relieve hunger. They who had asked Jesus the question were not affected by the first consideration, but were by the second. The sign, the miracle in itself had not appealed to them, but the plentiful supply of food had. Because ye did eat of the loaves—This would be a severe charge for one who was merely human to make, but Jesus the Son of God, saw clearly the motives of those who had questioned him, and his judgment of them was absolutely correct. They were seeking for material benefits. There are multitudes in that class to-day. If there is any material advantage to them in being religious, they are ready to be known as Christians. They have no conception of spiritual blessedness. They mind earthly things and are wholly unconcerned respecting spiritual values.

27. Labor not for the meat which perisheth—Jesus would not have us indolent or neglectful of our physical needs. He would have us diligent to provide for our households, but this should not be our chief concern. That meat which endureth unto everlasting life—He urged upon the people the necessity of giving first attention to the interests of the soul. This is in full harmony with his words recorded in Matt. 6: 33. The meat spoken of here is spiritual sustenance, grace, salvation. Which the Son of man shall give—The benefits which Jesus urges his hearers to seek would come through himself alone. Him hath God the Father sealed—The Father attested, or authenticated, the Messiahship and Sonship of Jesus by the prophecies of the Old Testament, by the voice from heaven and by the miracles which were wrought by him. The recent miracles east of the sea, which they had witnessed, sealed this great truth. 28. What shall we do—The attention of the people had been drawn from the material to the spiritual, to some extent, at least. They wished to know what works they might perform to secure the "meat" that would endure to everlasting life. 29. This is the work of God—This is the work God would have you do. This should absorb your interests and employ your energies of soul. Believe on him whom he hath sent—The work of God is to believe on his Son. To do this one must turn away from his sins, submit himself fully to the divine will and receive Jesus by faith into his heart and life. This will accomplish such a change in one that he becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus. This fact will free him from condemnation, and as he walks in the light, it will bring to him the cleansing of his heart from all sin (1 John 1. 7.) It is by a steady and continuous faith in Christ that one is kept pure in heart.

II. Asking for a sign (vs. 30-34). 30. What sign shewest thou—Christ's hearers understood from what he had said that he claimed to be the Messiah, and they asked for a sign as a proof of the correctness of his claim. They did not consider the miracle of feeding the five thousand sufficient. "As Jesus claimed the right of teaching them, and as it was manifest that he would teach them differently from what they supposed Moses to teach, it was natural to ask him by what authority he claimed the right to be heard."

—Barnes. 31. Our fathers did eat manna in the desert—Reference is made to the supply of food the Lord gave to the children of Israel during their forty years' wandering in the wilderness. They who were questioning Jesus would have it understood that Moses gave the manna, and yet he was not the Messiah; and Jesus must give a greater sign than that or they would not believe in him. He gave them bread from heaven—Moses was divinely appointed to lead Israel to Canaan, and through him he communicated with the people, but it was the Lord who provided the manna and not Moses. 32. Moses gave you not that bread from heaven—Their statement was wrong in two particulars. In the first place, it was the Lord that gave the supply of food. In the second place, it was food for the body that was given in the wilderness; while the Father, was offering the world that which would nourish the soul, "the true bread from heaven." 33. The bread of God is he which cometh down from heaven—That which feeds the soul, imparting and sustaining spiritual life, is the bread of life, but the direct statement is not made until a little later. 34. Evermore give us this bread—This petition was based on a low conception of what Jesus was offering them. "Whatever miraculous supply he has at command, they would like to receive, not transiently, like the great repast, but permanently—evermore."—Whedon. This request reminds us of the water that Jesus offered her, she would be glad to have it, so she would not be obliged to come to the well to draw (John 4:15.

III. Jesus the bread of life (vs. 35-40). 35. I am the bread of life—In v. 33 he spoke of himself in the third person, and now he speaks unmistakably of himself, using the first person. Jesus is the bread of life, not only because of his life-sustaining power, but also because he gives life. The manna of which his hearers had spoken satisfied only bodily needs temporarily, but Jesus satisfies spiritual needs eternally. He that cometh .... he that believeth—The conditions upon which Jesus gives himself to the individual are that he leave all other systems of religious trust and come to Jesus as his only support and believe in him with all his heart. Soul hunger and soul thirst are fully met in Jesus. 36. Ye also have seen me, and believe not—Their opportunities had been great, for they had heard his instructions and had seen the miracle which he wrought on the other side of the sea. "They had even seen him, and yet did not believe on him," is the sense of the passage. 37. All that the Father giveth me shall come to me—Those who come at the call of God, he is representing here as giving to Christ, because it is through his blood alone that they can be saved. God, by his spirit, convinces of sin righteousness and judgment; those who acknowledge their iniquity, and their need of salvation, he gives to Christ, that is, he points out to them the Lamb of God who takes away the sin of the world.—Clarke. I will in no wise cast out—This is a precious promise and it has comforted myriads of sin-burdened souls as they have looked to Jesus. 38-40. It is clearly the will of the Father that all shall come to his Son, and to those who thus come he will impart life, spiritual life; and those who receive and retain this life shall be raised up at the last day and shall be forever with the Lord. He wills the highest good of all.

Questions.—Who were trying to find Jesus? What reason did Jesus give for this desire to see him? To what did Jesus seek to call their attention? Why did they ask for a sign? What did Jesus tell them to do if they would please God? What did the people say about manna? What did Jesus mean when he said that he was the bread of life? Quote a rich promise contained in the lesson. On what conditions will Jesus become the bread of life to us?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Imperishable food.
I. The gift of God.
II. Received by faith.

I. The gift of God. Christ's knowledge of the human heart was shown in exposing the false motives of those who followed Him. He did not pronounce it wrong for the multitude to feel the cravings of nature or to rejoice in the miraculous supply afforded them in the desert. They were not rebuked for following Him. The defect was in their lack of spiritual perception and the desire for eternal life. They were moved by their stimulated appetites without any gratitude or devotion. They did not recognize the Giver in the bread, nor the Bread of life in the Giver. Jesus rebuked excessive attention to the body in the neglect of the soul. He proclaimed the essential superiority of the food which endures. He gave a striking and just representation of Himself. He revealed Himself plainly as the Bread of life. He intimated that there was in Him that, which if properly received, would communicate eternal life. He passed gradually from figure to reality. From the miracle of the loaves the multitude would gladly have received Him as their king. They would have headed an uprising to make Him such, but on being informed directly of His divine origin and His mission to earth, and that they must believe on Him as their Saviour from sin, they demanded further evidence. The difficulty was not that the Messiah's origin should be mysterious, the popular opinion was that when Christ came no one could know from whence He came. The Jews supposed they knew exactly who Jesus was, the son of Joseph and Mary. His mission could not undo the impression made on their minds by the circumstances of His life at Nazareth. He was still but the carpenter's son. Jesus did not utter His words to meet the moral difficulties present in their minds. He pressed His claim, that of having been sent into the world by the Father to perform a specific work. He asserted that it was not Moses, but God who fed the people with manna. Hence there could be no comparison between Moses and Jesus. The bread of life was not limited to one people, but offered to the whole race of mankind. Jesus proceeded to speak of His Father's placing His people in the care of His Son as the Mediator. God the Father was declared to be the Author of the plan of salvation. Jesus claimed a power within Himself to constrain wanderers to return to God.

II. Received by faith. Jesus urged the supreme importance of motive in religion, the transcendent value of the salvation of the soul and that faith in Himself which would lead to eternal life. He declared that believing in Him is the greatest of all works, the comprehensive summary of all true work. The requirement to believe on Him comprehended a full consent to be saved by Him. It was this simple and implicit trust which created the difficulty. They imagined there was some higher work yet to be done than any commanded by the law of Moses. They believed themselves to be prepared to do whatever needed to be done. Jesus saw the spiritual nature of man in all its priceless capacity, and to this he addressed himself when he bade his hearers eat of his flesh and drink of his blood. He would have them understand that the true aim in life is not the attainment of material good, but the attainment of spiritual life in him. To feel his love, to do his will, was the aim in life worthy of their pursuit, worthy of the nature with which their Creator had endowed them. The very purpose of Christ's mission to earth, his teachings and miracles, his sufferings and death, was that he might give himself to the hungering heart of humanity. Belief in him consists of the turning of the soul to righteousness. Inner conviction determines action. Believing is the inner process, work is the outer process. Belief is the motive, work the result. Belief is the cause, work is the effect. Faith in Christ is God's appointment as the sole means of salvation. The primary element of all true faith is simple reliance on the gospel testimony that Christ is all sufficient for the purpose of salvation. The amazing love of the Father appears in choosing and drawing guilty men to be saved. Every stage of the believer's life confirmed the comforting fact that "God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world." The Father sends his Son to men, and men to his Son.

TRUST IN THE FUTURE.

I know not what the future hath
Of marvel or surprise,
Assured alone that life and death
His mercy underlies.

And so beside the Silent Sea
I wait the muffled oar;
No harm from Him can come to me
On ocean or on shore.

I know not where His islands lift
Their fronded palms in air;
I only know I cannot drift
Beyond His love and care.

BE YE HOLY.

Except a man be born again, he cannot see the kingdom of God.—There shall in no wise enter into it anything that defileth.—There is no spot in thee.

Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy.—As obedient children, not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance: but as he which hath called you is holy, so be ye holy in all manner of conversation; because it is written, Be ye holy; for I am holy. And if ye call on the Father, who without respect of persons judgeth according to every man's work, pass the time of your sojourning here in fear.

Put off concerning the former conversation the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and be renewed in the spirit of your mind; and that ye put on the new man, which after God is created in righteousness and true holiness.—He hath chosen us in him before the foundation of the world, that we should be holy and without blame before him in love.

I GO AWAY.

Whoever expressed surprise that He did not live till seventy? The days of our years are threescore years and ten. Kings marry early, and full provision is made by the nation for succession, so that the throne may be secure. But here is a meteor flash, a comet's sudden arrival, and sudden eclipse. We hear the infant cry; we see the youth at 12, we follow the lone passenger on the road for a little. They cry "Hosanna" one day; they cry "Crucify Him" in another, and then He is gone.

Yet He is the burden of prophecy, the inspiration of the generations, the Promised King. Let us pause. Why is He so scanty of time, space and means? Where is the money power, the ruling-power, King-craft, priest-craft, the worldly display, the jealousy, trickery and graft. He who is the author of time, why did He not take more? He who owns the cattle on the thousand hills, why did He not use the means?

Look again: Men look for big things, big fortunes, loud fame, long life, great eloquence, great influence, great reputation, daring heroes, noble statesmen, bold travellers, patient builders. The world of men may be compressed into three grades: Having, Doing, Being. "To get good is animal; to do good is human; to be good is divine." The noblest workers of the world bequeath us nothing so great as the image of themselves. Goodness, beauty, and truth count more than grey hairs, landed estates and huge families. The worth of life is not determined by what a man has, or what he does, but by what he is. Quality counts before quantity; the high ends of a holy life have but slight relation to time. "Years cannot mellow the life already ripe, or purify the perception already clear, or lift the aspiration that already is acquainted with heaven."

Who shall tell us the true meaning and mission of time? It is not to live a long life, not to found a family, not to make a fortune, not to eat so many dinners, but to step into the portal, to rest for a while in the vestibule, to listen to the whispers at the gate. "Take care! Repent! Decide! Make fast!" Measure the breadth of your hand, how short, mark the moving cloud, how fleet, see the vapors rise and how they vanish. Time is a ship launch, how soon the ship sails away, to be seen no more. Time is an initial step, a solemn trust, an introduction to something more. It does not stand alone, it is for God, it gives us a chance to say, how do you do and then to say good-bye.

Look at the model man. He died young. While He lived, he lived! He showed His purpose, His Spirit, His dignity, His consecration. His plan of life was clear. How was He straightened until it was accomplished! His birth was not a beginning. His death was not an ending. There was nothing broken off. He did not go all away. He left a Presence and a Power to soothe, to inspire, to maintain. He guided the eyes that they might see. Here, it is a vision, of His people, there, it is a Reality which abides.

Time hears the lispings of the infant, Eternity the eloquence of the man. Here the fair face is marred with tears; there the eternal beauty shines with undiminished lustre. Here the light shines in the darkness; there it shines where there is no night for evermore.

Poultry World

DRESSING FOWL FOR FANCY MARKET

Three essentials embracing condition, temperament and treatment contribute to a fancy-dressed fowl. To begin with, it must be shapely, plump and reasonably well developed. Skinny, gawky, "crooked-breast" turkeys and and flat-breasted geese are undesirable in any market. Minimum weight for turkeys should be 10 pounds for pullets, 12 pounds for gobblers and 14 pounds for geese. The Hebrew, who is particularly partial to the latter, desires it fat as a butterball. The rendered surplus oil is indispensable in his cuisine.

The experienced raiser meets the specification of fat by sorting his flock. Discarded fowls are later forwarded to the large city markets, which accept them at good prices at any time during the season. Two killings are time-savers, but excuse themselves financially.

MUST BE CHILLED.

All dressed stock must be thoroughly chilled. Veteran shippers recall that markets of 20 years ago demanded the removal of the viscera. Modern critics declare that the undrawn turkey or goose from which all animal heat has been completely expelled is more sanitary. Perfect chilling is absolutely necessary. All handling of slaughtered fowl must cooperate with that aim. The day selected should be cold to expedite refrigeration. This is accomplished by hanging the fowls as soon as dressed in a shady, cool place. A shed or room with raised windows is handy.

A precaution particularly helpful and necessary in preserving stock is attention to emptying the food-tract. Food must be denied fowls long enough for crop and intestines to be well emptied, otherwise, keeping qualities are endangered. An amateur who with true beginners' luck had a sightly flock of turkeys, was to find that they had failed to classify in spite of care dressing. She learned that upon their arrival the fowls had discolored breasts. The crops, distended with food, had soured, an uninviting spectacle for would-be purchasers. Turkeys more than any other fowls require this precaution. They should be penned without food or water for at least 12 hours before killing.

After carefully winnowing his flock the raiser can still defeat his object by careless dressing. Skinned and torn fowls, chafed from rough handling, peppered with pin-feathers, escape the designation "fancy" by a wide margin, no matter how shapely or tenderly plump originally. Of all fowls, turkeys stand less rough handling, such as being piled upon one another, dragged across tables, hung in sunshine, etc. The fact is, marketing poultry successfully consists of a series of stages, each important in itself.

THE IDEAL WAY.

The ideal way for killing is clear and cool. Warm or humid weather fails to chill stock so thinly. It tends to sweat, a feature operating against cool, firm meat on arrival at destination. No heat should be allowed where they are plucked or handled. Purple blotches often noticeable on plucked fowls are due to bruising while alive. Turkeys should be caught in the open quietly, without undue crowding of the flock, one to a picker. A heavy cord looped around the legs suspends it from a nail on a horizontal pole midway of the [illegible]. Locked wings prevent the bird beating itself. A sharp narrow-bladed knife thrust into the roof of the mouth brings the death dealing hemorrhage, which should be copious. Poorly bled fowls are purplish-tinted. At once quill and tail feathers are drawn. Upon cessation of bleeding, while the body is still warm, experts rapidly remove the feathers, a few at a time, with an upward jerk. Pulling them down towards the head, or in great bunches is apt to tear the flesh. The few pin feathers left by capable pickers are removed by some skillful person with a blunt knife. A small ruff of neck feathers and the wing tips are undisturbed. The fowl is now ready for the final embellishment, cleaning the mouth and bill by mopping, and washing of the feet.

Perfect chilling is necessary, but stock should not be allowed to freeze. In packing the stiffened legs snap like pipe stems. If perchance they thaw their keeping qualities are impaired not to mention loss in looks.

TREATMENT FOR GEESE.

It is usually possible to market all the goslings simultaneously. In sections where goslings are relieved of their fine feathers periodically every seven weeks fattening is noted to hold a close relation to featheri. The full-fledged goose is most dependent with a keen appetite; denuded of its plumage it be ravenous. [illegible] process of feathering and fattening proceeds to. Hence, the practice of putting goslings in the fattening pen one week after the first picking. In four or five weeks they are full plumaged, rolling in fat. Held longer, th condition.

The stage of feathering has mate bearing upon the dressing of a goose. When it is and the new crop fully grown propitious period. Before or after a crop of pin-feathers must be ed with and it is these myr tiny downy points that are the ed product.

Water and corn should be re from the pen the night before. are killed similarly to turkeys, one each picker. When dead, the wings are cut off at the first joint and an experienced person scalds each in a tank boiler. A good method is to imm it three times, briefly, allowing water to saturate the oily plum. After it has been wrapped in a burlap bag and allowed to steam a minute or two, the picker begins to clean breast, back and neck in turn. The small feathers and down are saved, afterwards dried and sold. If in plucking the flesh accompanies the feathers in chunks, the goose has been scalded too long, or in too hot water, usually the former. On the other hand, if too much down remains, the water was too cold, or the goose killed at the wrong period. Scalding is an exact art, and it should be attended to by a careful person. When plucked, the goose is "plumped," being dipped once more in hot water, then in cold. The beak washed, and hung to chill by the head or bill.

PACKING FOR SHIPMENT.

Barrels are preferable to boxes for carrying poultry, since they are tight and easily procured, handled and packed. The shipper first assures himself that his fowls are absolutely cold, also, he has taken care that his shipment shall not encounter a halt on account of the Sabbath intervening, or reach market on a holiday. He has infallible weather forecast, and it is to his advantage to see that his poultry travels to its market in quickest possible time. All raisers within a day's freight of the best markets are advised to have their poultry in the hands of their merchants seven days before holiday to avoid a belated arrival.

The shipper has two definite aims: to put as many in a barrel as possible and to pack firmly that no chafing takes place in transit. Straw tucked between the fowls makes a good packing medium.

A turkey with wings locked, head bent around upon the wing, and knees flexed, occupies least space. Geese pack more easily because of their short legs. Wrapping the heads with paper assists in preserving their looks.

Conscientious shippers sort their fowls, putting poorly-dressed torn or deformed ones in a separate barrel, so designated. This stimulates good treatment upon the part of the merchants and facilitates sales.

The methods described in the foregoing paragraphs have been practiced for many years in certain sections noted for their fine poultry and are largely responsible for that reputation. There is really no reason why anyone so disposed may not market fancy dressed poultry.—Myra Kelsey Moss, in Buffalo News.

HAD WEAK HEART

FARM GARDEN

FARM FEEDS—THEIR VALUE.

It is important that the stock keeper possess a clear understanding of some of the common laws of nutrition, as well as a general knowledge of feeding stuffs, their chemical and nutritive importance, so that he may feed his animals economically.

In all feed stuffs are found water, ash, protein, carbohydrates and fat. From a nutritive or feed standpoint, their value is determined mainly by the various percentages of these compounds.

WATER AND ASH VALUES.

The animal consumes water either in a fluid state, or when combined with feeds more or less solid. Water is valuable in the process of digestion, absorption and assimilation. Its main mission is to flush out the intestinal tract, and assist in regulating the temperature of the body.

Stockmen have found that a saving is effected by warming the water during the cold months of the year for such animals, like the dairy cow, that are by nature poorly protected.

Where the feed stuffs are in a green condition like fodder corn, or pasture grass, or have been preserved in such a way as to hold most of the water formerly present, as in silage or the various root crops, they are known as succulent feeds. Even when the feed stuffs have been air dried, some water will still be retained, as is shown by analysis. Succulent feeds add palatability to the ration, and when fed to supplement dry foods a more thorough digestion is effected, due in part to the increased flow of digestive juices in the alimentary tract. Consequently, at seasons when animals are being kept on dried feeds alone, if some succulent feed is added to the ration, results are secured which cannot be accounted for by the addition of the actual feed nutriments it contains.

Professor Campbell, of the Maine Experiment Station, says animals will in the natural course of feeding be supplied with sufficient mineral or ash constituents.

Usually the only mineral fed directly to animals is common salt. Salt fed regularly and in limited quantities, also as a condiment, gives the animal a keen appetite and stimulates the secretion of digestive fluids. The animal skeleton is largely composed of lime and phosphorous in the form of calcium phosphate.

PROTEIN, CARBOHYDRATS AND FAT.

The most expensive compound found in feeding stuffs is protein, and it is the only one which contains nitrogen.

There is no other compound that will take the place of protein. Protein may, however, when fed in excess, do the work of carbohydrates and fats, but at a greater cost. Protein is an essential part of the body cells and must therefore be fed in quantities sufficient to satisfy the needs of the animal; at the same time, on account of the expense involved it is very desirable that only the minimum amount required shall be fed.

A cow giving a large flow of milk requires more protein than she does later when the flow has decreased. When an over-supply of protein is fed, the excess nitrogen becomes a waste product and passes off through the kidneys in the form of urea, and the remaining portion of the protein is used to take the place of carbo-hydrates or fat.

The word carbohydrate is used to denote a compound composed of crude fibre and nitrogen-free extract. Fibre is the woody portion of the feeding stuff. It is less digestible than most other parts of the feed. The nitrogen-free extract may be considered as the total dry substance of the plant less the ash, protein, fibre and fat.

Common examples of carbohydrates are the starches and sugars. A feeding stuff containing a large amount of carbohydrates in comparison to the protein is called a carbonaceous feed. Corn is typical of this form of feed stuff. Carbohydrates are used in the animal body to supply heat or energy—energy being a synonymous term with heat—and for the building up of the body fat.

The fat contained in feeding stuffs serves to create heat or energy when this is not taken care of by the carbohydrates, and also furnishes material for storing body fat. Fat contains the same elements as the carbohydrates, viz., carbon, hydrogen and oxygen, but varies in the proportion of hydrogen and oxygen. Fat also has a greater heat value than carbohydrates. When equal portions—by weight—of fat and carbohydrates are fed to animals it has been found that the fat furnishes at least two and a quarter times as much heat as the carbohydrates; or, in other words, it will do two and a quarter times as much work. Fat also has a soothing effect upon the digestive tract, and helps to keep the animal in good condition. Fat, when considered as a whole, may be said to be composed of several fats varying in amount and in melting point. For this reason the tendency of butter to come soft or hard may be influenced by the kinds of feed fed to the cows. The man who is producing bacon needs to feed his hogs on such material that the bacon will be hard when it is cured.

ROUGHAGE AND CONCENTRATES.

The term "roughage" indicates coarse feeds—where the whole plant is used either with or without the seeds. The term "concentrates" includes feeds in which the seed or a part of the seed is used, either whole or ground. Roughages are usually thought of as carrying small amounts of the digestible nutrients when compared with the concentrates.

The term "digestion coefficient" means the percentage a nutrient that is actually utilized by the animal, and is determined by actual experiments with animals.

The digestible nutrients are those portions of the food which are digested or utilized by the animal. The amount of digestible nutrients are found by taking the analysis of a feed stuff and multiplying the amount of each compound by its respective digestion coefficient.

It is the digestible food nutrients which must concern the feeder of live stock. In making up his feeding rations he must take into account not only the amount of food material actually required for the maintenance, but also for the work the animal may be called upon to do, such as the production of milk, meat or the drawing of a load.

The digestible nutrients of a food stuff are not a true measure of the nutritive value to the animal. The mastication, digestion and assimilation of food materials actually requires a certain amount of work on the part of the animal. The more work or energy that is expended in this way, the less there is left for the other uses of the animal. That which is left is termed the "net energy." This net energy is used by the animal in the work performed by the heart, lungs and other internal organs. If a fair surplus remains after satisfying the maintenance requirements, it may be used for the production of fat, growth, wool, milk or work. It is readily seen that a pound of digestible carbohydrates in corn is worth more to the animal eating it than is a pound in oat straw, because but little energy will be expended by the animal in handling the corn, while the oat straw will call for a considerable amount to handle it. This should not, however, lead the stockman to discard the roughages from the feeding ration. Animals require a certain amount of fibre and dry matter. The heat evolved as a result of the work required in the digestive process helps to keep the animal warm, and the bulky ration is less likely to cause digestive troubles.

FARM NEWS AN VIEWS.

Manure from the barnyard and hen house are both valuable as top dressings. Orchards and permanent pastures will be made to produce much more if manure is judiciously applied. Here judgment must be exercised in the work, for some crops will not stand heavy top dressing, while others will be benefited by all you can give them. Garden and asparagus cannot be manured too heavily, and the writer has never known an apple or pear tree to be injured by a heavy application in the orchard, but has seen cherry trees killed by it. Celery likes a very rich soil, but dressings of manure are detrimental. If you do not know how much to give, dress lightly and increase as it seems advisable. Better a little less than they will thrive under than too much. In wet seasons manure does not hurt plants so much as in dry seasons.

Don't put your horse in at night covered with mud and water. Don't leave your horse standing in the stable several days at a time without exercise. Don't drive fast when starting on long trips. Don't feed soft corn or new oats or other feed which will cause colic. Don't have your stables dark. Let a little sunlight in, for it is the best-known preventive of disease.

In a series of tests in feeding Western lambs, the Indiana Experiment Station found that lambs fed in a well ventilated barn ate the same amount of feed and made the same gain in weight as those fed in an open shed. Lambs fed in a barn were of softer flesh and were valued 10 cents per 100 pounds less than those fed in an open shed. The profit per lamb was 94 cents per head in a barn as compared with $1.04 per head in an open shed. Although feed was high in price, the margin in value of feeding and fat lambs was sufficient to insure a satisfactory profit on the operation.

Self-boiled lime-sulphur for spraying peaches and stone fruits on which ordinary lime-sulphur will injure the foliage is made as follows: Put eight pounds of pure stone lime in a 50 gallon barrel and add just enough water to start slaking. When it is well warmed add eight pounds of powdered sulphur and enough water to keep the lime slaking. Stir thoroughly until the lime is slaked and the solution becomes a creamy mass. Fill the barrel with water and let it stand for a few minutes; then stir and strain into the spraying tank. It should be used full strength.

MAIZE; INDIAN CORN.

Greatest of American Food Products—Something About It.

Corn is such a commonplace, ordinary sort of thing and so uninteresting to most city-bred people that perhaps few realize just how important is the role it plays in the economic well-being. Some of the most striking facts, as brought out in an article by Edward Albes in the Bulletin of the Pan-American Union, Washington, may surprise some. For instance, the United States produces three-fourths of the entire corn crop of the world. In 1916 the country's production amounted to 3,054,535,000 bushels, having a farm value of over $1,755,860,000. When it is stated, moreover, that if we add the value of the record-breaking wheat crop of 1915, amounting to $930,302,000, to the value of the big cotton crop of the same year, amounting to $602,393,000, the sum of the two still lacks $223,165,000 of reaching the value of the humble corn crop, some idea of the importance of the last-named may be had.

The history of the great cereal is dealt with by the writer of this article, was well as its manifold uses as a food for man and beast, as a beverage and as an important factor in many kinds of manufactured products. Relative to its origin, the writer introduces the subject by a brief disquisition about man's teeth, which show that he is both carnivorous and granivorous, and continues:

"Rub off the thin smooth thin veneer of civilization and place him in the primitive environment of his remote ancestors, man will prove to be about the same animal. His elemental nature has undergone but little change. Doubtless his brain has been developed and his mental machinery somewhat improved, but his complicated physical structure is but little altered. To keep that physical structure in good repair and to keep the entire human machine in a high state of efficiency, man has found that he needs a variety of food. As a consequence he has from time to time discovered new things that are 'good to eat,' things that contain the chemical elements in one form or another that he needs to replace the tissues of nerve, muscle, bone and fat—the brain and brawn—that are wasted during his day of activity. Meat contains some of these elements, as do nuts and fruits, but the greatest food, those upon which the greatest number of men depend, are the grains, the one most recently made known to what we are pleased to call the 'civilized' world, is the one given to it by the Americas, viz., Indian corn, better known beyond the confines of the United States by the name of 'maize,' the spelling of the word varying somewhat in the several languages into which it has been incorporated.

"That maize was unknown to European, Asiatic and African peoples before the discovery of America is now well established. Aside from the testimony of Humboldt, Darwin and others, the matter of the origin of maize was finally settled by the celebrated Swiss botanist, Alphonse De Candolle, who, after sifting all the evidence, makes the statement in the revised 1882 edition of his 'Origin of Cultivated Plants' that 'maize is of American origin, and has only been introduced into the old world since the discovery of the new.'

"Just where in the Americas it originated is a mooted question. According to Candolle, at the time of the discovery of the new continent maize was one of the staples of its agriculture, from the La Plata valley to the United States. The natives planted it around their temporary dwellings where they did not form a fixed population. The burial mounds of the natives of North America who preceded those of our day, the tombs of the Incas—the catacombs of Peru—contain ears or grains of maize, just as the monuments of ancient Egypt contain grains of barley, wheat and millet seed. In Mexico, a goddess who bore the name derived from that of maize corresponded to the Ceres of the Greeks, and the first fruits of the maize harvest were offered to her. At Cuzco the virgins of the sun offered sacrifices of bread made from the meal of Indian corn. Nothing is better calculated to show the antiquity and generality of the cultivation of a plant than this intimate connection with the religious rites of the ancient inhabitants.

"It was not only in Peru and Mexico, however, that maize was extensively cultivated. It was the great food plant of practically all the American Indians who sought the aid of cultivation in obtaining food. Columbus found it to be the principal food of the natives of the Island of Santo Domingo, and his was the first account of the grain made public in Europe. Linguistic evidence shows that it was introduced into the United States from the tribes in Mexico and from the Caribs of the West Indies, but the time of this introduction can only be conjectured. That it was long before the appearance of the Europeans is evident not only from the early and widespread cultivation by tribes of the area now embraced in the United States, but from the fact that indications of its cultivation are found in the mounds and in the ancient pueblo ruins and cliff dwellings, while corroborative evidence is found in the fact that several varieties had already been developed at the time of the discovery, four being mentioned as in use among the Indians of Virginia."

ST. VITUS DANCE AFFECTS MANY CHILDREN

The Trouble Can be Cured Through the Use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

St. Vitus Dance is much more common than is generally imagined. The trouble is often mistaken for mere nervousness, or awkwardness. Usually attacks young children, most often between the ages of six and fourteen—though older persons may be affected with it. The most common symptom is twitching of the muscles of the face and limbs. As the disease progresses this twitching takes the form of spasms in which the jerking motion may be confined to the head, or all the limbs may be affected. The patient is frequently unable to hold anything in the hands or walk steadily, and in severe cases the speech may be affected. The disease is due to impoverished nerves, owing to the blood being out of condition and can be cured by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, which enrich the blood, strengthen the nerves, and in this way restore the sufferer to good health. Any symptom of nerve trouble in young children should be promptly treated as it is almost sure to lead to St. Vitus Dance. The following is proof of the power of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to cure this trouble. Mrs. Hattie Cummings, R. R. No. 3, Peterboro, Ont., says:—"I was attacked with what the doctor said was St. Vitus Dance. Both my hands trembled so as to be practically useless. Then the trouble went to my left side, and from that to my right side, and left me in such a condition that I was not able to go out of the house. I took the doctor's medicine without getting any benefit. Then I tried another remedy with the same poor results. At this stage I was advised to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and did so, with the result that they fully restored me to health, and I have not had the slightest symptom of nervous trouble since. I can recommend these pills to anyone who is suffering from nervous trouble, and hope they will profit by my experience."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills from any drug dealer or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

PREVENT PNEUMONIA.

Increase Physical Resistance by Husbanding the Strength.

Pneumonia is largely a disease of middle life. Its greatest incidence is during the active stage of adult life. About 50 per cent. of the cases of pneumonia show the presence of types of germs which are oftentimes very virulent, but which depend upon contact for their distribution.

"Carriers" are effective and dangerous in this distribution. Such "carriers" in the room of recovered patients may retain the virulent pneumococci for nearly a month and may during that time be dangerous to those who come in contact with them.

The prevention of pneumonia is possible. The first thing to do is to keep up the physical resistance—to take care of the health and to avoid abusing it. Both innocently and wilfully we may weaken our resistance to pneumonia. Habitually neglecting to have a needed amount of sleep and persistency in working early and late, and not having enough food to eat, is an innocent way of weakening one's physical resistance.

Other ways of destroying the resistance consist in deliberately doing what is known to undermine the vitality, such as needlessly exposing oneself to sudden changes of temperature and cold, excessive fatigue, intemperance and excesses. One who habitually uses alcohol has very feeble resistance and is rarely able to escape an attack of pneumonia, if exposed to the infection.

The germs which cause the disease are everywhere. The careless cougher in the crowded street or elsewhere disseminates the virulent germs of pneumonia. Recovered patients (carriers) throng in shops, railway trains and places of business. They are in contact (near) all classes of people—the weak (with no resistance) and strong (good resistance).

The moisture from the mouths of carriers falls everywhere, but luckily the germ dies unless it finds a suitable place to thrive.

Germs will live and infect a person who is weak or debilitated from any cause.

Pneumonia should be treated as an infectious disease which is acquired by contact. Spitting in public places should be forbidden. Persons coughing and sneezing should protect those near them from being touched by moisture by covering the nose and mouth with a handkerchief, or the hand, if the handkerchief is out of reach. Cups, glasses, silverware and dishes in restaurants should be required to be thoroughly washed each time they are used. Carriers, unfortunately, cannot disinfect the mouths before eating, but everything used by them can be prevented from giving the infection to others by the free and generous use of boiling water and soap.

Do not have pneumonia. Keep well rested up, well fed and refrain from dissipation of every kind. The little things neglected every day weaken the resistance to this disease. Stop when you are tired. Go to bed after a wearing day of hard work and give up the contemplated evening at the theatre, opera or the visit to friends. Rest at such a time is imperative. Not to stop and rest (in middle life) when tired, fretted or fatigued imposes a strain on the nervous system and circulatory system, which deprives these systems of the power to combat the ravages of a disease which holds a person bedfast.

Eat three or even four meals when you are working at top speed day after day. Ten hours of sleep every night and an abundance of food every day gives strength to the heart and nerves, and you will have undreamed of strength and resistance to every disease, and especially pneumonia.

Baths Relieve Pain.

Sufferers throughout the world are gaining relief from therapeutic experiments by the doctors in the hospitals of the war zone who are continually devising some means to reduce the pain of the wounded soldiers. At a large hospital it was found that the quantity of opiate given some of the men who were suffering from severe wounds seriously retarded their recovery. As an experiment, several were suspended in tubs through which water at a temperature of 100 degrees Fahrenheit was kept running. One man who had been in such pain from a lacerated thigh that it was feared he would go insane, was laid upon a rubber mattress in a bath. His pain entirely subsided, and more rapid progress in healing was made than in any similar wound upon record.

He Feels He Owes His Life To Them

TELEGRAPHED 200 MILES FOR DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Sandy Goulette, Now Strong and Hearty, Tells How he Found Health After the Doctors Had Given Him Up.

Old Fort Bay, Labrador, Que., March 5.—(Special)—"Do I believe in Dodd's Kidney Pills? Well, I telegraphed two hundred miles to get two boxes of them." The speaker was Sandy Goulette, an old settler here. Nor did Mr. Goulette require to be pressed to tell the rest of his story.

"I was swollen out of shape from head to foot. I was so short of breath I could hardly speak. The doctor could do nothing for me. The minister gave me the holy sacrament, and a good priest came and told me I could not live much longer.

"Then I telegraphed for Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took three pills the night they came and I got relief before morning. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured me. I am able to do my day's work now as well as I was ten years ago."

Mr. Goulette offers to answer any letters written to him regarding his case. He feels that he owes his health, if not his life, to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

FEEDING THE FAMILY.

That it is quite possible to live on twenty-five cents a day, provided you know how—this is the fact which the experiment of the New York police diet squad has demonstrated. Under the direction of Mary S. Rose, of Teachers' College, menus have been prepared which, with an expenditure of twenty-five cents a day, have provided sufficient nourishment for the "rookies" undergoing the test. In fact, some of them have increased in weight under Mrs. Rose's management.

This is all very well, say the skeptics, but how can it be made of general application? Unless one knows food values, one cannot prepare the meals from the standpoint of the scientist, as does Mrs. Rose. The answer is simple—what she has done for the police squad, she has done for all who are interested in her book, "Feeding the Family." This volume rests upon exactly the same principles as those put into effect in the New York demonstration.

TRADE BRIEFS.

Coal exports from Sydney, Nova Scotia, to the United States in 1916 amounted to $367,311, which was a decrease in value from the exports of the previous year.

Soap manufacturers in Spain are endeavoring to bring about the prohibition of the exportation of green sulphur oil. The Spanish soap industry depends largely on this oil, and there was a small yield in 1916.

The United States Government sold 1,900 fur seal skins at St. Louis recently for $53,678. A profit of $16,000 was realized.

Japan's cement industry has flourished in the past few years, the output in 1915 amounting to 3,913,000 barrels. It is asserted that American cement is being eliminated from the market.

Nineteen sixteen was a prosperous year in Newfoundland except for the lumber industry, which showed a decrease. The seal catch was valued at $637,000, as against $31,000 in 1915.

A modern biscuit bakery has been built at Hong Kong, China. The machinery was bought in the United States.

English jute bags, which are used in Guatemala for marketing coffee, have doubled in price since the outbreak of hostilities in Europe and are now worth 40 cents each.

Maritime sanitation laws have been passed by the Chilean Government. In the future all ships entering Chilean ports will be inspected.

Explosive manufacturers in the United States used 328,760 bales of bleached cotton fibre in 1916, which was an increase of 291,707 bales over the amount used in 1915.

Before the European war 50 per cent. of British East Africa's exports of chillies came to America, but high freight rates have decreased these exports to 15 per cent. Exports in 1916 were valued at $57,053, with Egypt as the best customer.

Nerviline Ends Neuralgia, Brings Relief Instantly

No Remedy Like Old "Nerviline" to Cure Pain or Soreness.

That terrible ache—how you fairly reel with it: that stabbing, burning neuralgia—what misery it causes. Never mind, you don't have to suffer—use Nerviline, it's a sure cure. Not an experiment, because nearly forty years of wonderful success has made a name for Nerviline among the people of many different nations. "There is nothing speedier to end Neuralgic headache than rubbing Nerviline," writes Mr. G. C. Dalgleish, from Evanston. "It is so powerful and penetrating that it seems to eat up any pain in a minute. My family couldn't get along without Nerviline. We always keep a bottle handy on the shelf, and use it to end chest colds, sore throat, coughs, earache, toothache and pain in the back. My wife swears by Nerviline. For cramps its effect is astonishing, and we believe it is better and speedier than any other household family remedy." At all dealers.

PANCAKES.

Nine Good Recipes for All the Year Round Breakfasts.

Winter or spring, summer or fall, pancakes hot from the griddle are a welcome and relishing addition to the morning repast.

Times readers will find in the following recipes a delicious variety from which to choose.

Bread Pancakes—Take one pint of sour milk or buttermilk. At night put into this enough dry bread to take up the milk. In the morning mash the bread with a fork, add one egg, well beaten, salt to taste, one-third teaspoonful baking soda, mix in flour enough for a medium stiff batter. Serve with sugar and cream.

Mincemeat Pancakes—These delicious cakes are made the same as the ordinary wheat cakes. Fry and spread with hot mincemeat, rolling them in the same manner as French pancakes. Sprinkle with confectioner's sugar and serve immediately.

Cornmeal Pancakes—Mix two teaspoonfuls baking powder with one pint cornmeal, one-half pint flour, and a little salt, add two well beaten eggs and enough sweet milk to make a batter. Or put one teaspoonful soda in one pint sour cream, add a beaten egg, a little salt, four tablespoonfuls of flour and enough cornmeal to make a soft batter. Fry brown on both sides in hot fat.

Green Corn Pancakes—One can of sweet corn, two well-beaten eggs, three tablespoonfuls milk, one tablespoonful melted butter, salt and pepper to taste, two teaspoonfuls baking powder and flour to make a batter. Serve with butter.

Sour Milk Griddle Cakes—Put into bowl one cupful sour milk, and one cupful sifted flour (one-third of this cup may be entire wheat, fine cornmeal or rye meal). Before mixing sift on the flour one teaspoonful each of salt and soda, then add one beaten egg and one tablespoonful of melted butter. Beat well, cook on a hot griddle. Flours and meals vary, so if the first cake is not right, add more flour or moisture as needed.

Almond Pancakes—Cream one tablespoonful of butter with three tablespoonfuls sugar, add two well beaten eggs, pinch of salt, one-half cupful of cream, stir in one-half cupful of flour, same of ground almonds. When done sprinkle with powdered sugar and roll and serve.

Hominy Griddle Cakes—To one pint warm boiled hominy, add one pint milk or water, one pint flour, just two eggs and stir into the batter with a little salt, fry as any other griddle cake. They are delicious.

Rice Griddle Cakes—Two cupfuls cold boiled rice, one pint flour, one teaspoonful sugar, one-half teaspoonful salt, one and one-half teaspoonfuls baking powder, one egg, a little over a cupful of milk, sift together salt, sugar, flour and baking powder, add rice, free from lumps. Mix with beaten egg and milk. Mix into a smooth batter. Have griddle well heated. Bake nice brown, not too thick; serve with maple syrup.

Royal Buckwheat Cakes—This is the most delicious of all the griddle cakes. Two cupfuls pure buckwheat flour, one cupful wheat flour, two tablespoonfuls baking powder, one-half teaspoonful salt, all sifted well together. Mix with sweet milk into a thin batter and bake at once on a hot griddle.

ANCIENT ARMIES.

Only Ones Approximately in Size Those of To-day.

When King Xerxes of Persia invaded Greece in 480 B.C. he was said by Herodotus to have brought across the Hellespont an army of 1,700,000 men, gathered from all western and north of Central Asia. Including the Greek cities on the coast of the Aegean sea. There has been a good deal of skepticism about these figures, says Robert Ellis Thompson in the Irish World, on the ground that such a body would have been found utterly unwieldy, and it was too large for any system of supply of food, and that nobody can be sure that it was counted correctly. And from that time to our own no army of a million or more was ever mustered into fight, unless it were the hordes of Huns, who fought the battle of Chalons in A. D. 451, with the Goths and Romans, and left 260,000 of their number dead on the field of conflict.

While fighting still went on in the Middle Ages, within and between the nations into which the Roman Empire was divided in that century, armies may be said to have ceased to exist. The military forces were composed of feudal tenants of the several kings, who left their several occupations at the call for troops, and went back to them when the war was over. But with the invention of gunpowder a great change came, and standing armies in the service of the kings began to arise, with the result of overthrowing the rude system of popular control of kings and princes, which the feudal system had preserved. But still armies were numbered by the ten or at most the hundred thousand, and millions disappeared from military annals. The French Revolution did not engage such vast numbers. At Wagram some three hundred thousand were engaged, and at Leipzig the Allies alone numbered as many. This was the maximum.

We got back to the millions with the United States Civil War, as more than 1,000,000 soldiers were under arms in the national service when the struggle came to an end. At that moment America was the greatest military country in the world, and the knowledge of this fact lent force to our demands for the evacuation of Mexico by the French, and for the payment of the Alabama claims by the English.

MOTHERS

REMEMBER! The ointment you put on your child's skin gets into the system just as surely as food the child eats. Don't let impure fats and mineral coloring matter (such as many of the cheap ointments contain) get into your child's blood! Zam-Buk is purely herbal. No poisonous coloring. Use it always. *50c. JOHNSTON'S CORNERS

Mr. J. J. Zettler, our drover, is a busy man. Last week he shipped a car of hogs and also got a car load of baled hay and one of Western oats, also a car of fertilizer. He believes in being industrious.

Mr. Edwin Lobsinger who is here from Detroit was visiting old friends here the past few days. Ed. is hearty looking, the city life must agree with him.

Messrs. Leonard and Bob Long helped J. J. Zettler to unload some of his oats and hay off the cars.

Mr. Con Zettler is working for his uncle Andrew cutting wood and other work.

Mr. Jos. J. Ernst is busy hauling his wood home from the swamp he recently bought. Hurry up Joe, the snow is going fast these days.

Our farmers are rushing out a lot of their wheat lately as prices have advanced again of late.

Mr. Frank Rennie has another new driver and is some lively stepper too. Frank is a great horseman. He also purchased the Allardyce farm of 50 acres. Things are booming lately in this burg.

Lambert Gallop was out dinking the highroads down a little on Saturday, which need fixing up and Lambert is the man for the job.

Mr. Wm. Johnston has contract of supplying the school for next winters wood.

Mr. Roy McCarter is helping his Dad to cut wood at home. He got practised up at cutting Wm. Riley's wood along with Cecil McLeod.

A lot of our farmers attended the sale of Farm Stock and Implements of the late John Ohlelser at Chepstow on Saturday.

VESTA

Mr. Fred Fortune has completed hauling his Wood to Chesley.

The Red Cross Society, lately organized in this locality, are doing some fine work and needless to say are performing their duties in the great conflict.

Capt G S Hanmore is expected home soon. He arrived on Canadian soil lately.

Vesta will soon grow in importance, due no doubt to woman suffrage.

A most successful debate was held in S. S. No 11 Brant recently.

KINLOSS

We are glad to see Mr. D. S. Campbell out again after his attack of la grippe.

Mr. Peter McDonald and Earl spent Saturday in Kincardine.

We are glad and yet sorry to see our old friends going West. We wish them a speedy journey and many wrecks.

Mrs. Peter Miller is back in our midst again after a lengthy visit among her friends in London and St. Marys.

Mr. Earl McDonald has returned home for the summer after spending the winter months in the Wingham Business College. We are pleased to know that he won his diploma with honours.

What happened our choir we wonder. Believe it could be compared to a dream. Just the time we think we have it we wake up to find it gone.

If you can't go to fight,
If you can't knit a sock,

PINKERTON

Rev. Mr. Gale and T. Birrell attended the Presbytery meeting at Paisley last week.

Mr. Walter Birrell of Toronto was in the village a few days last week visiting his parents, Mr. and Mrs. T. Birrell.

We are all sorry to learn that Miss Ellen Gibb is under the doctor's care.

The Pinkerton Red Cross Society have made and shipped the following articles since their last shipment three weeks ago: 13 suits pyjamas, 9 flannel shirts with collars, 10 flannel shirts without collars, 1 pair wristlets, 2 pillow covers, 9 pillows, 3 quilts, 68 pairs socks.

OTTER CREEK

The crows are cawing. Spring is in the air again.

Mr. Harvey Damm and Mr. George Eckel of Walkerton were visiting friends out here.

A load of Youth and Beauty attended the social gathering at Mr. John Miller's of the 4th con. The biggest feature of the social being the snapping of pictures by flash at 1 o'clock in the morning.

The thunder and lightning on Saturday night wakened up quite a few. It being so unusual it came as a shock to all.

Master Andrew Hutton is very ill with an attack of sore throat.

MILDMAY

Mr. J. M. Fisher is planning to put in a weigh scales at the G. T. R. cattle sheds. This is a great convenience to those selling cattle and pigs and the farmers will greatly appreciate it.

Mr. D. McDonald held an auction sale of cows at the Royal Hotel sheds on Monday. The quality of the beasts was good, so a large many farmers did some purchasing. Purvis was the auctioneer.

Our curlers are having a merry time this winter playing for the club buttons.

This winter seems to be like a winter out west a man once ascribed thus,

First it snows,
Then it thaws,
Then it turns around and thaws,
Then it does it all over again you knows.

Mr. George Weiler who has lately been working for Henry Keelan has left for the west, where he will locate at Rosetown, Saskatchewan.

The last carnival of the season is to be held in the Mildmay rink on Thursday evening. A good programme of events is being provided. Part of proceeds to go to patriotic purposes.

Mr. Vincent Morrison, son of R. J. Morrison, is spending a few days at his home here. Vincent left a good situation in New York in order to enlist in the Canadian Army.

Weiler Bros. have shipped in all thirteen carloads of turnips this winter. Their last carload was sent to help feed Chicago.

Mr. Wellington Richards returned to his home in Harriston on Saturday, March 3. He had been in town for some days doctoring a sore arm. His arm however is on the mend.

Mrs. John Coutt's property on Absalom street, has been leased to Mr. Gideon Schneider, who sold his 80 acre farm on the Elora road south of Mildmay, to Mr. Wilfrid Schweitzer.

MAPLE HILL

Wedding bells are ringing.

Mrs. A. Gowanlock spent last week visiting her daughter, Mrs. E. A. Ruttle of Cargill.

A load of our youth and beauty attended the dance at Mr. J. Gowanlock's Friday eve. All report a good time.

Mrs. Tom Cunningham and daughter, Crystal, and Miss Clara Gowanlock visited Miss Inglis on Thursday afternoon.

Who was the young gent that kept the roads well tracked last Wednesday evening. His horse will soon know how to cut the figure eight.

Mr. Tom Sykie has bought the fifty acre farm from Gordon Smith. We understand the price paid is $1000.

Mr. E. Pinkney has rented the fifty acre farm formerly occupied by Mr. D. Frook.

Mr. S. Little bought a new cutter from Mr. I. Glintz on Friday.

Mr. A. Gowanlock traded his 2.12 pacing horse for a 2.10 stand still.

CHEPSTOW

Miss Laura Wagner, stenographer of Chesley, was a Sunday visitor at her home.

Messrs. Jos. Moss and Frank Hebo of the local quota engaged in Donnelly's Muskoka lumber camp during the past winter months returned to their homes last week.

Mrs. A. Borgel spent the past week with relatives and friends in Walkerton.

The remains of the late John Bester of Walkerton were interred in the R. C. cemetery on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. B. Bester of Michigan who arrived to attend the funeral of his brother spent the week-end renewing acquaintances in the vicinity.

The auction sale conducted by the executor of the late John Ohlheiser on Saturday was a success in every way the veteran John Purvis wielding the baton in his usual brilliant style. The successful bidder for the farm was Stephen Powers, the price paid being $6,750. Mr. Powers has disposed of his 10 acre farm to John Hebo of Culross for $2800, who assumes possession at once.

The grim reaper passed through our midst during the past week claiming as his victim an aged and highly respected citizen of the community in the person of Mrs. Eugene O'Hagan, relict of the late Eugene O'Hagan, who predeceased her some twenty years ago. Deceased who was in her 72nd year had been for some time a sufferer from heart trouble and the end which came early on Friday a. m. was not unlooked for. Four sons, Thomas, Nicholas, Patrick and John, and three married daughters survive to mourn their beloved mother. Interment took place in the R. C. cemetery here on Monday a. m. and the large number who were present to pay their last tribute to the deceased bears testimony to the admiration which her genial and affable disposition gained for her from those with whom she came in contact.

Mr. John Scharbach of Youngstown Alta., after spending the winter months with friends in the neighbourhood, commenced the return journey on Tuesday.

GLAMIS

BACK FROM THE FRONT

Two Walkerton Boys who have Helped Bear the Brunt of Battle Arrived Home on Leave This Week.

Sergt. Art Taggart sprang a great surprise on his parents and friends when he arrived home quite unexpectedly from the Front on Monday night. Not until a phone message was received from Mr. John Rowland at Palmerston, did a soul know that Art was coming home. The news quickly got around and a large crowd met the night train and gave Art a right hearty welcome. To see Art alive and pretty well after what he has come through, seems like a miracle. On June 3rd last he was in the worst scrap the Canadians have ever had a part in. He was shell-shocked and buried, and woke up four days later in a dressing station. What happened in the interval he has not the slightest idea. Eight companions alongside of him were killed by a single shell and of the whole battalion only 120 came out unscathed. Art has the marks of five wounds and twice he was shell-shocked within a single month. Considering what he came through, he looks remarkably well. Art is home on leave and will have about a month at Walkerton. He will then return to England and come before a Medical Board and may be sent back to the Front again.

Pte. Dick Addley arrived home Friday night from the Front. Although it was known only two hours before that he was on the train, a large crowd was on hand to give him a hearty welcome home. Dick enlisted with the 34th Batt'n twenty-six months ago and has seen some of the heaviest fighting. In June he was hit in the hand and leg. In September he was wounded in the face and received a serious wound in the chest which has probably put him out of the fighting for keeps. Dick says he wants to go back but he will have to report at London in ten days for examination and will then receive instructions what to do. He reports that he saw Reg McCarter and Ray Hyslop shortly before these brave boys fell in action. He also saw "Spot" Fields who is now back in France, and Gabe Hess who has recovered from his serious wounds and will likely be on the firing line by this time. A public reception is to be given for Pte. Addley at the Town Hall shortly.

For Sale

The I. O. D. E. have twelve good pine boxes with hinges and handles suitable for oat or chop boxes etc. May be seen at Town Hall sheds. Inquire of R. H. Ferguson for prices.

Nurse Leaves For England

Miss Marion Heughan, who was here on last leave over the week-end before leaving for England as a nurse, was presented with a five dollar gold piece by the local Branch of the Bruce Preparedness League on Saturday afternoon. Rev. Mr. Wilson referred to Miss Heughan's departure from the pulpit of Knox Church Sunday night stating that she should be included in the prayers for the boys on the Honour Roll. Miss Heughan left Monday morning for Montreal. Her many old friends in the town wish her godspeed and a safe return.

Little—Tanner

A quiet wedding was celebrated at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Tanner, South Line, Brant, when their second daughter, Miss Grace was united in holy wedlock to Mr. John Franklin Little, a prosperous young Saskatchewan farmer, and second son of Mr. John D. Little, of Brant. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Jackson of Hanover, in the presence of a small company of immediate friends. Both parties were unattended. The bride was prettily gowned in silk embroidered voile and carried a bouquet of roses. Mr. and Mrs. Little are visiting Barrow Bay, Brampton and other points on their honeymoon, and will leave shortly for their home at Anglia, Sask.

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. and Mrs. John Scanlan desire to express their sincere thanks to their many neighbours and friends for their kindness during their recent bereavement.

BORN

VICKERS—In Walkerton, on Sunday, March 11th, to Sergt. and Mrs. Walter J. Vickers, a son, (John Leith.)

MOFFAT—At Aberfoyle, on March 12th, to Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Moffat of Cargill, a son (Norman Dickson).

WEILER—In Carrick, on March 10th, to Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Weiler, a son.

BAETZ—In Mildmay, on March 13th to Mr. and Mrs. Albert Baetz, a daughter.

KASTNER—At Dunkeld, to Mr. and Mrs. Philip Kastner, a son.

Prompt Payment

A. H. Stevens, local agent of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. handed Reeve Robt. Russell a cheque Friday morning for the amount of the insurance policy on his son, Pte. Leith Russell, who was reported killed in action sixteen days previously. Such promptness on the part of the Company was very much appreciated.

Where Flies Breed

Nine-tenths of the flies are hatched in manure piles around town, according to the representative of the Muskoka Free Hospital. Walkerton is well supplied with hatcheries of this kind and here is an opportunity for the Board of Health to do the public a service by insisting that owners of manure piles give them a dose of lime solution during the fly-hatching season.

Jumped Hotel Bill

A young man named Dan Yeusin, from near Clifford, walked away from the Queen's Hotel on Monday night without paying his bill. On Wednesday morning he showed up in town and was arrested by Chief Ferguson and brought before Magistrate Tolton. Yeusin was made to understand that he had committed a serious offence. He paid his bill and also $5.60 costs before leaving court.

Irish Trimmed

March the Seventeenth was a big day for the Irish everywhere except in Walkerton, where the rink of Irish Curlers who make it an annual practice of lathering the Scotch and English, on St. Patrick's Day, had the tables turned on them. The following score tells the tale:—

English	Irish
S. Pink	J. McNeil
Ed. Pengelly	J. Morrison
L. H. Lesson	L. McNamara
H. M. Lay	A. Collins
Skip—15	Skip—9.

Went Violently Insane

Miss Agnes Kempel, an elderly spinster who lives by herself in the West Ward, went violently insane on Tuesday night and if the neighbours had promptly interfered would probably have done away with herself. She piled up furniture in the centre of the house and made a bonfire which was fortunately put out promptly. When Chief Ferguson arrived to take her in charge, the unfortunate woman was out in the middle of the road in her night attire. She will be medically examined to-day and probably committed to the Insane Asylum.

Hanover Leaguers Here

Forty members of Hanover Epworth League drove over on Monday evening and were the guests of the Walkerton Methodist young people. The visitors gave an interesting program including a paper on Temperance by Miss Pearl Clark and a talk on What the League Stands For? by Rev. Mr. Jackson of Hanover. Afterwards a company of about eighty sat down to a very choice supper which had been prepared by the young ladies. The rest of the evening was spent in games and a sociable good time.

Exciting Hockey

The last hockey match of the season was pulled off at Mildmay Thursday night when Walkerton won a victory by the skin of their teeth. The game was fairly fast and a bit rough at times. At first it looked like a walkaway for the homesters, the score at half time being Mildmay 3, Walkerton 0. Then the visitors got real busy. First they made it 3—3 and then 3—6 for good measure. Mildmay had lots of fight in them yet and they succeeded in locating the nets twice before the whistle blew, making it 6—5 for Walkerton.

Died Suddenly

Mr. John Coates, druggist of Mildmay, passed away very suddenly at his home early Tuesday morning. He had been attending to his business right up to the previous evening, although suffering from a cold. Death was due to an affection of the heart. At one time Mr. Coates kept a drug-store in Walkerton and is well-remembered and highly regarded by many of the older citizens. He was in his 76th year. He leaves a widow, one son, Dr. Fred Coates of East Toronto, and one daughter, Mrs. (Prin.) Mayberry of Stratford.

Took Saltpetre For Salts

The Greenock Tp. merchant who sold what was supposed to be salts to a number of farmers with the result that half a dozen cattle died, is now seeking to recover damages from the wholesalers, who in turn expect to recover from the manufacturers. Several people who took the salts, including the merchant himself, escaped death by vomiting but all the cattle succumbed. The merchant then sent a sample of the salts back to the wholesalers asking to have it analysed. He received a reply stating that it was sodium nitrate, a substance similar to saltpetre and enclosing an account for a dollar for the analysis. He then wrote and explained the full circumstances, with the result that the wholesalers laid the blame upon the manufacturers. The vomiting of the poisonous dose is said to be the only thing that saved the lives of the persons took it.

A Public Memorial

As Walkerton boys, one by one, are making the Supreme Sacrifice on the battlefields of France, the question of a suitable memorial for our war heroes naturally comes to the fore. By their deeds these boys have set up a monument "more lasting than brass" but it is only fitting that their names should be recorded in a public place where they may be read by succeeding generations. One citizen has suggested a public monument on the Armoury lawn, which would be a perpetual memorial to Walkerton's heroic manhood. This is a question which will have to be thrashed out before long.

Visited Old Neighbourhood

Mr. Wm. Arnold, a former well-known Greenock farmer, who has made the dollars grow in the West, paid a short visit along with Mrs Arnold, to the old neighbourhood last week. Mr. Arnold is located at Kelfield, Sask. west of Saskatoon where they are farming a whole Section. Crops were pretty good in that district last year and with the high prevailing prices it has been the most profitable season on record in that locality. Wheat averaged 28 bushels around Kelfield, and oats 78 bushels per acre. Mr. and Mrs. Arnold visited the former's brother John, at Manitowaning, Manitoulin Island, while on their trip East. They found him and his family well. Four of the sons have large stock farms on the island. Mr. Arnold took a carload of horses back West, shipping from Applin last Wednesday.

Live Topic Debated

The Brant Farmers Club debated a real live topic at their meeting last week, held at the home of Mr. J. D. Little. The subject was: Resolved that a young man would have a better start with a 100 acre farm than with $1200 salary. The affirmative side of the argument was well presented by Roy Lamb, Walter Rowand and August Pletsch, while Walter Threndyle, Peter Dippel, and Walter Chisholm ably upheld the salaried young man's side of the case. The affirmative won in the opinion of the Judges, J. D. Little, W. A. Rowand and David Coates. President Albert Wahn presided and introduced a good program consisting of: Piano solo, Mrs. Little Patriotic song, Schilling sisters; violin solo, Ed. Threndyle, accompanied by Miss Wahn. In giving the Judges' decision Mr. J. D. Little complimented the Club nicely on the good work it was attempting to do.

How it Happened

When a returned soldier steps off the train these days, one of the first citizens to grasp his hand is John Rowland, the local chairman of the Bruce Preparedness League. But on Monday night when Sergt. Art. Taggart arrived back from the Front, Mr. Rowland was conspicuous by his absence and thereby hangs an amusing little tale. Mr. Rowland was down the line that day and when he was waiting for the train at Palmerston he found Art. Taggart gum-shoeing it home to surprise the folks. But the idea of one of our heroes coming home without a royal welcome was so abhorent to Mr. Rowland that he rushed off to telephone ahead to the boys at Walkerton. Unfortunately the train pulled out before he got his message through, leaving Mr. Rowland high and dry and thirty miles from home. That is why, when the train pulled into Walkerton an hour late, and a cheering crowd of citizens greeted our returned soldier here, the chairman of the Bruce Preparedness League was not on the job.

Ebony Minstrels Great

Walkerton was taken by storm on Friday night. An audience that filled the Opera Hall to overflowing lost its heart entirely to a company of dusky belles, known as the Ebony Minstrel Show. The coloured ladies showed surprising ability and gave a performance that would compare favourably with any travelling minstrel troupe that ever visited these parts, as well as springing an abundance of local hits which made the audience's sides sore with laughter. Perhaps we had better 'fess up right here and explain that these dusky minstrels were none other than the ladies of the local Hospital Aid, who are always ready and willing to go to no end of trouble for their worthy cause. Certainly the ladies are to be highly congratulated on the success of their Minstrel Show and the public will be glad to know that they made about $163. It is hinted that the ladies may repeat the performance some time in April with some new specialties and brand new jokes. If they do, we predict a "bumper house."

MOVING HYDRO-WARDS

Hanover Takes Option This Week on the Privately Owned Plant—Greutzner Says He is Satisfied with Price

Walkerton and Hanover both have their faces turned hydro-wards but it looks now as if our neighbor would land on the Hydro map first. This week the Hydro Electric Power Commission took an option on the privately owned power plant at Hanover. The next step will be the taking over of the plant and linking it up with the Eugenia System. Herman Greutzner, the owner of the Maple Hill Electric Light Plant which has been supplying electric light to Hanover and Neustadt for several years, is to be given $12,000 for his plant according to the terms of the option. The town of Hanover will issue debentures for the complete installation of Hydro for $40,000. Mr. Greutzner has been supplying a 65 horsepower day load besides power for irons, toasters etc. He retains the right to supply the Cement factory with power for 40 years. The plant is said to be in excellent shape and Mr. Greutzner is satisfied with the price.

Youngest Recruit Yet

Horace Johnston, eldest son of Mayor Andy Johnston left on Monday to join the Canadian Engineers as operator and lineman. Horace tried to join the 160th Batt'n. last year but was turned down owing to his lack of years. Even now he is the youngest recruit that has yet donned the khaki here.

Wound Was Slight

Mr. Frank Eidt had a letter from his brother Ed. on Monday stating that the wound which he sustained on Feb. 19th was only a slight one and that he is back on the job again with the Trench Mortar Battery. Ed says:—"Was slightly wounded on the night of the 19th and went to the hospital for two days but am back on duty again. Just a small piece of shrapnel in the right shoulder, enough to make innoculation necessary, which was worse than the wound itself. We are having wet, muddy weather now and the trenches are in very bad state but we wear long rubber boots which protect us considerably."

They're Braw Fechters

Signaller David McCarter of the 204th Beavers, Toronto, was home on last leave last week on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. James McCarter of Brant, and his uncle, Coun. Alex McCarter, before leaving for Overseas. His brother, Corp. Alex McCarter of Saskatchewan, is also leaving for the Front shortly with a Western Batt. With four McCarters from Walkerton in the King's service, of whom one has already paid the Supreme Sacrifice, this old Highland family is living up to its best traditions. It is recalled that their grandfather, Alex McCarter, one of Brant's first settlers, was one of five brothers, all of whom were eager to fight in Britain's battles and it was only by casting lots that one of the five could be persuaded to stay home and attended to the farm in Forfarshire. The McCarters of the present day are surely proving to be worthy descendants of their valiant progenitors.

Busy Little Dan!

No less than three times during the past year that sly little lad, Dan Cupid, has invaded the fireside of Mr. John D. Little, a prominent and widely esteemed farmer of Brant Township. On March 13th of last year, his daughter, Miss Mary Ellen, a popular young school teacher, was led to the altar by Mr. Bruce Robertson of Barrow Bay. On Sept. 13th the attendance of a clergyman was again necessary when Miss Margaret Adelaide Little became the bride of Mr. Roger Inglis of Brant. Again on Wednesday of last week, just one day within the twelve months, Mr. Little's second son, Mr. John Franklin Little of Anglia, Sask. was united in wedlock to Miss Grace Tanner, a popular young lady of the South Line. With three happy marriages in the family in so brief a space, the Little family is surely "doing its bit" to keep up the sum total of the world's bliss. But with only one unmarried daughter left, the epidemic cannot last much longer. Can this matrimonial record be beaten in Brant. It can! In the family of Mr. Richard L. Tanner, grandfather of the bride of last week, there were no less than four marriages within twelve months. This is a record that would surely try the temper of Cupid's bow.

A PUZZLING CASE

At last I heard the door open and knew that the visitor was leaving the house; so, true to my new profession as a detective, I rushed at once to the window of the smoking room, which fortunately afforded a view of the street. A few moments afterwards, I saw a tall, dark woman, dressed in a bizarre red costume, dart out of the house with a frown on her face, and walk rapidly away down the street. Just as she was turning the corner, I heard Gilbert's footsteps, so, unwilling to be caught in such an undignified situation, I came back to my chair and resumed the perusal of the paper.

Tressinger entered the room, and greeted me in an agitated manner, rendered still more emphatic by the haggard look on his young face.

"What is the matter, Gilbert?" I said, as he took a seat, "you seem to be worried over something."

"I am worried," he replied, with a frown. "I have just had a very unpleasant quarter of an hour."

"So it would seem, judging from the row you were making next door."

He looked up quickly.

"Did you hear what we were saying?"

"No, saving some reference to the Black Carnation."

"Always that infernal flower," answered Gilbert, gloomily; "it is becoming a perfect nightmare."

"Well, and what did this woman wish to see you about?"

"How do you know it was a woman?"

"I heard her voice, and I saw her leave the house."

"You are progressing in the detective business, major," said Tressinger, smiling bitterly. "Yes, you are right; my interview was with a woman, and it concerned Mazzucata's death."

"In what way?"

Tressinger made no reply, so I sought for information in another way.

"What is this woman's name, Gilbert?"

Still no answer, upon which, feeling somewhat nettled at being thus shut out from his confidence, I took up my hat and moved towards the door.

"Where are you going, major," he asked quickly, seeing my movement.

"I am going away, sir," I replied, in a dignified manner, for I own I was angry; "you promised to let me assist you in this matter, but as you now refuse to tell me anything, there is no use my staying here."

"Sit down, major, and don't be angry about nothing. I do not refuse to tell you what you wish to know, I was only thinking."

"About what?" I asked, resuming my seat.

"About my future movements. Shall I go abroad or stay here?"

I stared at him in some surprise.

"Why should you go abroad?"

"I have been warned that I may be arrested."

"Arrested?" I cried, jumping to my feet with an astonished look, "and for what?"

"The murder of Mazzucata."

"Nonsense."

"It is true, I assure you. This woman came here to warn me."

"But who is this woman?"

"Ilma Celinski."

"Humph! I am as wise as I was before."

"You don't know her name?" he said, curiously. "No, of course not—it is not yet in the papers. Well, Ilma Celinski is a Pole."

"I can tell that much myself."

"And she is—or rather was—the maid of Mazzucata."

"The maid of Mazzucata—well?"

"Well!" he repeated impatiently, "can't you see the connection."

"Between this woman and the murder? No, I'm sure I can't."

"I'm afraid you are not such a good detective as I thought, major."

"Oh, by the way," I said, with a sudden flash of memory, "both you and Dallas referred to some woman in connection with the crime; is this the woman?"

"No. Oh, you are quite wrong."

"How can I help being wrong when I am in the dark. For heaven's sake, Gilbert, stop this [illegible] conversation, and tell me what you mean."

"Willingly. Ilma Celinski is, or was, the maid of Mazzucata, and was more of a companion than a servant. She knew more than anyone else about Mazzucata, and among other things she knew of the warning of the Black Carnation. Well, it appears that after the murder of her mistress she went on to the stage to view the scene of the tragedy, and while they picked up the remains of a flower which was—"

"A Black Carnation?"

"Precisely. So in that bouquet which contained the dynamite cartridge, there must have been a black carnation and that was the reason Mazzucata cried out just before she was killed. The first flower was a warning to her that death was coming, the second that death had come—and speedily, as you saw."

"I understand. But what has all this to do with you?"

"Simply this. That the police think I threw the bouquet which contained the black carnation."

"Ridiculous. Do you mean to say the police think you killed the woman you love?"

"So Ilma says, and she came here this morning to warn me to fly."

"And by doing so thus acknowledge your guilt."

"Well, I am not going to acknowledge my guilt either by word or deed. I am innocent of the crime."

"My dear Tressinger," I said, grasping his hand, "you need not tell me that. I know you are innocent."

"Thank you, major," he said, warmly, much affected. "I am glad to hear you say so, as I shall need all the friends I can get when I am arrested."

"Will you be arrested?"

"Assuredly; and I am going to remain here. Flight would acknowledge guilt; and I am innocent, so I will remain."

"Why is this woman so anxious for you to fly?"

"She wants to save my life."

"But why?"

Gilbert looked down at the carpet with a flush on his face.

"Don't think me conceited, major, but I believe she loves me."

"Well, she is certainly doing you a good turn in thus warning you," I replied, grimly; "but tell me, Gilbert, if you are arrested what defence will you make?"

"What defence can I make except declare that I am innocent. I paid Mazzucata, I threw a bouquet to her, but I swear that there was nothing harmful in the bouquet."

"Not even a black carnation?"

"No. It was a bouquet of white flowers with a black rose in the centre, but a rose is not a carnation."

"Certainly not. Where was the bouquet made up?"

"At the shop of Phillis & Co., in Jermyn street."

"Then the flower girl there can give evidence that the bouquet contained nothing but white flowers and a black rose?"

"Most certainly."

"Phillis & Co. are not likely to go in for black carnations?"

"I should think not. It is a unique flower and worth its weight in gold. For the bouquet I bought I only paid a guinea, but if there had been a black carnation in it the price would have been treble."

"You say you have seen a black carnation?"

"I have—in the [illegible] which Mazzucata received as a warning that she was to die. A perfect flower and as black as ink."

"I suppose there are others in existence?"

"I don't know. I never heard of any."

"It could not possibly have been your bouquet that contained a black carnation?"

"No, I'm certain of that."

"Well, the bouquet containing the cartridge had a black carnation, so it could not have been yours, and, as it was not yours, you are not guilty."

"My dear major," cried Gilbert impatiently, "you are arguing in a circle. I tell you the central flower of my bouquet was a black rose, and I had no more intention of killing Mazzucata than yourself."

"I know that, but why should the police suspect you?"

"I am quite in the dark."

"Someone must have seen a black carnation, or thought they saw one in your bouquet."

"What nonsense. How could they see what wasn't there? Besides, no one saw the bouquet but myself."

I thought over the matter for a few moments, and then asked [illegible] question.

"Tell me all you did on that night from the time you bought the flowers."

"I had promised Mazzucata some flowers to carry to the opera, and during the day went to Phillis & Co. where I ordered a bouquet of white blossoms and a black rose in the centre. It did not come to my house, so on my way to Mazzucata I called at the shop and took it from there. I held it in my hand all the way to the Hotel Europe, where Mazzucata was staying, and went up to her rooms. Ilma, who was there, making ready to go to the theatre, told me Mazzucata had already gone, so I left the rooms at once and went on to Covent Garden."

"Did you lay down the bouquet when you were in Mazzucata's rooms?"

"Yes, for a few minutes, but as only Ilma was in the room [illegible], and you surely don't suspect her?"

"No, certainly not. Then in the theatre?"

"Well, I put the bouquet under my seat, and then threw it to her on the [illegible]."

"By the way, you left it there when you went out after the second act to have a smoke."

"Of course, but what of that?"

"Simply this, that the bouquet might have been changed while you were away."

"Impossible. In a crowded theatre?"

"I don't know why it should be impossible. Look here, is it quite improbable that Phillis & Co. would make up a bouquet with a dynamite cartridge in it."

"Yes, the idea is absurd."

"Well, from the time you left the shop till the time you went out to smoke in the theatre after the second act, you never lost sight of the bouquet?"

"No, I didn't."

"Then it must have been changed in the theatre," I finished, triumphantly.

"But who would do such a thing?"

"The person who killed Mazzucata."

"My dear major," said Gilbert, [illegible], "if the person who killed Mazzucata had a bouquet of white flowers with a black carnation, and a dynamite cartridge in the handle, why couldn't he throw it himself, why run the risk of changing it for mine?"

"[illegible] the risk," I answered, [illegible] "you were well known to be [illegible] of Mazzucata, and [illegible] black carnation bouquet. He sat [illegible] behind you—at least we will [illegible] for the sake of argument that [illegible] saw you there, so that he [illegible] relations with the woman he [illegible] to kill. Well, in order to save [illegible] risk and make you the [illegible] instrument of his vengeance, [illegible] for him that when you were away, to bend down in his [illegible] change the bouquets. Thus, when you threw your bouquet it was not yours, but his with the black carnation."

Gilbert [illegible] as if he saw [illegible] before him. "Great heavens!" he groaned, covering his face with his hands, "it is so, I am lost. But no, it is impossible. Granted that all [illegible] as you have so ingeniously described, who would know that the bouquet I threw had a Black Carnation?"

"[illegible] round you."

"[illegible], that cannot be so. For [illegible] a dark flower in the centre of a bouquet would believe it to be [illegible] as the Black Carnation. No, if things are as you say the person who changed the bouquets and made me the instrument of his vengeance, must also have denounced me to the police, thus at one blow destroying both Mazzucata and myself."

"That is my theory also," I answered, delighted to see how the case was unfolding itself, "but the question is, who changed the bouquets?"

"Ah, if we could find that out, we would lay our hands on the assassin, only [illegible], there is more theorizing."

"I daresay the police have not much more to go on."

"They must have some evidence [illegible] of no magistrate would grant the warrant for arrest."

"But is there a warrant of arrest against you?"

"I don't think there is at the present time, but Ilma tells me the police are going to issue one shortly."

"How does she know?"

Gilbert shrugged his shoulders.

"I'm sure I do not know."

A sudden thought struck me and I rose to my feet.

"Gilbert, I know who denounced you to the police."

"Who?"

"Ilma Celinski!"

"Impossible! She loves me."

"But how does she know of this Black Carnation business? If the bouquets were changed in the theatre, as I suspect, she must have had information that they were going to be so changed."

"I tell you it's impossible," cried Gilbert, much agitated, walking up and down. "Ilma loves me. She came to warn me to fly—she would not do that if she had denounced me. Good heavens!" he added, stopping short, with a gesture of despair, "when will all this end? Against my will I am being brought into the affair on all sides. There is a mystery and peril, which I know not how to escape. Major, what am I to do? You are my friend, tell me what to do."

"Yes, I will tell you," I answered, taking his hand. "I am your friend—leave the affair in my hands and leave England for the present."

"What, fly? That would be tantamount to a confession of guilt."

"If you are in prison you will be suspected all the same, and you can do more to aid yourself while free. Leave England, and I will see if I can discover who it was who changed the bouquets. I will see this Ilma and find out her attitude towards you—I will go to Phillis & Co.—I will find out where the [illegible] flowers came from—I will."

"Major," cried Gilbert, with a shudder, "hark, what is that?"

There was a sharp knock at the door, and immediately afterwards it was thrown open. A man in plain clothes and two policemen stood on the threshold.

"Too late," cried Tressinger, reeling back against the wall. "It is too late."

"Gilbert Tressinger, I arrest you in the Queen's name," said the man in plain clothes, advancing.

"And for what?" he asked, with pale lips. "For what crime?"

"For the murder of Marietta Mazzucata."

CHAPTER V.

Needless to say there was great excitement in London over the arrest of Gilbert Tressinger. The Opera House tragedy was one of those romantic crimes such as the world loves to read about. A famous singer, a handsome, rich and titled young man, and a terrible death—it contained all the elements of a romance, and you may be sure that this romance lost nothing in the telling. Things had been rather quiet lately, and the big papers were at a loss for material to fill their columns and attract their readers, when lo, this fantastic tragedy took place and became the sensation of the day. Reporters sharpened their pencils and their wits, editors heaved sighs of relief at the prospect of inserting attractive matter in their empty columns, and all the world of Whitechapel, Belgravia, and respectable Brixton gaped hungrily for news concerning the guilt of this—as they thought—past lover, present murderer, and future felon.

For myself, the arrest of my poor young friend had taken me completely by surprise, but I never for a moment thought him guilty of the monstrous crime laid to his charge. He had laid bare his heart before me, he had described the occurrence of the tragedy, therefore, in my own mind I was quite positive that whosoever was guilty, Gilbert at least was innocent. The committal of a crime presupposes a motive, but from all I knew, saw and heard, Tressinger had absolutely no motive which could make him kill the woman he loved, and bring himself within the grasp of the long arm of the law.

The young baronet was a great favorite in the world of society, and both in clubs and drawing-rooms his friends and acquaintances declined to believe in his guilt. All the sympathies of the upper ten thousand were with this representative of their order who was accused of committing a foul crime; but the radical section of the public, the middle class, the religious multitude, and the mob of the slums, all believed the poor fellow guilty, even before he had been tried. He was a gentleman, a baronet, a wealthy man, and that was quite enough reason for those who hated the upper classes to rejoice over the downfall of a prominent member of the same. As to the religious folks, they roundly asserted that the committal of the crime was only the logical outcome of the iniquitous life which Tressinger had been leading—for iniquitous they said it was, simply because his name had been coupled with that of Mazzucata. No good could come out of Nazareth, according to these bigots, and the junction of a singing woman and a fast young man was quite enough to account for all kinds of enormities.

Thus did the one half of the world defend Gilbert, while the other condemned him, and between these two great divisions many violent arguments took place both in favor and against the accused. Naturally enough as the man had not been tried, and the public at large were ignorant of the evidence in the hands of the police, neither party was able to settle the argument in a satisfactory manner, therefore, the preliminary inquiry before the magistrate was looked forward to with the utmost impatience by everyone.

I foolishly thought that when Dallas heard of the arrest of his rival he would at once come back to town, but as day after day passed and he did not return, I began to have a very bad opinion of the young man for such ungenerous conduct. From his remarks about the black carnation which had led me to invite the confidence of Tressinger, it was evident that he knew something of the affair, and if his evidence in any way tended to exculpate Gilbert, it was a shameful thing of him to hold back, when such evidence might free the unfortunate young man from this terrible charge.

As it was, however, I did my best to enlist sympathy on all sides for my young friend, and also visited him frequently in prison, much to his comfort. Owing to the strong expression of public opinion, particularly that of the lower classes, the magistrates refused bail, so poor Tressinger had to remain in prison, a prey to a hundred fears while waiting for his preliminary trial.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson XI. March 18, 1917.

Jesus Saves from Sin—Temperance Lesson.—John 8: 12, 24-37, 56-59.

Commentary.—I. The Light of the World (v. 12). 12. Then spake Jesus again unto them. He was speaking to the Pharisees (v. 13). He was resuming his discourse after several interruptions. The connection is natural between what he says here and v. 52 of the preceding chapter. I am the light of the world—Many writers think that Jesus had in mind one of the ceremonies connected with the feast of Tabernacles when he spoke these words. It was the custom on one or more nights of the feast to make a brilliant light high up in the court of the women in the temple. This was in commemoration of the light which the Lord gave to the Israelites to guide them by night in their journey from Egypt to Canaan. This ceremony was an occasion of great rejoicing. The Jews understood the expression, "Light of the world," to have direct reference to the Messiah, and the Pharisees [illegible] him for claiming it. Christ, he is the Light of the world to illuminate darkened human hearts and reveal the way to heaven. He that followeth me—The way is open for all who will follow Jesus. Only those who deny themselves and take up their cross daily can be his followers. Shall not walk in darkness—He shall be saved from ignorance, infidelity and sin. If he follows me, becomes my disciple, and believes on my name, he shall have my Spirit to bear witness with his, that he is a child of God.—Clarke. Shall have the light of life—The true followers of Jesus have not only divine illumination, but they also have divine life. They have him who is the source of all light and life.

II. The Son lifted up (vs. 24-30). 28. Then said Jesus—Jesus had just spoken of his relation to the Father. He had told the people that unless they believed in him, they would die in their sins. They did not comprehend the message he brought to them, for their hearts were set against him, hence he spoke the words that follow. When ye have lifted up the Son of man—These words refer to Christ's death by crucifixion. He would be lifted up on the cross and the Jews would accomplish his death. He thus prophesied his own death and who his murderers would be. Ye shall know that I am he—Even on his cross the shuddering Jews, amidst the signs from heaven, felt a guilty consciousness that they were crucifying the Holy One, but the words from this extend into a broader meaning. It is the crucifixion by which the world knows the power of Christ, the Redeemer and Judge.—Whedon. At the crucifixion were the darkness and the earthquake in token of the Messiahship of Jesus. The crushing proof, however, that he was the Son of God was his resurrection. I do nothing of myself—Jesus insistently declared his Sonship with the Father. He spoke the words of the Father. 29. He that sent me is with me. This was a true assertion. Yet those who were opposing Jesus would not own it. From Christ's statement here we may realize how we may be comforted and upheld by the divine presence with us. 30. Many believed on him—Such was the convincing nature and force of the truths which he presented, that they believed he was the Messiah, and received the doctrine.—Barnes.

III. Slavery and Freedom (vs. 31-37). 31. Jews which believed on Him—They were not in the majority, but they were a choice and honorable company. They had courage to take their position in spite of prejudice and in the face of unpopularity and persecution. My disciples indeed—For believers to continue in Christ's word involved much. They were not only to believe that Jesus was the Messiah, but they were to obey His word, accept His instruction and follow His example. A disciple indeed is a true Christian. 32. Ye shall know the truth—The truth includes the principles of vital godliness and the practice of the same. It includes Christ Himself, who said, "I am the way, the truth, and the life" (John 14. 6). The truth shall make you free—Jesus prayed for His followers, "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy word is truth" (John 17. 17). The truth has power: sin is to be broken and the heart is to be fully cleansed. 33. We be Abraham's seed—The Jews boasted of their descent from Abraham and thought they were, by virtue of their ancestry, God's people, and no others could rise to the high religious plane they occupied. Were never in bondage—How false their claim was appears from a consideration of their history. They were slaves in Egypt, were captives in Babylon, were oppressed by the Syrians and were at that very time under the dominion of the Romans. It is vain for the sinner to boast of his freedom. He is the bond-slave of sin. Multitudes who are habitually using intoxicating liquors declare they are not slaves to drink, but they are bound by chains that are hard to break.

34. Verily, verily—This repetition intimates a strong affirmation. The servant of sin—The original expression is strong. Whoever commits sin is a bond-servant of sin. He is bound by chains from which he can not free himself. Jesus alone can set him free. 35. The bondservant abideth not in the house for ever (R. V.)—The bondservant is not vitally related to the household. There is no natural connection. The Jews were sinners and hence were bond-servants. They could not, therefore, presume to enjoy the divine favor. They could not inherit the promises of Abraham. The contrast is drawn between the position of a servant and that of a son. 36. Ye shall be free indeed—True freedom can be obtained only through Jesus Christ. If the Jews would accept Him and through faith receive the freedom that He would give, they would not only have the freedom belonging to Abraham's descendants, but they would have what was of infinitely greater importance, freedom from sin. 37. Ye are Abraham's seed—Jesus, Ye seek to kill Me—Thus hostile were they to Jesus. My word hath no place in you—They had not inherited Abraham's character. They would not receive the truth. "The original word conveys the notion that there was no room for this doctrine in their minds. It met with obstructions, and did not penetrate into their hearts."—Barnes.

IV. Abraham's faith (vs. 56-59). 56. Your father Abraham rejoiced to see my day—Abraham believed God's promise that the Messiah would come and rejoice over it. His faith caught sight of the blessedness of the reign of Christ. Was glad—A stronger expression than "rejoiced." 57. Not yet fifty years old—Jesus was only thirty-three. The Jews used the number fifty as a round number to be compared with the two thousand years [illegible] Abraham's time. [illegible] Abraham. They offered an objection to Christ's statement, but it simply called forth a declaration of his divinity. 58. Before Abraham was, I am—"I am," as used here, stands for eternity of existence. [illegible] Compare this with John 1. 1. 59. Then took they up stones to cast at him—Their hatred toward Jesus and their failure to disprove his statements regarding himself led them to resort to the argument of stones. Passing by—He either made himself invisible, or, mingling with the crowd, became hidden to his enemies.

Questions.—Where was Jesus at the time of this lesson. What feast was in progress? What did it commemorate? In what sense is Jesus the light of the world? In what sense was he to be lifted up? How are we to be made free? Of what did the Jews boast? Who are in bondage? In what way did Jesus declare his divinity? How may individuals and nations become free from the drink evil?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Redemption Proclaimed.
I. Through the mediation of Christ.
II. From the curse and slavery of sin.

I. Through the mediation of Christ. As Jesus had applied to himself, in his discourse on the bread of life, one of the typical miracles of the wilderness, so here he represented himself as the antitype of the fiery pillar that led the Israelites during the long pilgrimage. This similitude exhibited the glory and power of Christ in his own nature and the blessings which he brought to the world. None but the divine Lord and Saviour of mankind could justly claim to be the light of the world. His bearing record of himself was a necessity. He was his own great theme. Peerless as the sun in the firmament above, shone the character of Jesus Christ, unspeakably great and glorious in himself, he shed full light upon every subject which pertains to the highest well-being of the human race. It was the chief mission of Christ to explain and establish the spiritual relationship between man and God on the basis of faith, obedience and love. His knowledge of the Father was absolute and most intimate. His advent dispersed darkness and brought new truths into view. He asserted himself to be the only source of illumination for the whole world, and that following him brought sure deliverance from error and sin, and brought light where all was dark. Darkness is the name for the whole condition of the soul averted from God. Referring to his death, his words revealed his sublime heroism. They expressed his unshaken faith in the triumph of his cause. They indicated a consciousness of his peculiar relation to the eternal Father. His death was to establish the absolute unity of purpose and action that exists between himself and his Father. The Jews interrupted the discourse which Jesus was giving to those who believed on him, by their vain boast of a relationship which was disproved by their spirit, language and entire conduct. They claimed political freedom, while in reality they were subjects of Rome. They claimed religious freedom, while in reality they were slaves to the letter of the law. They claimed moral freedom, while in reality they were bondsmen of sin. The whole history of their nation was the record of one bondage following another. The evidence of foreign rule met their eyes everywhere. They bought and sold with Roman money. They paid tribute to a Roman emperor. A Roman governor sat in their judgment hall. A Roman garrison occupied the fortress of their city. With all that they treated Jesus' promise of freedom as an insult. They seemed unable to recognize the inner bondage of the soul. From the declaration of superiority to Abraham Jesus proceeded to the declaration of his equality with God. Abraham had seen the day of Messiah by the light of the prophecies and accordingly the statement of Jesus was a claim to be the true Messiah. The title "I am" proclaimed the self-existence of Christ, his unchangeableness, his omniscience. The Jews understood this as a divine claim and took up stones against him as a blasphemer.

II. From the curse and slavery of sin. The weak and imperfect faith of the believing Jews called forth the discourse on freedom. The greatness of Christ's aim was to make all men free. He sought to show that sin is not natural to man as God meant him to be, and that there is no such relation between a sinner and his sin as makes deliverance impossible. Perfect freedom is only to be enjoyed in perfect harmony with the divine will. Inasmuch as slavery to sin implies a false relationship to God, Jesus adhered to the lines of ancient history so as to mark the distinction between Jews who failed to recognize the privilege of sons and those who were as sons introduced into the true spiritual freedom of Abraham's seed. His declaration was leveled against the traditional faith and old maxims which the Jews in general were holding in their birthright blessing. The freedom effected by Christ is that of sonship. He only can place the slave on a new footing in the household. He proclaims liberty to the soul. He is the Source and Medium of spiritual knowledge. He is the Revealer of the relationship between God and man. Without union with Christ there can be no discipleship. Without abiding in his word there can be no true union with him. T. R. A.

GUTTERING OUT.
—From Esquella de la Torrata, Barcelona.

MUTTERINGS OF RURAL GERMANY

Rising Anger Against Town Upper Classes.

Moderate Peace Terms Are Enlarged.

The rising anger of the German people continues to be reflected faithfully and unmistakably in the provincial press of Germany. In particular, the agricultural community is in revolt against the "orgy of luxury and licentiousness" in the towns, while rural communities are left to starve.

"YOU INSOLENT TOWN SWINE!"

A typical example of these protests appears in the [illegible] Bote, one of the principal newspapers of Silesia.

"Take care, you insolent, you self-indulgent town swine, the countryman has found you out, and knows all about your dirt and scandalous [illegible] [illegible] starve, the last will not be Germany's.

"We can do better with the products ourselves, if only it be because the better nourishment which we send to the towns, and on which the town men thrive, would, if consumed by the peasants, strengthen their muscles and steel their arms for action against the day of reckoning dawns over the land."

DEATH TO USURERS.

The usurers and profiteers have also come under the lash, one of the latest notable to attack them being Gen. Keim, the leader of the German Defence Union. Writing in the Tageblatt-Rundschau, he says:

The wrath of the German people must be turned against those who in their shameless rapacity do not hesitate to enrich themselves at the cost of their countrymen by usury and exploitation of every description.

Thereby they injure not alone the general population, but also our powers of defence. They exploit in a criminal way the distress of the people. One cannot understand how it is that these pests have not yet been [illegible] out from among us.

The formal methods of the law appear to be impotent to deal with them. Such people are devoid of honor and decency, and must be punished as criminals are punished. That punishment must be drastic—in the extreme, even to the point of death.

TOO MUCH SABRE-RATTLING.

These views are quoted with warm approval by a number of provincial German newspapers, which take occasion to denounce in terms a little too strong for reproduction here the "gross immoralities practised by these bloodsuckers without any attempt at concealment." Oddly enough, however, the Stuttgart paper, the Schwabische Tagwacht, both denounces Gen. Keim for his "sabre-rattling spirit."

General Keim's article, so far as it concerns the conduct of the war and the return of peace, is quite in keeping with the spirit which this sabre-rattling warrior has manifested even prior to the war.

This is the spirit which is mainly to blame for the fact that even in neutral countries the idea has gained ground that Germany is ruled by a mighty war party which will not rest until Germany lies beaten and helpless in the dust.

MUST HAVE SUEZ AND GIB.

The minimum peace terms of the Pan-Germanists and of the [illegible] company known as the German Naval League have been revised. They include all the Flemish coast, every important French port, including Marseilles, and the bulk of Africa. To this fancy programme the "Rheinisch Westfalische Zeitung" adds two more small items—the freedom of Gibraltar.

It is a distasteful thing that England, with relatively only a handful of troops at the Pillars of Hercules and in the Nile Delta, should have the power to close these two inlets and roads to the Mediterranean Sea.

The whole miserable enslavement to England in which Europe has to exist finds its expression in this intolerable fact. For the sake of Europe the [illegible] Powers must make it a binding provision in future peace terms that the Straits of Gibraltar as well as the Suez Canal be internationalized.

Turkey, Bulgaria and Austria-Hungary are in urgent need of the opening of these two great means of communication, while for Germany the matter, though of less importance, is still equally necessary, as her means of exit from the watery trap of the North Sea.

THE LIMIT.

While Germany made war on babies in order, as General Stenger, then commanding the 58th Brigade, so happily expressed it, "that no more of these Belgian swine be allowed to grow up into men," her ally, Austria, has resolved to make war on babies' "comforters." The Neue Freie Presse, of Vienna, says:

In view of the great scarcity of rubber the Austrian Minister of Public instruction has ordered chemists and apothecaries throughout the Empire to abstain from selling any further rubber-mouthed infants' feeding bottles or babies' "comforters."

The municipal and rural authorities will be instructed to employ women and girls to make a house-to-house visitation in order to see that no such articles are used by children over twelve months old, and they will be empowered to seize all rubber feeding tubes, teats and comforters, no longer in use.

The hiding away of such rubber articles will entail very heavy penalties.

—THE— Quiet Hour
FOR THOUGHTFUL PEOPLE

THE BARREN DAY.

Never a cheery word voiced to-day—
Never a caroling roundelay—
Never a blossom set on the shrine
Where an untrimmed lamp doth dimly shine—
Nothing to show at the set of the sun,
Of something attempted, or something done.
Barren and bare, the hours trooped by
Into the deeps of eternity!

GOLD TRIED IN THE FIRE.

There is no man that hath left house, or brethren, or sisters, or father, or mother, or wife, or children, or lands, for my sake, and the gospel's, but he shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, houses, and brethren, and sisters, and mothers, and children, and lands, with persecutions; and in the world to come eternal life.

Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you. Now for a season, if need be, ye are in heaviness through manifold temptations, that the trial of your faith, being much more precious than of gold that perisheth, though it be tried with fire, might be found unto praise and honour and glory at the appearing of Jesus Christ.

The God of all grace, who hath called us unto his eternal glory by Christ Jesus, after that ye have suffered a while, make you perfect, stablish, strengthen, settle you. In the world ye shall have tribulation; but be of good cheer; I have overcome the world.

SPRINGS.

My life is a mountain river. I am refreshed by the upper and nether springs. I meet both [illegible]. I go down to [illegible] the natural spirit of [illegible]. I [illegible] in the [illegible] of a [illegible], and sometimes make a large [illegible] on the surplus stock of sympathy.

Somewhat exhausted, I climb to the upper springs to recruit, rest and lay in a stock of fresh fuel for noble fires. Only the most perfect workers can remain in the perpetual presence of [illegible]. I wish to commune with the great and good, here in touch with their thought and witness their career. I see the [illegible] round the lights, and then I drink delicious [illegible]. Good and holy men are the appointed means used by the Most High to lift by their perpetual attraction.

At these mediums between earth and heaven, between realities and divine possibilities, between the severities of duty and the rest of God, compelling me to seek less glorious scenes, are the things most difficult to me.

I dwell between those springs. Beneath I hear the murmur and see the strife and the repulsive faces and some [illegible], as I raise for inspiration and seek the stretch of noble souls. [illegible] and weep my tears at [illegible] with the [illegible] admire.

What man knows can afford to be ignorant of Sarah Martin, of Great Yarmouth, the humble seamstress who worked from house to house for thirty cents a day, then gave one day in the week to prison work, then two, then all? The prison visitor, the prison chaplain, who worked out the principle of criminal jurisprudence which the authorities afterwards adopted. And now a magnificent memorial window in the parish church tells of her [illegible] fame.

What man wishes to be ignorant of John Howard, who penetrated the dungeons of Europe, pleaded with crowned heads, travelled fifty thousand British miles to investigate and relieve the sufferings of humanity. "His plan," said Burke, "is original; it is as full of genius as it is of humanity. It was a voyage of discovery, a circumnavigation of charity." He died at the age of 65 in Cherson in Persia, after having visited a girl with the plague. He said to the British Consul, "Put a sundial on my grave, and let me be forgotten." But that cannot be, for "the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance."

CONSTIPATION
THE COMMONEST ILL.

Constipation is one of the commonest ills of mankind and one too often allowed to go unheeded until some serious complication sets in.

If the bowels are properly looked after there will be no constipation, jaundice, sick or bilious headaches, heartburn, coated tongue, sour stomach, floating specks before the eyes, etc.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills will keep the bowels regular and cure all liver ills.

Mr. Philip McLeod, Tarbot, N.S., writes: "I suffered from constipation ever since I can remember, and for years had pains in the left side of the back. If I walked across the kitchen floor I would have to sit down and rest. That I think was terrible for a man of 30 years of age. The condition of my system was shown by pimples breaking out on my face. I suffered so much pain and [illegible] in my back I am sure my system was full of poison. Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills have entirely cured me. I thoroughly recommend them to everybody."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. a vial, 5 vials $1.00, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

BOY NOBLES COMMON NOW

Britain's Aristocrats Gave Lives for the Empire.

Long List of Deaths Among Titled Ones.

Two bad years of war have placed many little boys in direct succession to important titles and estates in Great Britain through the death upon the battlefield of the father or older brother. A boy, four years old, has succeeded to a peerage, the grandson of the Earl of St. Aldwyn, better remembered as Michael Hicks-Beach, Chancellor of the Exchequer.

A boy of nine has been the sixth Earl of Erne since December, 1914. The validity of his title, however, was not established until last June. His father, Viscount Crichton, one of the most popular men in English society, disappeared during the fighting in Belgium in November, 1914, and he was reported officially as missing. His father, the Earl of Erne, died the following December, and at that time Viscount Crichton was reported to be a prisoner in Germany. His small son became known as Viscount Crichton, and the father as the new Earl of Erne. It was finally discovered where Viscount Crichton's body had been buried in Belgium. It was exhumed and identified, and the nine-year-old [illegible] was legally pronounced to be [illegible] Erne.

A great-grandson of the fourth Earl of Erne is the 14-year-old baronet who has succeeded his father, Sir John Milbanke, who was the tenth baronet of an ancient Scotch house dating from Mary, Queen of Scots. Sir John was killed in the Dardanelles.

There is a two-year-old Lord Petre who succeeded his father last October when Lord Petre, an officer in the Coldstream Guards, died of wounds.

General the Earl of Longford, reported wounded and missing at the Dardanelles last September, recently has been officially reported dead, and this makes his 14-year-old son, Earl of Longford. A younger son, 11 years old, becomes Lord Silchester, the heir to the earldom. Sir Charles Michael Robert Vivian Duff, the third baronet, is [illegible] years old.

The sixteenth baronet of the ancient house of Stewart-Richardson, dating from 1630, is twelve years old, Sir Ian Rory Stewart-Richardson who has succeeded his father, Sir Edward, the fifteenth baronet, captain in the Black Watch, who was killed during the second month of the war. This boy baronet's fortune is small and his ancestral home in Scotland was sold a few weeks ago. His mother, Lady Constance Richardson, a cousin of the Duke of Sutherland, continues to earn the family living by dancing in the music halls.

Lord Killanin, the second baron of an Irish title conferred upon a Lord Chief Justice of Ireland, Michael Morris, belonging to the ancient Galway clan, has a two-year-old heir to succeed him.

Baron de Ramsay's heir is his six-year-old grandson, the son of Capt. C. C. Fellowes, who was killed a year ago, and whose widow is the daughter of Lord Inchiquin. Viscount Monck's heir is his eleven-year-old grandson, the son of Captain Charles Henry Stanley Monck, who was killed in France early in the war. Baron O'Neill's heir is his nine-year-old grandson, and son of Captain Arthur Edward Bruce O'Neill, M.P., who also was killed in action shortly after the war began.

The barony of [illegible] has become extinct, the third baron having been killed in action and leaving no direct heir. Several other peerages will become extinct unless a law is passed by which they can be inherited in the female line.

The Earl of Aylesford's heir is a grandson, eight years old, who has assumed the title of Lord Guernsey following the death upon the battlefield of his father. The Marquis of Bath's heir-presumptive is his [illegible] son, who has become Viscount Weymouth, since his elder brother, who bore that title, was killed a few weeks ago.

The Duke of Wellington's second son, Lord Richard Wellesley, has given his life to his country on the battlefield, as was also the young brother of the Duke of Devonshire, Lord John Cavendish. The Duke of Abercorn's younger brother, Lord John Hamilton, has been killed, and Lord Bernard Gordon-Lennox is the third son of the Duke of Richmond and Gordon. But the Duke of Leinster, a young bachelor and a semi-invalid, the premier duke of Ireland, and at the head of the famous house of Fitzgerald, is the only one among the dukes who has lost his heir-presumptive.

Roomy Inside.

The aunt of a little boy was amazed at the appetite exhibited by him during a recent stay in her household.

"Mercy!" she exclaimed one day. "But you certainly eat a terrible lot, Willie, for such a little fellow!"

Willie, however, was not at all upset by this.

"I expect," he rejoined, "that I ain't so little as I look from the outside."—Columbus Citizen.

COULD NOT SWEEP
BACK WAS SO SORE.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer so much excruciating pain and agony are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

On the first sign of any weakness in the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken.

Mr. J. [illegible], [illegible] Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes: "I take great pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About a year ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I couldn't even sweep the floor. I was advised to try Doan's Kidney Pills and before I had used one box there was a great improvement, and my back was completely cured. I highly recommend 'Doan's' for lame back."

Doan's Kidney Pills are put up in an oblong grey box, the trade mark is a Maple Leaf; refuse substitutes.

Price 50c. per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

FARM GARDEN

THERE'S PROFIT IN MANURE.

There is no more prosperous sign on a farm than a well kept manure heap. It shows thrift and success.

It is important to know the amount and value of manure which will be produced in a given time by animals of different kinds, and various methods of calculating these approximately have been proposed.

Some authorities calculate according to the quantity of straw used as litter, figuring that for one ton of straw, used as bedding, four tons of manure will be produced. Armsby claims that where straw is used economically each horse will need 2,500 pounds of straw per year for bedding. Taking this as a basis, he concludes that a ton of wheat straw, economically handled, may result in six tons of fresh manure, but ordinarily it will not give more than five tons.

CALCULATIONS ON QUALITY.

The method advocated by Heiden, and some other authorities, is probably a more accurate one. This method bases all calculations upon the amount of food consumed and litter used. The dried excrement of horses, cows and other neat cattle and sheep is almost one half of the dry food consumed.

Heiden says 100 pounds of dry matter in food consumed by a horse yields 210 pounds of manure. To this the weight of bedding must be added, which will be about six and a half pounds per day, in order to get the total product of manure. Allowing for dung and urine dropped outside the stable, Heiden calculated that a well-fed working horse will produce 50 pounds of manure per day.

The New Jersey Experiment Station claims the average milch cow, weighing 1,000 pounds, will produce daily manure (dung and urine), unmixed with litter, 70 pounds per cow.

Experiments tried by the Pennsylvania Station give an average of about 46 pounds of dung, 27 pounds of urine, or 73 pounds of total manure daily.

It is estimated that sheep give 183 pounds of manure for each 100 pounds of dry matter in food consumed. A 60 pound sheep, consuming two pounds of dry matter and receiving three-fifths pound of bedding, would produce about four pounds of manure daily.

A hog, it is estimated, produces from six to ten pounds of manure per day.

The quantity of manure, as well as quality, produced by farm animals is governed considerably by the character of the food.

Foods rich in protein increase the consumption of water, and the excretion of urine, consequently increasing the bulk of manure produced without improving the quality.

The Massachusetts Experiment Station has shown that hens produce from one-fifth to one-fourth pound of manure per head daily.

THE QUALITY OF FARM MANURES

Sheep manure contains a small amount of water is, weight for weight, the richest manure produced by any of the common farm animals. It is what is called a hot manure, fermenting rapidly with the development of heat. Like horse manure, it is especially likely to lose ammonia.

Horse manure is very dry, and is, therefore, difficult to thoroughly mix with litter. It is a hot manure, undergoing fermentation rapidly and generating a high heat on account of its loose texture. It is likely to lose ammonia even more rapidly than sheep manure, and requires careful management from the moment it is voided. The composition of horse manure is more uniform than that of any other farm animal, chiefly because the food of horses is more uniform. The urine is especially rich.

Hog manure is very variable in composition, owing to the variable nature of the food supplied to the animal, but is generally rich, although containing a high percentage of water. It generates little heat in decomposing.

The manure of neat cattle, like that of hogs and for the same reason, is variable in character, but is generally poorer than that of other farm animals on account of its large percentage of water. It decomposes slowly and develops little heat.

Poultry manure is very rich in all the fertilizing elements, but especially so in nitrogen, owing to the fact that the urinary secretions, which contain large amounts of nitrogen as well as potash in readily available form, are voided with the solid excrement. It quickly loses nitrogen, however, by fermentation, if not properly mixed with absorbents or preservatives. In no case should alkaline substances like lime, wood ashes, etc., be mixed with poultry manure.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

Corn is planted thicker when grown for silage than for grain, and a larger proportion of nutrients are as a result obtained in the stalks in the former case. The closeness of planting varies somewhat in different sections according to soil and climate. The common practice of growing corn for grain is to plant in hills three and one-half feet apart both ways; when intended for silage it is generally planted in drills three and one-half feet apart, with stalks eight to ten inches apart in the row. This will secure a fair proportion of ears and a maximum yield of feed materials in the crop taken off the land.

Root crops and rape help out the sheep ration.

The best medicine for the young lambs is sunshine. Let them out into the open air on sunny days.

If you cannot provide a high, well-drained yard and shelter for your sheep, better sell your flock to some one whose sheep barn and enclosure are on dry ground.

Profit is what we keep sheep for. Begin to seek and expect a profit not by stocking up heavy with sheep, but by getting a few good ones and keeping them right.

The least amount of nitrogen will be lost from stored manure if animals are kept on it or it is kept in a moist, well packed condition.

A few strands of loose wire lying around has proved the undoing of many a valuable horse.

The farmer who did not build that silo may wish he had done so before the winter is over.

Fish meal, made from the waste at fisheries on both the Atlantic and Pacific coasts, is being used quite extensively as a feed for poultry, sheep and cattle. The use of this waste as feed was suggested many years ago, but the development of the industry is quite recent. Good results are reported from the use of the meal.

Salt has been tried in Pennsylvania this year as a substitute for potash as a fertilizer for potatoes. The vine attained a healthy growth, but the development of the tubers was disappointing.

EPIRUS IS COVETED.

Italy and Greece Seek Ascendancy in Original Home of Hellenes.

What portion of Northern Epirus Greece wished the entente Allies to promise her as the price of her participation in the European war will not be known, perhaps, until the terms of peace are made public. That portion of the ancient district of Northern Greece which is said to be coveted both by Italy and the government at Athens lies in the new principality of Albania.

The Epirus district, without respect to its modern boundaries—Greek and Albanian—is the subject of the following war geography society:

"In ancient times the name Epirus (mainland) was given to an extensive area of Northwestern Greece to distinguish it from an indefinite northern boundary somewhere in the southern part of the territory now embraced in the infant principality of Albania to the Corinthian gulf, and although the Athenians, Corinthians and Spartans were wont to look upon the inhabitants of the district as semi barbarous no less an authority than Aristotle gave it as the original home of the Hellenes.

"Owing to its extremely mountainous character Epirus has never been a great grain-producing section, but from ancient times up to the present it has been famous for its fine cattle and horses, also for a peculiar breed of dog, the Molossian. In the eastern part of the district towers Mount Lacmon, the backbone of the Pindus range, on which rise three of the great rivers of Northwestern Greece.

Epirus became world-renwned even before historic times on acount of the great oracle of Dodona, the ruins of whose temples were discovered during the last half of the nineteenth century only a few miles southwest of the modern Macedonian town of Janina. The messages from the gods were received at Dodina through the rustlings of the leaves of an oaq tree in which Zeus was supposed to reside, but a local legend says that the first message was delivered by a dove speaking from the tree with a human voice. Atany rate, the priestess of the oracle was called Peleiades (doves). Herodotus reports that while on a visit to Egyptian Thebes he learned that the oracle had been founded by an Egyptian princess who had been spirited away by Phoenicians.

"The Hellenes founded many colonies on the Epirian shore and these served as stepping stones to dominion over the Adriatic. The wealthiest of the ancient cities was Phoenice, which became the head of an Epirotic legue after the fall of the Molossian kingdom.

"The Molossions, most powerful and progressive of the fourteen tribes which inhabited Epirus, were ruled by chieftains who professed to be descendants of Pyrrhus, the son of Achilles, who was supposed to have settled in this part of the world after the fall of Troy.

"One of the most noted of the Molossian kings was Arymbas II., who gave his brother's daughter an excellent education, married one of them himself, and gave the other, Olymias, to Philip II. of Macedon. Olympian lives in history as the mother of Alexander the Great. From Alexander's aunt descended Pyrrhus, who waged a long war with Rome in behalf of the Tarentines and who made Epirus a power in world politics for a short time. More than 150 years after the death of Pyrrhus Epirus again came into conflict with Rome as the ally of Perseus, the Macedonian, who mounted a throne over the body of his murdered brother, Demetrius. The Romans under Aemilius Paulus annihilated the forces of Perseus at Pydna (168 B. C.) and took the defeated king in triumph of the capital. The punishment meted out to Epirus for its share in the war was the destruction of seventy of her principal cities and the enslavement of 150,000 of its people—a blow from which the kingdof never recovered.

"With the partition of the Roman empire Epirus was given to the eastern emperors. When the Latins took Constantinopue in 1204 it became a possession of Michael Angeeus Comnenus. In succeeding centuries the territory has been variously governed and misgoverned by Albanians, Venetians and Turks."

SIMPLE FEEDING AT VINELAND.

The feeding of the fowls at the Vineland egg-laying contest, which up to date is leading all other contests by a good margin, is of much interest to poultry keepers because of it being a simpler ration than most poultry keepers use, and it is rapidly dispelling the idea that poultry to produce well must have the so-called fancy feeds of many different kinds of grains. In planning the feeds which should be used in the competing pens at the Vineland contest the following factors were carefully considered:

First, that the rations have been evolved which carry sufficient amount of nutrients properly proportion for the object of the contest.

Second, the rations have been made as simple as possible, and only common grain, wheat, corn and oats and certain of their by-products have been used.

Third, the dry mash method of feeding has been adopted, to same to be supplemented by grains fed in deep litter.

Fourth, grit, shell and charcoal are provided in separate hoppers and kept continually before the fowls. Fifth, the feeding is in the hands of practical men, who have had experience with both the heavy and light breeds.

Sixth, identical rations are fed to all competing pens—modifications necessary for different breeds is made in the amount fed and in the method of feeding—that is a progressive step, as the much lighter breeds should not be handled as the heavier fowls to gain the same results.

Seventh, in regulating the diets the object was to maintain the fowls at uniform standard weight, each competing bird being weighed monthly.

Eighth, all foods consumed by the flocks is recorded in weekly periods and study made of the relation of egg production and food consumption.

The following are the rations used: New Jersey contest mash, 100 pounds wheat bran, 100 pounds wheat middlings, white or flour; 100 pounds ground oats, standard or better; 100 pounds of cornmeal, pure; 100 pounds of meat scraps, 50 per cent. protein. The dry mash contains considerable variety. The ingredients are readily obtained, being in 100-pound quantities, and can be readily mixed.

The dry mash contains 19.2 per cent. of protein, 39.2 per cent. of carbohydrates, this making the nutritive ration for the mash of 1 to 2.8. Supplementing this dry mash the competing fowls are fed morning and night, in deep litter, 100 pounds of corn, 100 pounds of wheat, 100 pounds of clipped oats. This is the grain ration and has a nutritive ratio of 1 to 8.2. The amount of this ration fed is determined and the weight and production of the stocks. Assuming that certain flocks consume equal parts of grain and mash, the nutritive ration of such a combined ration should be 1 to 4.5. On the other hand, if the combined rations should be in the proportion of one part of mash to two parts of grain, the nutritive ratio would be 1 to 5.4.

During the winter, if conditions seem to warrant, the grain ration may be somewhat modified by the addition of 100 pounds of cracked corn. These are the rations that are being fed the first year. During the season of breeding the second year modifications will be made in order to maintain the birds in good breeding condition. Each flock is provided with double or alternate yards, covered with a permanent alfalfa sod. In addition beets and cabbage are fed for green food. There is nothing complicated about the feed; it is simple and can be had in any zone, and the results obtained by the Vineland contest, which to date leads all others, is proof that the feeding method is a good one for results.

NOTES

Make very sure of the determination of the setting hen, before risking good eggs.

Make equally sure of the reliability of the artificial incubator.

Clean out and disinfect the brooder, or any old brood coops that have wintered over.

If starting with poultry, buy only the best, and increase the flock by means of hatchings of guaranteed eggs.

If you will have day old chicks, get them from a reliable breeder.

Try for uniformity of color and shape in the flock.

There is nothing better as first food for little chicks than ordinary johnny cake, baked hard, crumbled and fed dry. Next best is the dry grain chick food sold by poultry supply stores, provided it is free from mould or mustiness.

Two roosters in the same pen would be sparring and become useless on that account.

Usually a flock of 20 or 25 ducks and four or five drakes give better results in fertility than one drake and four or five ducks mated together.

Be sure that little ducklings always have plenty of water to drink, especially at meal time, and deep enough so that they can get their heads in it up to their eyes.

FACE WRINKLES.

Some Advice to Women Who Fear Their Appearance.

That wrinkles are bound to come even on the fairest face is not altogether so, for with care those telltale furrows can be prevented from making their appearance if you will take proper pains. There are, however, some women who do not know how to ward them off, and to them the following advice is recommended. Women suppose that crow's feet are the most important sign of age as far as wrinkles go, and so long as they have not these they imagine that they can hide their years. Nothing could be farther from the truth. At the base of the ear by the time you are thirty one little line will make its appearance. Every ten years after that another little tally will be marked there by the hand of Time. [illegible] then when smoothing your visage by massage that this little corner will not be neglected, or despite all the rest your secret will be betrayed.

Women particularly have a tendency very early in life to show lines about the mouth, which are not only a disfigurement at all times, but often become so accentuated by fatigue or illness as to completely alter the expression of the face. Most readers of these lines will probably resent the accusation that their lines are due largely to the pernicious habit of chewing gum. If you do not chew gum, however, you surely indulge occasionally in caramels or bonbons of a like nature which require an unusual amount of effort in mastication. It is impossible to eat these things without making faces and frequent facial distortion is sure to leave its mark. Another reason for the furrows around a woman's mouth is her nervous temperament and the consequent volubility of her speech. Actors and public speakers invariably have these wrinkles in the vicinity of the mouth as an inevitable outcome of the extra effort which the persuance of their careers brings to bear upon the facial muscles in that region.

No beneficial effect can be accomplished without the abolition of the harmful cause. If you will avoid doing the things which are detrimental to the beauty of the lower part of the face, such as making faces when you talk, you can, by the aid of careful and persistent massage with astringent lotions, prevent appearance of the marks. Apropos of astringent lotions, it should be borne in mind that to all treatments of the face three things are absolutely necessary. First, the thorough cleansing of the epidermis; secondly, the softening of the tissues, and while they are in this state the moulding takes place through massage and the application of bandages, and finally friction with astringent preparations, which cause the parts under treatment to become fixed in the desired location.

FROM MONSTER TO GOOD KING

Life of Lewanika, King of African Barotse.

A Monument to Work of One Good Man.

In the heart of the sombre African jungle there died recently one of the greatest and last of the kings of the unknown, though not undiscovered, world. A ruler of one of those [illegible] in very truth, a part of "heart of darkness." The dead king was called Lewanika, head chief of the Barotse, and he was arbiter of the lives and destinies of some millions of black men dwelling in the [illegible] valley of the upper Zambesi. Excepting Abyssinia, his was the greatest native empire on the barbaric continent, and the man himself perhaps the last of those picturesque and terrible monarchs whose doings and [illegible] so fearful a shadow from contrast with the enlightened light of the world outside.

Lewanika, dead at 76, saw his country emerge from the wildest, murkiest savagery to a place literally within the [illegible] sun of civilization. Beginning life as butcher, outrager, and wholesale assassin, he closed it a constructive and beneficent old barbarian, in love with the brilliant and [illegible] great lands across the seas.

In his lifetime he abolished savage punishments, brutal sacrifices and the horrors of some forms of idolatry, he built and maintained schools, wrote a fixed body of law, admitted the white man and his ideas, and even established female suffrage of a kind from which his neighbor across the big tides may wish to adopt something.

To the [illegible] of us who remember "Darkest Africa" as a phrase, with a connotation of cannibalism, the story of Lewanika must be of interest. He was born in 1860 in troublous times, far from Lialui, the capital city of the Barotse (or more properly Marotse). In name he was Lobosi, and he was the twenty-second ruler of his line, which had been established in the seventeenth century and had retained with innumerable interruptions, fatalities and restorations.

When Lobosi was born his uncle Lepopo sat on the throne as chief of the tribes in a most truly Barotsean manner, it must be said. One of his chief diversions was to chase down some of the innumerable children of subject tribues and boat them to a low island in the Zambesi near Lialui, where he fed them to the crocodiles for his own and his tribe's amusement. The bloody Lepopo was deposed and assassinated after eleven years of this kind of circus, and succeeded by another uncle of Lobosi, who was himself expelled after brief rule to make way for Lobosi, who ascended the throne in 1878, at the tender age of 17.

In the early part of his reign Lobosi exhibited all the interest in savagery that had graced his uncle so fatally. The patient Barotse stood for this kind of rule until 1884, when Lobosi brought himself to fall by torturing and murdering his own brother. He fled into exile, but returned with an army the following year and put the new ruler to rout. He reascended his throne after changing his ruled name to Lewanika.

On his re-entry into Lialui the victorious Lewanika found among his people a strange creature, a white man with quiet, conciliatory way, who had come to take nothing, and was decidedly anxious to make friends. Lewanika long repulsed this visitor, but eventually yielded, received him and permitted his overtures.

This man was Francis Coillard, the famous Zambesi missionary. When he went to his first meal with the king, that worthy squatted on the ground in complete nudity, and devoured ducks with his hands and teeth. Toward the end of his life the king had learned even an excellent taste in European foods, wines and table fittings.

Coillard, by unshakable patience, got himself admitted to the confidence and trust of the king, who in time treated him with high honor and consulted him about the government of his tribe.

"What," he cried out one day in the face of recurring trouble, "shall I do with my people?"

Coillard's reply is preserved in his diary, left on his death at Lewanika's court in 1904:

"Take the sacred spear from under your cloak and throw it away. [illegible] for all, attach your people to yourself by making their welfare your first object; put a stop to theft; give them justice, quiet sleep, and good fruit to eat."

In 1902 Lewanika, arrayed in good European clothes and invariably equipped with a silk hat, attended the coronation of King Edward. Barotseland having before that time become a voluntary British protectorate. King Edward received him with great interest and British society took him up and lionized him.

Lewanika went home with his head unturned, but with several new notions piled into it. He worked on the problem for four years before he dared anything so revolutionary as freeing the slaves. Then, even two years after Coillard had died and his guiding hand had been removed, Lewanika abolished human serfdom in his country. Civilization had taken hold with him, a something in a savage prince.

Kickball for Baby.

We've football.
We've basketball.
It's a great game.
But they're not baby games.
Kickball is quite another matter.
First one buys a big, light rubber ball.
It may be almost as large as baby's head.
Then one crochets a cover, the whole being suspended by ribbon or cord.
It should reach down to the calves when baby, lying down, has his feet stuck straight up.
Just watch the lively feet of the 2 year-old as he lies in his bed and kicks and kicks.

The League to Enforce Peace.

Of all the various movements that have had to do with the readjustment of international relations that is most certainly to follow the conclusion of the European War, the suggestions put forward by the League to Enforce Peace have met with the heartiest responses. Much of the comment, however, has shown that there was considerable misundestanding as to the League's purposes, and this fact makes of much interest the announcement that early in February there will be published a book written by an officer of the League, and setting forth accurately the objects for which it stands. This is Robert Goldsmith's "The League to Enforce Peace."

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THAT is a significant statement quoted by the Telescope from Bradstreets. Eighty-five out of every hundred business men who fail are men who do not advertise. The faster the age grows, the more necessary advertising becomes.

THE British Government is taxing war profits in a way that the Canadian Government has not attempted to do. The Canadian tax is twenty five per cent. of the excess profits, while the British tax is approximately sixty per cent.

DONT be too ready to doff your heavy garments by the lamb-like debut of March. Some very vigorous lion stunts may be up the sleeve of Old Probs before the 31st inst. passes off the calendar. An ounce of prevention is worth more than a pound of cure often.

THE Toronto World advises Premier Hearst to "look into the Department of Education and encourage any sparks of intelligence or embers of progress that are to be discovered there, if he does not wish to provide a new subject of attack for the Opposition."

"ORANGES lower than potatoes. Grapefruit costs less than onions or cabbage," says a headline. Which gives a modern and perfectly practical application of the suggestion attributed to Marie Antoinette, to the effect that poor people of France should eat cake if they were unable to buy bread.—Providence Journal.

THE Provincial Secretary has introduced a Bill into the Ontario Legislature to empower Municipalities to buy, store and sell fuel and articles of food as designed by order in-council, such as cereal, bread, butter, milk, eggs and potatoes. The act also empowers municipalities to buy land, build, equip and conduct depots, appoint staffs and make rules necessary for the business entailed.

PTE. FRANK GOLDEN

Pte. Frank Golden writes his mother, Mrs. S. Golden of Chepstow from Crowborough, Eng.—I have just got back off pass and feeling fine. I had a pass for about 2 days and a half and have had a grand time. I have been to London and saw some lovely places such as: Buckingham Palace, Regents Park where the Zoo is and Madame Tussaud's Waxworks. Believe me it is worth seeing but I was made a fool of. You know you cannot tell the difference between the wax figures and the people if they are standing still, so up up I went to an old woman that was standing still, and started to examine her all over, when she started to walk away and I was so confounded struck I did not know which way to turn. I was down at Buckingham Palace watching them change guards and it was some sight. I think the King's horses are better looked after than a lot of people in England. And the best thing which I saw was the King and Queen and their daughter. I would not have seen them, only the cop stopped us and told us that the King would be passing that place in about five minutes so we thought that we would stop and have a look at him. So in about five minutes along comes the King and Queen and their daughter and their carriage stopped almost opposite us, and the Lord Mayor of London came out all dressed in a beautiful long garment and he presented the King with something which looked like a sword. There were an awful bunch of photographers which are working for the newspapers and I think I got in one of the photos so I will be pretty well advertised by the time you receive my letter. And then I went down and saw a lot of nurses getting decorated with the Military Medal for bravery which they had done in France. Well mother I am sorry to tell you which I have held till the last of the letter. I am now on a draft which I think will be leaving for France next week. I have completed my short course and am now ready for France and fit, and am glad to get out of this hole which they call Crowborough.

When tempted to buy a potato, control yourself. Buy a war loan bond instead.

Bruce's Oldest Woman

An item appeared in last week's Telescope about a very smart old lady of 91 years, living in the Tara neighbourhood. A reader informs us that there is at least one older lady in Bruce County. Mrs. Devine of Paisley, who up to the last few weeks was as active in many respects as a young person. Mrs. Devine is at present ill with pneumonia and owing to her extreme age, prospects of recovery are not the brightest.

MASONS' BIG NIGHT

Saugeen Lodge Officers Put On First Degree In Fine Style On D. D. G. M.'s Official Visit — Annual Banquet At Erdman's.

Local Masons foregathered on Tuesday night for their annual banquet, a time-honored celebration which is held on the official visit of the District Deputy Grand Master. There was an excellent turnout of members and also about ten visiting brethren from Cargill. The first degree was well exemplified by Worshipful Master C. B. Robinson and officers in good style. R. W. Bro. A. P. Johnston, D. D. G. M. complimented the officers on their good work and expressed his thanks to those brethren who had honored him by electing him to the head of the newly-created District of Bruce. After the work of the evening the brethren adjourned to Erdman's Restaurant where they enjoyed a fine spread, put on in Erdman's best style. W. Bro. W. H. McBurney made a capable toastmaster and introduced a short toast list as follows:—King and Craft responded to by W. Bro. H. Loughleen of Cargill; W. Bro. L. A. Eedy. W. Bro. C. B. Robinson; Canada and the Empire, W. Bro. Geo. Sirrs of Cargill, Bros. J. H. Rainsbottom and D. McKorracher; Visiting Brethren, W. Bros. R. A. Fowlie, M. L. Ziegler and Geo. Houston of Cargill, Grand Lodge of Canada, R. W. Bro. A. P. Johnston, R. W. Bro. W. J. Loughlin; Our Pastmasters, W. Bros. C. Petteplace, D. Traill, E. Myles, P. Bremner. Saugeen Lodge No. 197, proposed by W. Bro. Sirrs of Cargill, and responded to by W. Bro. W. H. McBurney and W. Bro. C. S. Stephen; Juniors Wardens Toast, Bro. David George. The part that Canada and the Masonic brethren are taking in the war received a good deal of attention and the duty of Masons in the present situation was emphasized. An enjoyable and profitable evening was brought to a close by singing the National Anthem, followed by Auld Lang Syne. The officers of the Lodge who so well exemplified the first degree are:— Wor. Master, C. B. Robinson; S. W., W. J. Jones; Junior Warden, D. George; Treas., H. O. Hunter; Dir. Cer. W. H. McBurney; Sec., R. H. McKay; S. D., N. E. Hiscox; J. D., T. Beer; S. S., J. Douglas; J. S., E. Myles; I. G., W. Northgrave; O. G., Guy Henderson.

Wouldn't Be Bluffed

Isador and Eddie Weber, sons of Hy Weber of Deemerton, have enlisted in the Grey battalion. POETS' CORNER

ST PETER'S JOB NO CINCH

Three men walked briskly up the street,
Knocked loudly at the door.
Saint Peter stood there at his post.
And calmly looked them o'er.

I pray thee let us in, good sir,
With eager voice they cried.
Well now! You're likely-looking chaps,
That cannot be denied.

But before you gain admittance here.
There's a few things I must know,
Then, turning to the nearest one
"What did you do down below?

How many people have you helped?
I hope you'll make it clear,
For only just the good and true
Can hope to enter here.

Don't hesitate, but speak right out,
But as briefly as you can,
The man then proudly raised his head
Said, "I'm a Pres-by-teri-an."

"Oh, then, of course your place I'll find
Just wait, I'll telephone,
Hello, one Presbyterian,
Yes, a corner of his own."

"Now, sir," he turned to number two,
"Some poor, I hope you've fed,"
The man looked boldly up at him
Then slowly shook his head.

"Of my good deeds when down below
I never kept a list,
Sufficient then for you to know,
I am a Methodist."

"Hello, there, one good Methodist
Please help him find his place,
To keep those separate heavens
Seems to me a sad disgrace."

The third came trembling to his turn
In dread his fate to know.
He said, "I moved around a lot
So to every church did go.

I made a lot of friends," he said
"And I never had a foe,
But, I voted for church union
When I was down below.

Saint Peter looked at him a while,
A twinkle in his eye.
Quoth he, "That helps a lot, my friend,
Our work to simplify.'

"Hello, oh yes, there's one man more
But, sing praises long and loud,
He does not need a separate place,
He'll mingle with the crowd."

Some Accident

When Norman McDonald and Gertrude Cavill were driving out of Paisley, about two weeks ago, says the Chesley Enterprise, a horse and cutter driven by a Paisley boy who must have been asleep or moonstruck, ran into them, sending the shaft of the cutter through Gertrude's clothes under her arm, and tipping Norman's cutter over backwards. The Paisley horse kept serenely on its way and Gertrude was so securely impaled by the shaft that she was dragged a short distance before the horse could be stopped. As a result of the accident she is the possessor of several riddled garments and three broken ribs, though feeling sore Miss Cavill by being well bandaged is able to be up and around. Her escape from instant death was truly miraculous.

Rev. Mr. Cosens At Southampton

The anniversary of Southampton Methodist church was celebrated last Sunday and Monday. On Sunday Rev. C. W. Cosens of Walkerton preached at 11 a. m. and 7 p. m., and he is both talented and forceful. In the morning his text was:—"And who is he that will harm you, if ye be followers of that which is good" I Peter 3:13. In the evening his text was:—"The entrance of thy words giveth light" Psalms 119: 130. In both instances he handled the subject in a masterful manner, and was followed most attentively by large audiences, particularly in the evening, when the services were cancelled in the Presbyterian and Baptist churches. On Monday evening the ladies of the church provided one of those good old-fashioned suppers. Then followed a musical and literary program in the church, which proved much better than the average of such affairs, every number being a treat, not forgetting the address by Rev. Cosens, which was alone worth the price of admission.—Southampton Beacon.

Book By Kincardine Business man

A volume that represents a life-time of research in the holy scriptures by a former Kincardine citizen, "The Light of Truth as Revealed in the Holy Scriptures" by Levi Rightmyer, has just recently been published by Sherman, French & Co. of Boston. The author was well-known in this district as a salt manufacturer, and was at one time president of the Ontario Salt Association. In his leisure time he made a most earnest study of the bible, and the fruit of his lifelong research appears in his book, containing nearly one thousand octavo pages. The book is not based on men's theories, but is a comparison of Scripture with Scripture; one part of the Bible is used to throw light upon another. By this process a new view is given of the future life, spirits, future punishment, and many kindred subjects. The wealth of material the Bible itself has made this task of comparison alone a stupendous one, the value of which is immediately evident. Such an undertaking on so large a scale is probably unique in Bible literature. The Book may be had from the publishers at $2.75 net.

Builds Up The Farm

E. HODGETTS, Lambeth, Ontario, says:

"I used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on part of my oat field. The previous owner of the farm paid me a visit this Summer, and in walking over the farm we came to the oat field. My friend asked me why the oats on a part of the field were of much greater length and quality than the rest. I informed him what I had done, and he said he could not have believed it if he had not seen it, that Homestead Fertilizer could give such results. I can recommend it highly to anyone wishing to build up their farm and grow big crops."

700 Bushels From 17½ Acres

WM. READ, Lucan, Ontario, says:

"I feel under obligations to write you in regard to Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer. I sowed 17½ acres of wheat on the 2nd day of October. On account of the wet weather I was unable to sow any sooner. I used 200 pounds of the Bone Black Fertilizer per acre, and I threshed 700 bushels of wheat, machine measured. It is the finest sample that has been seen. A great many farmers thought it would be impossible to grow a good crop seeding at this late date, but the fertilizer certainly pushed the crop. You may use this as you wish, for I know if the farmers throughout Ontario knew the producing value of your fertilizer they would use a great deal more."

BRANT PREP. MEETING

Unanimously Memorializes the Government to Bring on Conscription and Tax War Profiteers. League Buys War Bonds With Money in Treasury.

Brant farmers, assembled at the Town Hall here last Wednesday afternoon, came out flat-footedly in favor of conscription for Canada, and also went on record in favor of taxing the enormous war profits of munitions making firms. Resolutions concerning these two points were carried unanimously by the meeting which was an open meeting of the Brant Branch of the Bruce Preparedness League. Representative farmers from all parts of the township were present. President Frank Rennie occupied the chair.

A resolution, moved by Ex-Reeve Spence Nesbitt, seconded by John L. Hutton, provided that the Federal Government be memorialized to take action along the line of taxing the excessive war profits of munitions firms, the money thus provided to be used in prosecuting the war.

John Rowland and W. J. McNally fathered a resolution to the effect that in the opinion of the meeting the time has arrived when conscription of some sort should be made law, and enforced, as under the present voluntary system patriotic families were giving more than they could spare while more selfish ones were staying at home and reaping the benefit of the extra demand for labor caused by such shortage.

Secretary James A. Lamb was asked to forward both of the above resolutions to Hon. W. T. White, Ottawa.

An interesting feature of the meeting was the presentation of a token of appreciation by the Township of Brant to Capt. Gerald Haumore V. S. who had returned on leave from the Front the previous day after two years in the Army Veterinary Service in France. The presentation was made by Reeve Willoughby.

Speeches dealing with the work of the league and the points covered in the resolution were made by: R. S. Nesbitt, H. M. Lay, J. A. Rowland, Reeve Willoughby, Arch Weir, Geo. McCallum, John Clancy, J. B. Campbell.

Mr. John Clancy made a good suggestion to the effect that as the League would not be using its funds for some time yet, that the amount in the Treasury, $300, be used to buy Canada Victory Bonds. Mr. Clancy's proposal was immediately adopted.

The meeting decided to elect a small executive committee of seven. Mr. Rennie declined the Chairmanship, although expressing himself as eager to help in any way he could. The committee was named as follows.—Chairman, John Clancy; Reeve Willoughby, John M. Hopper, John L. Hutton, W. J. McNally, F. Rennie, James A. Lamb.

At the close of the meeting Mr. Rennie invited all present to be his guests at the Soldiers' Aid Tea Room, where tea was served.

WITH THE 160TH BATT'N.

Boys are Receiving the Final Touches in Their Training at Wittley Camp —Plunged Through Real Gas Cloud in Practice.

The doings of the 160th at Wittley are well told in a letter written home by one of the junior officers last week which we publish in part:—

We have been having great weather lately. We haven't had a drop of rain for three weeks now, but instead have had snow and frost. The ground has been frozen hard and we have about one inch of snow, but I believe it is going to get soft again by the way it feels outside, and that means oceans of mud, but we shouldn't worry, we expect to be in Wittley next week in a dry camp.

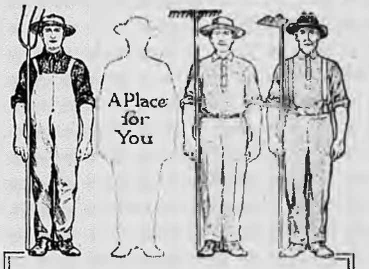
We have put in the hardest month's training during January that we've had—bayonet fighting, musketry and bombing without a let-up. We are being served out with our new Webb equipment and Lee Enfield rifles, and it won't be a matter of more than six or eight weeks before we are in France.

All our officers and N. C. O's are back from courses and the Colonel is working us hard. This morning the whole battalion went through the trenches filled with gas (real gas), each man wearing a helmet, and Col. Weir was the first man through. We are getting our revolvers next week and soon will be ready for action. Well, let her come, we are ready for it, and we are going as a unit at that.

We are very comfortable in our hut. It is a fine spot since we have it fixed up. These camp beds are the greatest thing out. I wouldn't trade beds with the King for mine with those four heavy grey blankets. When I go on pass to London, I can't sleep in a hotel bed with its white linen sheets and springs. You don't know how to act rightly. I haven't been sick a day since coming over, and feel great both in spirit and health. We have all kinds of fun in the mess at nights. Nothing much to do but sit around the fire and talk of Bruce, etc. We have a piano and Victrola, and we have some real music. These officers are sure a good bunch, and we are all like one big family and sure act the part. Well, I must close.

Renewed your Telescope yet?

Lieut. Harold Young, who has been home for several months on sick-leave on account of wounds, left for the Front again last week.



Recruits Wanted for Production

Just as surely as lack of food is strangling Germany day by day, so plenty of food is winning the victory for the allies. The French armies, for instance, were never better fed than now, for France cannot forget the awful lesson of 1870 — the failure of her food supply. To this she attributed the loss of that war.

To feed the French soldiers around Verdun, more than 25,-500,000 pounds of food a week were required. This gives a faint idea of the colossal task of feeding an army. Canada and Britain have a huge army of fighting heroes on the line; every man MUST have plenty of food, in spite of a world shortage. Upon Canada's food production all principally rely.

The Farmers of Ontario Urgently Need Help

The Department of Agriculture appeals to men and boys to enlist in the farm help campaign. The Department appeals to men unfit for military service, or who find it impossible to enlist in the army. Do your "bit" by helping to increase production of foodstuffs. This is your hour of opportunity.

The farmers of Ontario need the help of retired farmers, of men following no occupation (retired), of business men who can spare a portion of their time. We appeal to all who can so arrange their ordinary affairs to plan to help some farmer friend, particularly in seed time and harvest.

Confer with your county District Representative of the Department of Agriculture, or write, "Farm Help Campaign," care Department of Agriculture, Toronto.

CURRENT COMMENT

The submarine menace is serious and grave. Should it succeed, it would mean disaster, says Lloyd George. What would it mean to Canada?

A Wilkesbarre magistrate accepted three potatoes in payment of a fine of $1.50; a man in Chicago [illegible] in settlement of a taxi fare, and he bought two "diamonds" and a picture frame at a five and ten cent store with the same kind of currency. That is the sort of story that is going the rounds of the U. S. press.

The big advance of Gen. Haig's forces in France and the capture of Kut-el-Amara by Gen. Maude's troops are both encouraging pieces of news from the front. Unfortunately these are offset by the reported depredations of the German submarines. The sinking of the Laconia and now the reported sinking of a British troopship are disquieting items of news. The loss of life may be considerable. The British Admiralty is no doubt doing its best to overcome this submarine menace. We do not know what it has been able to prevent, but we know what the submarines are doing, and they seem to be doing quite a lot. Germany is in high glee over their exploits but we have no doubt Britain will find some way to check this latest German attempt to get a stranglehold on Britain.

MAUDE IN MESOPOTAMIA.

While the attention of the people of Canada is mostly centered on the German submarine menace and on Gen. Haig's advance on the French front, Great Britain's warlike operations are not confined to these. She is safeguarding Egypt and the Suez Canal, and in doing this has driven back into the desert the Turks and the Arabs. In conjunction with France and Italy she is gathering together a huge force at Saloniki with which to check the Kaiser's activities in the Balkans and drive a wedge in between them and Constantinople and at the same time cut the line that runs to Constantinople. Between these operations and those of Gen. Maude in Mesopotamia and Grand Duke Michael's in Armenia there is well defined concerted action. While Gen. Maude has captured Kut-el-Amara and is now advancing on Bagdad, it must not be supposed that the Russians are idle. Russia and Britain have been putting things to rights in Persia, where German influence was strong before the war.

In reply to Lord Bryce's inquiry in the House of Lords regarding conditions in Persia, Lord Curzon described the march of a British force under Sir Percy Sykes from Bunder Abbas, on the Strait of Ormuz, northward through Ispahan to Teheran, the Persian capital. This march of a thousand miles through a rough, almost trackless land was one of the remarkable military achievements of the war in the East and a manoeuvre of great strategic value. Persia is the link between the British and Russian empires, a trade road between Europe and the great unknown Central Asia and between Russia and the Persian Gulf. It was one of the goals of the Kaiser's Eastern ambition, a treasury to be unlocked by the Bagdad Railway. Through Turkey's aid he saw in the utter weakness of Persia and the questionable allegiance of the native rulers of the buffer States of Afghanistan and Baluchistan to England an opportunity to strike at India.

But the energetic action of Great Britain and France in this theatre of the war has put a period to the machinations of the Germans, for the time being, at least. The occupation of Bagdad by Gen. Maude's troops, which may be expected at any time, puts an end to the Kaiser's dream of controlling the Near East from Berlin to Bagdad and with an eye on India. The occupation of Bagdad by the British gives them control of the eastern terminus of the Berlin to Bagdad railway. Britain has no share in this railway. Germany holds forty per cent. of the stock, France 20 per cent., while Russia and Turkey also advanced loans. Britain objected to the road going under German control and opposed its terminus at Koweit, on the Persian Gulf, which was British territory. By 1911 the British Government began to see the Kaiser's ambitions in the East. Should the mission of Gen. Maude succeed in Mesopotamia the erstwhile Private Secretary of a Canadian Governor-General will have thwarted the greatest ambition of the German Emperor.

Spelling Reform.

Mr. Curran and Mr. McManus spent their Sunday half-holiday in artistic pursuits. Among the objects examined was a new public building. The feature of this building that appealed most strongly to Mr. Curran was the inscription cut into a huge stone.

"MDCCCXCVIII," he read aloud. "What does them letters mean, Tim?"

"That," replied cultured Mr. McManus, "stands for 1898."

"Oh," replied Mr. Curran. Then after a thoughtful pause, he added:

"Don't you think, Tim, that they're overdoing this spelling reform a bit?"—Chicago Herald.

Opportunity calls once at every man's door. Hard luck is a whole lot more sociable.—Pittsburg Post.

Somebody in Manchester, N. H., is said to have found an eight-leaved clover near Londonderry, where there is said to be a large bed of these clovers.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"By all means," he says, calmly, almost respectfully. "Let it stand for to-night, Mrs. Podswell, let me beg of you to accept this fact. I love your niece most dearly." The bent head is raised for a moment, and the violet eyes give him a look of passionate gratitude that nearly sends Aunt Podswell mad. "As to my worthiness—I mean in a worldly sense—I can never be anything but unworthy in any other—I hope to assure you at a more convenient time; but let me beg of you to accept it as a fact, that Signa will be my wife. She is not one to change—"

"No!" softly, dreamily, from Signa.

"And I am as firm as a rock. Shall I go now?"

"One moment, Mr. —er— Warren!" says the rector, finding his voice at last; "I have to make a remark, but er—perhaps Signa had better retire."

She does not move, but Hector Warren touches her on the arm and opens the door.

"Good night, my own, my darling!" he murmurs, as obediently she passes out.

"Now, sir," he says, and his voice is colder and sterner, causing the rector to start uneasily.

"I er—was about to remark, Mr. Warren, that though we are —er— am sure honored by your proposal, that we have other views for our niece. Perhaps you are not aware that Sir Frederic Blyte has—er—proposed for her hand."

"Yes, I am quite aware."

"Well—er—I do not wish to be invidious, but really—I wish to spare your feelings, Mr. Warren—you must see, a gentleman of your acute perceptions must see—"

"That it's impossible," cuts in Mrs. Podswell, viciously. "Mr. Warren may be all very well—we know nothing against him—but Sir Frederic Blyte—" she stops, the tall man regarding her patiently, or rather with careless suppressed impatience.

"I am quite aware that Sir Frederic has proposed for Signa's hand," he says, calmly, "and that Signa has refused him. I am convinced that nothing and nobody on earth would persuade her to revoke that refusal. I trust that nothing would persuade her to recall the assent she gave to my proposal."

"I shall never let!" exclaims poor Aunt Podswell, desperately.

Hector Warren smiles, almost gravely.

"I trust to Heaven that it may be!" he says. "Come, Mrs. Podswell, Signa is her own mistress, and if she prefers a poor man to Sir Frederic Blyte, who shall say her nay? I love her quite as well as Sir Frederic can do, and I will do my best to make her happy. As to Lady Blyte, I will write her to-night, and see that straight, and if—as they say in the play—you will consent, why then we shall be happy ever afterwards, but"—and the smile grows tender—"if you will not consent, why, we shall be happy ever afterward all the same! But, [illegible] I am very anxious for your consent and good wishes."

"I wash my hands of it!" exclaims Aunt Podswell, sinking on her sofa.

"I—er—think—perhaps we had better talk this over to-morrow!" says the rector, in despair. "After all, my dear, Signa is her own mistress!"

"She is an ungrateful, disobedient, self-willed girl!" exclaims Aunt Podswell.

"She is the sweetest, most generous and obedient child on earth!" says Hector Warren. "Good night, Mrs. Podswell, good night, sir!" and he makes his way into the hall, and has his hand upon the latch, when someone glides through the darkness towards him.

"Has the storm passed?"

"Nearly," he murmurs. "Good night, my darling, good night! Give me one last kiss!"

And she, as she flits from him, turns her head over her shoulder and gives him what he asks.

When he gets home—which he does in a sort of rapturous dream—he comes down from the Olympian heights of lover's happiness, and collecting his thoughts, writes the following note to Lady Blyte:

"Dear Lady Blyte, I lose no time in informing you that Miss Grenville has returned home to the Rectory, in my charge. She begs, and I join in her earnest request, that you will accept the simple fact of her departure from the Park and the impossibility of her return without question or reproach. Miss Grenville desires me to thank you most sincerely, and heartily, and affectionately for all your kindness to her. May I add that she has made me [illegible] most grateful and happy by the promise of her hand? I am, dear Lady Blyte, Yours very faithfully,

"Hector Warren."

CHAPTER XIX.

"My dear creature, what is the use? You might just as well spare your breath and keep yourself cool. You might just as well try to move a rock as 'move' Signa from her point of view!"

So Lady Rockwell [illegible], with her keen blue eyes twinkling with suppressed amusement, and the half-malicious, half-satirical grin wrinkling her withered and powdered face. It is a week since Signa returned to the Rectory in the company of Hector Warren, and the storm which he prognosticated has almost spent its force, but though the rector, and all Northwell from Lady Rockwell to Captain Jenks have accepted Signa's betrothal to the unknown gentleman who came to [illegible] Lady Rockwell's library, Aunt Podswell is still disgusted and inconsolable. That Signa should reject Sir Frederic Blyte for Hector Warren is to her something monstrous and unnatural, and to whomsoever she meets she pours out her indignation. She has been doing so now for fully a quarter of an hour, and Lady Rockwell, ensconced in one of the Rectory easy-chairs, has listened with quiet but intense amusement.

"But—but it is dreadful and unnatural!" wails Aunt Podswell, wiping her eyes, and sniffling. "Fancy at the difference—Lady Rockwell, she must be mad!"

"No doubt. Most girls are when they are in love. I call love a sort of madness, and the great pity is that it is not incurable, but one soon gets over it. Marriage soon restores the patient to sanity. My dear, take my advice; as I said, you cannot move Signa. She is one of the sort who take the disease which we have consented to call love, very strongly. If it brought out spots like the measles, Signa would not be fit to be seen. In love! I never saw a girl so thoroughly and completely and madly in love. Why, she worships the ground he treads on. And he looks at her as if she were the first woman created, and he really could not get over his amazement and delight at so great a marvel," and the old worldling chuckles sardonically. "I met them wandering down the lane; I believe that they were holding hands—I do, indeed, but, anyway, they looked supremely happy. She is a beautiful creature; lovelier now than when she first came, and she was pretty enough, then, Heaven knows, to send a man out of his wits."

"I don't say that they were not attached to one another," wails Aunt Podswell, "but what are they going to live on?"

"Bread and cheese, and kisses," retorts her ladyship, sardonically. "It is an excellent diet for a newly married couple, and does not produce indigestion. My good soul, give it up as a bad job. They will be married as surely as—as—turtle doves pair in the spring. That you should be surprised amuses me. Why, I saw it the first night they were together."

But Aunt Podswell sniffs and groans.

"If I had guessed at such a—a misfortune, I would have refused to receive his visits!"

"Then they would have met in the lanes, or—or anywhere, and she'd have run away with him," says Lady Rockwell, consolingly. "Marriages, my dear, are made in heaven—or the other place. I think this would have been manufactured in the former, and, after all, I rather like your Hector Warren. He is handsome enough, goodness knows—"

"Handsome is as handsome does!" puts in Aunt Podswell, solemnly.

"Exactly, my dear; and Hector Warren 'does' very handsomely. He looks like a prince, and talks like a poet—or a wit—which he chooses for the moment, and he can climb trees, and sail a boat, and sing like an angel, what on earth do you want? Money? Then all the romance would be gone, and he'd be just like any other man. A title? Bah! I've got a title, and how much am I the happier for it? It gives me the prestige of saying rude things, and stalking out of rooms before some other women, but what's all that? Signa doesn't want to say rude things, and she'd as lieve go out of a room last as first. Bah! It's a very nice match, and I shall say so whether I go, and if they haven't enough to live on, why then—then—well, he can give music lessons and she can turn a mangle—"

"Oh, dear!" wails Aunt Podswell. "That is just what it will come to!"

The terrible old lady grins.

"And she'd be happy even then if he'd come and stand beside her and give a turn or two to the handle occasionally. But there, they'll do very well, and for Heaven's sake, don't keep worrying them and yourself. And that's my advice, and of course you won't take it—nobody ever does. And now I'll have a cup of tea, my dear, for I want to wait for the male turtle-dove. I suppose they will be flying home directly."

Aunt Podswell sings out a "Yes" and rings for the tea.

"I think I've got a little surprise for him," says Lady Rockwell, chuckling and nodding over her tea-cup.

"What is it?" asks Aunt Podswell, curiously, but Lady Rockwell shakes her head and grins.

"Wait till they come in, my dear—then I shan't have to tell it twice. By the way, do you know that Sir Frederic the Great has gone abroad, and that the Park is shut up? His mother has gone after him, some say—others that she has merely gone to London. Poor Sir Frederic!—if ever a man was head overheels in love, he was and is! Never mind!—he'll get over it; it don't kill nowadays, whatever it might have done in my time. I remember crying my eyes out because they wouldn't let me have Jack Belvoir; but I'm glad now they didn't. He was almost as handsome as our Hector Warren, but he hadn't a penny, and by this time I should have been Mrs. Belvoir with ten children and four hundred a year. Ah, well, it's a strange world—isn't it, Mr. Warren?"

And she turns sharply as the door opens, and Hector Warren and Signa enter.

"It is the best of all possible worlds, my dear Lady Rockwell," he says, lightly, as he takes her hand.

"Yes of course—the dearest, sweetest, happiest of worlds, isn't it, Miss Turtle Dove?" retorts her ladyship, holding out her other befringed hand to Signa. "Give me a kiss. Is it warm outside, or have you always got that color on your olive cheeks, my dear? Take off your hat and let me look at you."

Laughingly Signa obeys, and Hector Warren takes her hat from her, and carries it reverently to a side table. Her ladyship grins.

"In twelve months' time, my dear, you will be permitted to carry your own hat, or if you give it to him he will pitch it on the sofa, and then forget all about it, and sit upon it."

"Will he?" says Signa, blushing and laughing. "Well, I can always retaliate, and sit upon his. Will you have some more tea? I am sorry I am so late."

"My dear, don't fib. You are nothing of the sort. You know as well as I do that you would have liked to stay out wandering in the lanes hand in hand! You were, weren't you?"

"Yes," says Hector Warren, promptly, as Signa tries to keep down the tell-tale color. "It is of no use, Lady Rockwell, you can't make us ashamed—certainly not me at any rate. Why shouldn't we go hand in hand? It is a glorious old custom, they do it here [illegible] hand. [illegible] we were hand in hand, to [illegible] gravely—"and Signa might fall."

"Of course," retorts her ladyship. "You see, my dear," to Aunt Podswell, who sits bolt upright and looks scandalized, "they are both quite in earnest. But come, sir, I've some news for you."

"Have you?" he says, his whole attention devoted to handing Signa a cup and a slice of bread and butter as thin and unsubstantial as a wafer. "Is there any news? I thought the world had stopped still."

"To stare at your idiotic happiness, I suppose," retorts her ladyship. "Well, it hasn't; it is still going on, as if there were no such persons as Hector Warren and Signa Grenville to make simpletons of themselves. Do you want to know my news?"

He bows, and spreads a piece of bread and butter with jam, and takes it at a mouthful; there is something positively boyish in his intense happiness.

"It all depends," he says, pleasantly. "It is bad or good news? After all, it can't be bad while—" and his eyes wander to Signa, as she moves about the room, putting things straight, with that touch of the hand which women alone possess.

"Oh, of course not, while you have your lady love within reach, nothing matters. Thrones may totter and dynasties fall, and nothing signifies while you wander idly about hand in hand with your fellow simpleton."

"Signa, here is Lady Rockwell calling you opprobrious names."

"I don't care," comes the laughing response.

"Don't care was hung," says Lady Rockwell, grinning. "But come, I know you are dying of curiosity."

"Just dying," he assents, sinking back into the easy chair, and following Signa with his eyes. "What is it, Lady Rockwell? Have you come to tell us that an act of Parliament has been passed forbidding any marriages for the future?"

"Parliament will never attain to such a sensible act," she retorts. "No! I've had a letter from Laura Derwent."

He leans forward with mock alarm.

"Not another! Spare us, Lady Rockwell! As you are strong be merciful. What has that remarkable young lady done now—turned the Sultan of Turkey out of Constantinople, and seized the throne?—set the river on fire, and interviewed the emperor—taken possession of the Tuileries, or what? It sounds rude, but the mere mention of that young lady's name makes me tremble."

"Then you can tremble in real earnest," retorts Lady Rockwell, eyeing him with malicious enjoyment from behind her gold eyeglass, "for she has written about you yourself!"

He leans back and takes up one of Signa's gloves, and examines it as if he has never seen such a curious article before.

"Can it be possible that so insignificant an individual as Hector Warren can come within the sphere of Miss Laura Derwent's thoughts?"

Lady Rockwell grins.

"No one is too insignificant to Laura Derwent, if she can make use of them. You don't know her."

He shakes his head with mock awe.

"What is it? Do you keep me in suspense? What gruesome command has she set upon me? The task is it one of blood?"

"Hector!" murmurs Signa, coming behind him, and putting her hands upon his shoulders with half-timid, half-bold tenderness.

"My dear child, I am quite serious. I am trembling in my boots. Keep me not in suspense, Lady Rockwell. The dread mandate, what is it? Thy slave is all attention."

The old lady looks at him with a keen scrutiny and nods her head.

"You may laugh," she says, "but what do you say to this? Laura Derwent is coming here in three weeks."

He is silent for a moment's space, then he inclines his head slowly.

"In three weeks! Barely time to get the triumphal arches ready, and the red blaze, and brass band! Shall you have the whole of your pretty villa re-decorated, Lady Rockwell?"

She grins until all her teeth are displayed.

"He! he! My villa! She is not coming here! She is coming to—the Grange."

"In—deed," he says, slowly; "then she has taken Delamere at his word."

"Yes, of course. Didn't I tell you she would? And that isn't all. She means to take him at his fullest and most literal word. She means to have the Grange done up."

"Not for the world!" says Hector Warren. "What would Signa say if I refused to obey a lady's commands? Miss Laura Derwent is too important a personage to be disobeyed. She is the queen of fashion, and we, her slaves, must bow the head and carry out her behests, Lady Rockwell. In two words, I obey!"

"But," wails Mrs. Podswell, "the—the expense! All this will cost thousands! Really, dear Lady Rockwell, this this whim of your niece's is most extraordinary."

"Isn't it?" says Lady Rockwell, with sardonic calm, "but you see Mr. Warren is prepared to humor it, and as to the expense——"

Hector Warren laughs.

"That question is simple enough," he says. "My friend Delamere has given Miss Laura Derwent carte blanche, and she is quite within her right in availing herself of it. As to the expense, that is of no moment——"

"No moment!" sniffs Aunt Podswell, "when it may be thousands!"

He shrugs his shoulders and smiles.

"That is Delamere's lookout, not ours," he answers. "He is reputed, and I have no doubt rightly, to be wealthy."

"He must be worth at least forty or fifty thousand a year," breaks in Lady Rockwell, sharply.

Hector Warren nods.

Automobiles as Railroad Auxiliaries.

In quite a considerable number of annual reports of railroad presidents in the last two years mention has been made of inroads which automobiles are making on railroad passenger business. There is another aspect, however, of the development of the automobile and automobile truck which may turn out to be of considerable advantage to railroad development. The use of the automobile and the automobile truck is acting as a preventive of branch line railroad building, thus conserving capital for betterments of existing lines. A good road is built by the state or county and this road, with the development of the automobile truck, acts as a feeder for the railroads, which it crosses, and, moreover, a feeder built with the public's capital and not the railroad company's capital. Unprofitable branch line mileage has been the old man of the sea on the back of many a railroad in this country. A good state or county road crossing a railroad will be a feeder to it for forty to fifty miles on either side of the track. At the present time there are many rural communities which are sending freight and passengers over forty miles or more of good road to the nearest railroad by automobile—as much traffic as the railroad could hope to get over a branch line, the interest charges on which would be great enough to eat up nearly all the profit of the line haul.—Railway Age-Gazette.

Had Fourteen Fits In One Afternoon

BUT IS MADE WELL AND STRONG BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Mr. R. J. Thompson, of Uxbridge, Tells the Story of His Terrible Trouble and Almost Miraculous Escape.

Uxbridge, Ont. March 15.—(Special)—Mr. R. J. Thompson, living near here, had fourteen convulsions in one afternoon. The doctors did not think he could live. To-day he is well and strong. He says Dodd's Kidney Pills did it. But let him tell his own story.

"I am delighted with Dodd's Kidney Pills," Mr. Thompson states. "I have only taken eleven boxes, and I feel like myself again.

"I was taken ill very suddenly. I ate my dinner and went to take a man home. I just got about three-quarters of a mile when I was taken with a convulsion fit. I had fourteen that afternoon and the third day I had nine more.

"The doctors said I could not live and if I did I would never be able to do anything again, as I had chronic Bright's Disease. But, thank God, I am doing my own work once again, by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Bright's Disease is the most advanced stage of kidney disease. It can be avoided if the earlier stages of kidney trouble are remedied by the use of Dodd's Kidney Pills.

MILITARY HOSPITAL LANTERN SLIDES

An Ontario minister the other day borrowed from the Military Hospitals Commission a set of lantern slides. These slides show what goes on at the hospitals and sanatoria. That is, they show something of how our injured soldiers are being restored to health and to power for self-support, however serious their injuries may be. The minister exhibited the slides at three country churches under his charge. In returning the set he writes:

"My recording steward, who is also the postmaster and chairman of the local recruiting league, says they should be shown in every community. They meet the unrest in many families who have feared that the maimed who return will be forced to sell lead pencils or such like.

"What I should have done was to ask for them for a longer period and put them on in every available church in this district. A man with a well prepared lecture and a few local slides could render a valuable service to the country, both in allaying the unrest referred to and in removing the prejudice in some families from which recruits might be secured."

The slides, with explanatory notes, may be borrowed by ministers and other responsible persons free of charge. Application should be made to the Military Hospitals Commission, 22 Vittoria street, Ottawa.

Jack's Appeal.

Eight-year-old Jack was a handsome youngster. Naturally all the ladies who saw him wanted to kiss him, but Jack was not old enough to appreciate his privileges. One afternoon several friends of his mother came and they all kissed him. Later on he went to the pictures, and instead of his pet cowboy scene the film was all of a sentimental order! Young Jack returned home, well tired of the whole tribe of women. To cap the climax his mother said to him that evening when he was sent to bed: "Give mother a kiss, dear."

Jack looked appealingly toward his father and said:

"Dad, for goodness sake, kiss this woman!"—New York Times.

HOW BRITISH WASPS HUNT THE U-BOATS

Swift Motor Launches In Terrible Game of Blind Man's Buff

History and fiction await with poor patience the golden prizes that must come to them at the end of the great war. One sees them picking and choosing among the tremendous facts to be finally revealed, and snatching with a sort of thrilling eagerness at thrilling secrets.

Indomitable necessity, guarding the security of nations, has blindfolded these cupbearers to the imagination of mankind, but in time to come—within one year, or two or five, it may be—the bandages will be removed and the minds of men will drink deep and long of such tales of land and sea as were never spoken or dreamed of since time began.

Such tales as would have daunted truth and startled fancy in old days will be spread like a feast for the [illegible]ory tellers. It would require centuries to tell them all, if all could be told, for one comprehends [illegible]ely that entire Iliads and Odysseys must dim and disappear before [illegible] comes an ending to the tremendous surge and shock of courage and self-sacrifice and flashing achievement and cunning ingenuity.

But there are some tales that must be told—that will be sought for and rescued all alive and stirring from the vast reek and welter of war events. And of these, men wait most eagerly, perhaps, for the truth about the wickedest engine man ever devised, the submarine, so frightful on its selected occasions, so helpless when its vicious guile is overmatched by the wiles and stratagems of the hunters.

Now and then the warders of the truth have nodded momentarily and there have been afforded glimpses of the terrible game of blind man's buff that is being played by English and German in the waters around the British Isles. Just enough has been perceived of that incredible game to whet the appetites of a world.

The picture comes at such times in sudden, tremendous flashes, like a badly projected cinematograph. One sees the German shark turning and twisting under the surface churn of the Irish Sea, now darting to the top to peer through its periscope eye for horizon smoke that may mean a liner or a destroyer, now skimbibbling cunningly within closed reaches for a hint as to whether to stab or flee, now speeding a torpedo straight against the bulging side of an unsuspecting merchantman, and finally, detecting dancing dots upon the sea floor far away, but rapidly moving, sinking to safety and blindness under a sea floor already littered with the dead and with the jetsam of a sunken ship.

Then darkness and after a while another picture. The submarine hunters—swordfish seeking the shark—break across the horizon line, coming at the pace of a limited train, [illegible] straight and true, converging from half a dozen different compass [illegible] for the exact area of oily bubbles that mark the spot where the [illegible]ark dived.

Six swordfish are arrived, six slim motor launches, all of a type, all beautiful to the eye, all efficient to the last three of their thirty knot engines. They swarm over the spot, [illegible] circling, signalling by flag and megaphone, striving like hounds picking up a scent, then darting outward toward the horizon, each on an appointed course that begins in sudden zigzag arcs to describe the better part of a vast circle, a course that [illegible] tends an entire segment.

And one sees then that the six, every one strangely tangenting regularly and precisely after every so many minutes from the dead line of speeding, are following the plan of a beautifully simple hunt, a hunt which means annihilation for the shark once it rises to surface within this circle of eccentric courses. The six swordfish sweep steadily toward the horizon, grow dim, disappear in the haze. The sea is left as bare as a table top. One wonders.

A third picture wavers briefly upon the screen. The surface of the sea, an area far removed from the first circle, is disturbed by a tiny whirlpool, from which bubbles glisten as they are shattered in the sunlight. The eye of a periscope lifts slowly and then a conning tower shoulders from the waves. And in that instant a darting, tangenting motor boat approaches like a furious, living thing.

The submarine has no time to dive. She tries to fight. Her heavy rifle is [illegible]ed from below. Gunners leap to [illegible]tion. One shell at that range would [illegible] the motor launch, but the [illegible] is never fired, for the machine [illegible] chatters viciously and a shower of [illegible] clears the submarine's deck. [illegible] the next instant the launch's [illegible]ounder speaks once, calmly, [illegible]rably.

[illegible] shelled submarine staggers [illegible] the shock, opens her plates to the inrush of water, kicks her knifelike nose to the sky and dives for the last time. The British have got another German submarine.

The picture, even so vaguely sketched, is a true one. The United States navy and the alert youngsters of the Naval Reserve comprehend its accuracy. They know, from practice in peace, how effective the British methods of submarine hunting in war have been made, how deadly to the prowling German submarines the British mosquito fleet of terrifically fast, lightly armed motor launches has become.

No development of any war has been so fascinating as this scientific use of small, weak vessels in the destruction of the underwater tigers that have slain great dreadnoughts and tall merchantmen. It is the triumph of the trivial. There is a suggestion of a frightful jest about it all. The sea hunter which is too much for the sea's great ships is herself helpless against the least of vessels, the sea's pygmies.

But in the methods of the hunt there is so much of cold, precise, mathematical calculation, so much use of science, so much alert intelligence that one sees presently some reasons why German submarine warfare has not yet developed to be the menace and conquering weapon that Germany planned it to be. There is more than a suggestion that the submarine is slowly but steadily being mastered or restricted.

Our naval authorities have excellent reason to believe that the British navy has captured or destroyed (the latter mostly) not less than 125 German submarines since the great hunt began more than thirty months ago. The British bag included 100 last November, according to private information of unquestioned authenticity, and American naval officers believe that the destruction or capture of another twenty-five in the past three months is an estimate rather too conservative if anything.

The destroyers, with their great speed and relatively heavy guns, have dropped many U-boats to the ocean floor to wait there until kingdom come. Plucky captains of merchantmen of a breed which would always rather fight than run have accounted for some. The wonderful nets stretched, no man knows how, in Channel waters, in the North Sea, in the Irish Sea, off the coast of Belgium, and wherever German undersea boats lurk have enmeshed and held their snare. Patrol boats hunting in pairs, with explosive trolls stretched "trot line" fashion from wire cables, have work in the great game.

And there are still secrets of the hunt, secrets which may be kept until the war's end, that have added to the accomplishment. But the greatest factor in curbing submarine warfare, in keeping England's food and munitions ships moving in and out of Liverpool and London and all the busy ports of the east coast, in preserving the courage and determination of the English people, have been the insignificant motor launches, the mere pleasure boats of yesterday, so many of which are constructed in this country. The Sun has received a survey of the methods employed by these British swordfish, a survey which offers an interesting general picture of operations. Details differ here and there according as different problems and conditions are involved, but the plan of the hunt and the curiously precise methods employed in this blind man's buff of the sea are similar in all areas where the sea midgets cruise for their savage prey.

Suppose the reader vision for himself a daylight sea, the fog fluff lifting before a sharp, uprising breeze. The area is one infested by German submarines, since it hauls across an important steamship lane and since it has been the graveyard of many fine ships.

Six British patrol boat, eight fee, motor cruisers, each armed with a machine gun and a long range rifle put out with their mother ship from their base, each commanded by a youth who wouldn't trade his job for the quarterdeck of the Lion. In the long run for the area of operations they fall into single column formation, each scout preserving perfect accuracy of distance in the flying column.

Nearing the danger area the mother ship whips signal flags to the breeze and the column swiftly changes formation. A mile apart now the motor cruisers abreast are sweeping the sea, the officers in command searching every wave and ripple for sign of a submarine.

The advance abreast continues for an hour. Suddenly the GB-111 sights far off on the port bow the periscope and conning tower of a German U-boat. GB-111 darts for that spot like a mad thing, engines whirling desperately, driving out a good thirty knots.

For the time none of the other scouts perceives the game, and they are maintaining their straight sweep ahead. GB-111 having located the precise spot where the U-boat dived reaches it and begins the hawk movement, circling rapidly around the spot as her tiller is put hard over and kept there. The motion is for all the world like that of an angry hawk which has been deprived of prey and which circles angrily about the spot where it was robbed.

And presently, as is implied in the tactics, the hawk movement of GB-111 falls upon the binoculars of the other scouts. They drop all personal business and point with top speed for their sister cruiser. They come up one by one and begin circling widely. Meanwhile GB-111 has not only noted the exact spot where the U-boat dived, but has logged the exact time the German went under, and from these circumstances of known fact the hunt is developed.

The mother ship comes up and takes station on the point of submarine disappearance, her guns ready to spit fire. It is her job to wait there and keep watch over a wide area. The six little cruisers apportion the sea among themselves, laying out precise routes.

The speed of the discovered U-boat is either known definitely (a vast amount of that useful secret information filters to the Admiralty from spy operations) or is surmised with reasonable accuracy. It is known that the U-boat is good for twelve miles an hour under water if pressed, and it is taken for granted that she feels herself pressed under the circumstances. Therefore the sea is charted in a great circle whose rim everywhere is just one hour's submarine speed from the exact point where the U-boat dived.

It is obvious that the six scouts would accomplish little indeed if they struck straight out for that periphery, for just one hour merely on the chance of happening somewhere near a rising U-boat. The British have a far better trick than that. They so arrange the course of each scout within the charted circle that each will cover a far greater amount of sea surface than by merely keeping a straight course and that each will at all times be within near distance of a sister hunter.

A straight course of blind pursuit would separate the scouts further and further as they approached the rim of the circle. But the eccentric course which is the feature of the manoeuvres keeps them virtually equidistant at all times in addition to increasing their hunting vastly.

GB-111, now steaming moderately as No. 1 in the hunt, proceeds from the starting point and within a concentric circle whose diameter is two miles. It is necessary to proceed slowly because the area of the first circle is limited. So No. 1 steams directly west for two miles and takes ten minutes for the job, just loafing along but fiercely, tensely watchful.

Coming to the rim of the circle, No. 2, the scout changes her course sharply, almost to right angles, and runs for another two miles at increased speed on a course slightly west of north. Reaching the rim of circle 3, the course is again sharply changed to east of north and more speed is put on. Similar changes of course and speed are made after reaching the outer rims of circles 3, 4 and 5.

Meanwhile, the other scouts are running by the same method—two miles on one course, then a swerve almost at right angles, two miles again, and then another sharp swerve, and on until the outer rim of the sixth and last circle of the twelve mile area is negotiated.

Finally, all of the scouts arrive at high speed on the edge of the great circle, and the submarine is still undetected after an hour's hunt. Back at the hub of the inner circle, the mother ship remains on guard, ready to signal if the U-boat has played the trick of rising near where it dived. But there has been no sign of the shark.

It is necessary to carry on the circle to extend it for another hour of time and twelve miles of sea. Again the swift, eccentric courses are undertaken and within the first five minutes GB-111, which has all of the luck, finds herself by unbelievable good fortune almost on top of the rising U-boat. Within a quarter of a mile she sees periscope and rising conning tower, lets drive with her three-pounder in a shower of shells, and ends the career of her victim.

Sometimes as many as twenty of these small fast scouts operate in a given great circle. Frequently the task is undertaken by a few only. The larger the number, generally speaking, the greater the chance of bagging game. It is the belief of naval officers who have studied British operations that the British get about one out of every three U-boats they locate and pursue.

In some cases they have been able to capture them outright. In most instances the German commanders have tried to fight or flee, and there was often time for neither with British patrol boats darting from every side.

The approved plan is as has been described. The submarine's torpedoes are useless against the scout boats, because torpedoes are employed under water at a depth of from six to nine feet or more and the fighting midgets don't draw that much water. When caught the submarine is scarcely ever able to use her guns on the scouts, because the machine on the scouts drive gunners from the U-boat deck. And despite many stories that have come from Germany, submarines do not like to stay under water interminably.

MANUFACTURE OF NITROGLYCERINE

Dangerous Task of Maker of High Explosive.

One Man, Despite Terrors, Has Long Stuck.

Nitroglycerin is made by ordinary sweet glycerine acting with a mixture of strong sulphuric and nitric acid. The glycerine is dropped by a very thin stream slowly into a mixture of three parts nitric and five parts sulphuric acid. During the process the containing vessel is kept cool by a water jacket, and the acid mixture is agitated by a stream of cool air. The temperature is maintained at about 30 degrees. After the operation the whole mixture is drawn off into a tank and is allowed to stand in this vessel, cooled by a water jacket. The glycerine, which is now nitroglycerine, immediately begins to come to the top like cream on milk. This is at once taken care of and is put through various processes to cleanse it of all remaining traces of acid.

In no department of our plant must greater care be exercised than in the nitrator, which is the name given to the building where nitroglycerine is manufactured.

Explosions are frequent, and it takes a man of iron nerve to conduct this department. It is like going into battle every day. Yet in the face of this we have one man who has successfully made nitroglycerine for twenty years, and he lives to tell you about it, only he won't. He is as reticent as the sphinx.

Like any other man of great courage, he does not boast, and John Viewberger will talk about anything except the miracle of his continued existence. I can only say that Divine Providence, a cool head and hands and a stout heart have kept him at his work.

The acid fumes that fill the building at all times when nitration is taking place have long since taken away the very teeth in his head, yet not his pluck. It is a fact that he is provided with a new set of false teeth on an average twice a year. The hair on his head has long ago disappeared, and the fumes have tanned his skin to the color of bronze until he resembles a cave man of old. And yet he has never had a day of sickness in these twenty years. He thinks, as I do, that no disease, no matter how virulent, could successful combat the nitric fumes that he inhales. So his work has its compensations, if you are pleased to look at it that way.

While nitration of glycerine is going on Viewberger sits on a high stool, his arms stretched over the nitrating machine, one hand on a faucet that controls the flow of glycerine into the acid, the other hand on a valve regulating the cooled, compressed air that is forced into the mixture, and his eye glued to the thermometer that extends well down into the mixture. I have said that the glycerine undergoes nitration at a temperature of 30 degrees. The temperature is regulated by the quantity of glycerine that flows into the acid. If the temperature begins to rise above 30 degrees he closes his valve slightly, reducing the flow of glycerine, and increases the flow of cool air.

Any little foreign substance that might get into the mixture, even through the acid of glycerine or otherwise, would cause immediate trouble. The slightest leak in the water cooling coils, permitting a little water to get into the mixture, would be the signal for the thermometer to do a marathon, and in a few minutes the whole mixture would result in an area of heat that would result in an explosion. Viewberger cannot desert his post when the temperature begins to rise rapidly. This condition frequently takes place, and most of the time it can be reduced by cutting off the flow of glycerine entirely and by turning on the air to the full pressure of fifty pounds. Sometimes, however, in spite of all, it will continue to rise, and Viewberger knows or feels that he has lost control. He must leave his mixture to its fate and "dig out."

His building, the nitrator, is located on a hill higher than its surroundings. The hill is a high sand dune. Immediately back of the stool on which he sits is a big door that is always left open when he is manufacturing. Viewberger's method of exit or getaway is to jump out of this door and roll down the hill. While he is on his way the explosion takes place. He has done this some twenty times and yet has never received an injury. He has never been struck with flying debris, although the air is filled with flying pieces of lead and iron. Does history record a greater miracle? Dug out of the sand semiconscious from the impact of an explosion, in the course of half an hour he has been quite himself again, ready to go to work if need be, his only regret being the loss of property sustained by the company."—Willard Fay in Collier's Weekly.

The Ghost of the Redwoods

A curious tale of the ghost of the sequoias was told recently by a professor of botany of a fresh-water college in one of the clubs of this city. He is also an entomologist, or "bug hunter," as his students irreverently call him, and recently made a trip to California to haunt the verdant hillsides of the high Sierras and gather specimens of the flora and fauna of those regions. His trip was eminently satisfactory—he found what he said was a new variety of the Aquilegia Canadensis, and he had also found a new variety of ghost. In fact, he found both at the same time and practically the same place.

"I found both in a grove of the tallest redwoods I have ever seen," he said. "These sequoias, several of which were more than 300 feet high, grow along a ridge of low mountains, from the top of which you can see, away off in the distance, the Pacific Ocean. At sunset the sun seems to be setting in a bed of glittering, shimmering gold, and as it fades from sight the strong night wind comes in off the water and almost whistles through the giant trees. It is a wonderful spot, and gives one the feeling of coming to the end of the earth.

"We were camped down at the lower end of a valley which ran up to the ridge where lived the giant trees, and it was only about a mile to the summit. The sea wind passed over us and we could see it rustle the leaves on the hills above us. However, it kept the air sweet and fresh in our little valley.

"After we'd been there for a few days I took a tramping and botanizing trip into the far hills, and it was several days before I reached camp. When I arrived our cook, a Chinaman, came to me and demanded that we move camp. When I told him that we intended staying on there for some weeks he laid down the pot he was cleaning, began to dry his hands on his apron, and said, 'All lite; me go!' After much questioning, I found that he was certain that a devil lived in the big trees on the ridge. After much persuasion and long explanations of how I could destroy devils by looking at them through my large microscope, he decided to remain with us.

"That night I stayed up longer than I had intended in order to hear the devil call, but heard nothing that could qualify for such a noise. There was one peculiar manifestation, though. Every now and then when the wind would cease to stir the trees on the hillside above us, I'd hear what sounded like a faint chanting. At first I thought that I was mistaken, and then I called Zach, the stable boy, and asked him if he heard the noise.

"'Yep, boss,' he answered, quickly enough, 'I've heard that durn noise for three nights now. Thought I'd go and take a look and find out what it was, but then I remembered that it's 'bout time for some of the Indians to be movin' south, and I ain't all fired hopeful of meeting up with a bunch of them.'

"Of course, that didn't clear up the chanting noise to my satisfaction, and I told Zach that I wanted him to accompany me while I made a little investigation. He didn't seem very keen on it. A moment later I heard him arguing with the China boy and I stepped over and listened. He was trying to get him to join the expedition, but the old Celestial was absolutely determined he would not. A moment later Zach came back, and I noticed that he had buckled on his large revolver, his 'Gat' he used to call it.

"We started, and shortly after peculiar things began to happen. We were about five hundred feet above the camp, with the chanting getting plainer all the time, when the air began to be filled with eerie snatches of melody. They grew plainer the higher we got and the harder the wind blew, and it began to seem that all the lost chords in the world were wandering on that hillside. Now and then a long, thin, shrill note would cut the moonlight like the flash of a sabre in the sun, and Zach would hesitate, grip the handle of his Colt and plod on.

"We must have climbed 1,000 feet above the camp when the hill began to flatten out, and suddenly through the trees we saw the flicker of a camp fire. After a second I saw that there were a number of people moving rapidly about it, and Zach grunted, 'Huh Indians! Drunker'n usual!' He wanted to go back, but I dragged him on. After a little quiet creeping we reached the outer edge of the little clearing, where they had their camp and fire. We watched them dance about it for a moment, and then Zach whispered: 'Them Indians is scared to death! That's one of them dances they pull off when they're scared! They ain't lookin' for trouble!'

"A moment later I walked into the firelight. The dancers stopped and they all crowded about us. A nondescript medicine man started to explain, and had just said, 'Big devil—heap big devil' when there came another snatch of that marvelous melody. In an instant they were all capering about the fire again, chanting like mad.

"I decided to go back to camp, and make a fresh start and find where all the wandering melody was coming from. We descended the hill much faster than we went up and arrived at the camp to find the old China boy much relieved at our appearance.

"We started out, going in the direction from which the melodies came. As we got higher up the valley we began to hear the strange snatches of melody again. The higher we got the clearer they were. When the clump of sequoias were outlined against the clear sky the sounds were extraordinarily loud and clear. Finally we reached the great redwood and there the whole atmosphere was vibrant with music. It was as though a mad Tosti were improvising on the heart strings of the universe! I must admit that I was never so puzzled in my life. I looked all around the trees, expecting to find some peculiar musical instrument being tortured by a long haired lunatic. We searched everywhere, but saw nothing. The music seemed to come from the tops of the trees and our eyes began to search them.

"Suddenly Zach gave an exclamation. He pointed to the top of the great, old tree that stood on the seaward side of the grove. I looked, and high up in the lower branches, about 100 feet from the ground, I saw what looked to be a giant harp glistening in the moonlight.

"When we reached the foot of the tree, we saw that there was a rough ladder cut in its heavy bark. I slipped off my coat and specimen case, and started up the ladder, which consisted of clefts cut in the bark. As I climbed nearer the harp I could hear it sing, each step making it louder.

"Finally I reached it. Propping myself against the great bough on which it was fastened, I solved the mystery. 'Stanford, '15,' was painted on the tree above my head and on the back-bone of the harp was painted in letters almost illegible with age, 'Grace's Place.' Then I suddenly realized that the harp was all that remained of an old-fashioned grand piano.

"After reaching the ground with difficulty and much trepidation, I told Zach about the various inscriptions and he cleared up all the mystery.

"'Why, that's the old piano out of the old dance hall at San Simon camp,' he said, 'and what's more I know how it got there. Them durn Stanford University students that was here while you were bug hunting back in the hills must have done it!'

"As he spoke he moved, and suddenly I saw him step on a tall, proud and beautiful flower. I shoved him back and lo, there at the foot of the ghost tree was my wonderful Aquilegia canadensis! The new species!"—New York Times.

AN INVITATION TO SICKNESS

Impure Blood Means a Breakdown in Your Health.

Impure blood is an invitation to sickness. The blood is at work day and night to maintain the health, and any lack of strength or purity in the blood is a weakness in the defence against disease. Anaemia is the doctor's name for lack of blood. There may be an actual loss in the quantity of the blood, or one or more of its constituents may be lacking. Its surest symptom is pallor. Anaemia is particularly common in young girls. It is not, however, confined to them alone, for it is this same lack of blood that prevents full recovery after la grippe, fevers, malaria and operations. It is also present in old age and in persons who have been under unusual mental or physical strain. If you are suffering from this trouble take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. They make pure, new blood with every dose and this new blood means health and strength. Thousands have proved the truth of these statements, among them Mrs. John Hyatt, Metiskow, Alta., who says: "About a year ago I was in a badly run down condition, my blood was watery, I was very nervous, slept badly at night; suffered from frequent headaches and found my housework an almost intolerable burden, my appetite was poor, and I did not seem to assimilate the food I took, altogether my condition seemed serious. As there was no doctor in our neighborhood I decided to give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a trial, and I have much cause to be thankful that I did so, as in a few weeks I could feel a great change for the better. I continued the use of the pills for some time longer, and found a complete cure. I feel better than I have for years and can therefore cheerfully recommend Dr. Williams' Pink Pills to all who are weak and run down."

You can get these pills from any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Home Made Cough Candy

This is just the time for trying to make, in the home kitchen, some of those old-fashioned cough candies of grandmother's culinary days. They are exceedingly easy to make, and, oh, what relief they give when one has an annoying coughy cold!

ROCK CANDY.

To two and a half pounds of sugar, add about a pint of water. Boil to a syrup. Put to cool in a deep vessel. Lay across the "cooling vessel" a stick or long wooden spoon upon which are suspended lengths of heavy white thread or white string that dip into the syrup. When cold, the syrup will have formed crystals or "rock" upon the string.

SLIPPERY ELM SQUARES.

Place a handful of dried slippery elm bark in a pint of water and allow to soak over night. In the morning bring the bark and water to a boil, after which strain and press to get out all mucilaginous matter. Put the liquid thus obtained over a slow fire, with two cupfuls of sugar. Wet the sugar well with lemon juice before adding it to the slippery elm tea. Simmer, stirring until the sugar dissolves. When the candy will "rope" pour it out into broad buttered tins and mark into squares. You may pull it white if you like.

HOARHOUND LOZENGES.

In a cupful of boiling water steep a heaping tablespoonful of dried hoarhound leaves in half a cupful of boiling water for an hour. Then strain and squeeze. Add the liquid to two cupfuls of brown sugar; put over the fire in a saucepan, and stir until the sugar is dissolved. Put in a tablespoonful of vinegar and boil until the candy break when it is dropped into cold water. Drop from the point of a spoon upon buttered paper, or pour into a pan and cut into oblongs.

Prophecy of War's End

Don [illegible], a learned priest of Como, Italy, who is president of the local historical society and director of the civic museum, has a seventeenth century book containing a collection of letters, written in Latin and Italian by uncertain authors and other documents. The book evidently belonged originally to the writer Paolo Giovio.

Among other things it contains a curious prophecy about the present war attributed to St. Malachy. It is well known that several works attributed to St. Malachy, Archbishop of Armagh, Ireland, who died in 1148, are probably spurious. His "Prophecy Concerning the Future Roman Pontiffs," which has produced an extensive literature, was really written in 1590 and is supposed to have been forged to support the election of Cardinal Simoncelli to the papal chair.

The war prophecy in the Como book is written in Latin in the same handwriting as other documents, and in all probability it was copied from some earlier manuscript in the seventeenth century. It is dated 1449; over three centuries after St. Malachy's death. There is no doubt, however, that the prophecy was written 250 years ago, and its interest is, therefore, undiminished despite the fact that it is wrongly attributed to St. Malachy.

The following is a careful English translation of the prophecy from the Latin original:

"When the first number will find the ninth and both will join the first and the sixth numbers [1916], in the sixth month [August], when twice four and twice ten days are passed [the 28th], then the head of that terrible beast which for two years and a month has already filled the world with blood and slaughter, devastation and death, shall be crushed. From the Book of Prophecies of the Blessed Malachy in the year 1449.

"When the first number finds the ninth and both are joined with the first and sixth numbers, in the sixth month, when twice four and twice ten days have passed, the new people called from Romulus [the Roumanians] will rise and conclude an alliance with the powerful people. Then that ferocious beast that since a year and a month had filled all the world with blood and slaughter, with devastation and death, surrounded on all sides and wounded, vainly roaring, will seek whom to devour and find none. There will be great devastations during all the time, when new moons will rise and set three and ten times, then on the fifth day, when the sun comes out of the sign of the lion, he will die of the worst death and a Virgin whose name is composed of two iotas [i], two alphas [a], with a tau [t] and a lamda [l], will crush his head and his spoils will be divided among the Latin people.

"A single instant more than the allotted time will not pass before the events above written come to happen."

The prediction of Roumania's intervention for August 28, 1916, has come true, as this date corresponds to Germany's declaration of war against Roumania, and the period during which the war has been in progress, namely, two years and one month, is also substantially accurate, since from the outbreak of the war in the beginning of August, 1914, to the end of August, 1916, the date of Roumania's intervention, two years and a month passed.

The virgin referred to in the prophecy is evidently meant to typify Italy, since the Greek letters composing her name correspond to two i's, two a's, a t and an l, which form the name Italia. Evidently, according to the prophecy, Italy is destined to play a decisive role in the [illegible] about its end.

The end of the war is clearly predicted, and as there was a new moon on August 28, 1916, counting thirteen lunar months from then and taking into account the fact that the sun crosses the [illegible] of the Leo in summer, it is [illegible] that, according to the prophecy, the war will end toward the middle of next September, until when "great devastations over all the world will happen."

It is a fact that with Roumania's intervention Germany as the "ferocious beast" of the prophecy is surrounded on all sides, and it is likewise a fact that a great deal of "vain roaring" is going on, so that the prophecy besides being curious deserves to be remembered.

Fruits and Their Uses

The eating of fruits and nuts not merely as a relish, but as a food, is highly commendable. Such a diet is very nutritious. But it is wrong to be a vegetarian or a fructarian. A diet without meat is wholly unsuited to the growing child.

Although an advocate of much fruit in a child's diet, I would not have it understood that I am a faddist. The evils of excessive meat eating are seen daily in the hospitals and in the dispensaries. Yet meat in small amounts is absolutely essential to a child's growth. It is to be remembered that sweetbreads, kidneys and liver, for instance, are rich in lechitin and in phosphorous, and are important in the diet of the young.

To my mind, no other food in its natural state is so well calculated to afford pleasure to three out of five senses of a child as fruit. The eye is pleased with the varied forms and colors of the fruit, and ripe and luscious it yields a peculiar charm and fragrance to the nerves of smell and to jaded appetites.

Parents tend to give their children too much hot food. Raw fruit and nuts tend to overcome this difficulty. The sensory nerves of the lips and the nerves of taste are weakened by hot food, and they no longer can taste it. At the same time the sense of smell is blunted and the enamel of the teeth is destroyed, making them unfit for mastication, therefore the food goes to the stomach unprepared.

The addition of raw fruit, together with cooked fruit to the daily diet keeps the child in perfect health with buoyancy of feeling, good humor, and satisfaction with the world at large. This is partly due to the organic salts which arouse the appetite, and aid digestion by increasing the flow of saliva and indirectly of the gastric juice. As the fruit reaches the intestines, the acids increase the activity of the casine, stimulate the secretions of the liver, of the pancreas and of the intestinal glands, and they render the blood less alkaline, but never acid.

No drug to my mind can compare with fruit and its juices in the cleansing of the intestinal tract of the products of decomposition and fermentation. Fruit juices contain purer water than the best spring water.

The American mother gives the child fruit for a pleasurable purpose and not for food, but it should be eaten at table and constitute a portion at least of the regular meals. The tonic effects of fruits and their juices I have repeatedly seen.

For the stomach of weak children I advise cooked fruits. To my strong children I advise unpeeled fruits when possible, as in peeling much nutritive value is lost in the skins. The peeling of fruits removes the upper layer of the fruit meat and many of the flavoring substances are lost, as this part is rich in them.

The child should be given well ripened fruit. In ripened fruits the quantity of acid and of cellulose is lessened. To obtain a sweet fruit without much acid it should be allowed to hang on the tree until ripe.

The albuminous products of raw fruits are easily assimilated in the intestines. Hutchinson reports that 80 per cent. of fruit proteins, 90 per cent of fruit fat and 95 per cent. of fruit carbohydrates are absorbed. For years I have insisted that a part of the child's diet should be fruit, raw or cooked. I prefer the raw, where nothing prevents. I warn against unripe fruit, or even ripe fruit taken in too large quantities. Fruit and fruit juices should be given to the growing child for the following reasons.

1. They are appetizing and palatable.
2. They are very refreshing.
3. On account of their nutritive values.
4. On account of their salts.
5. On account of their diuretic action.
6. On account their laxative action.
7. On account of their tonic action.

It is to be believed that the water contained in the raw fruit juices of certain or of all fruits enjoys a particular property or a special vitality, lang, "electrical reaction" or whatever it may be called. This peculiar "vitality" stimulates that of a mineral water.

The levulose, of fruit, sugar, represents starch in the state of complete digestion and ready for instant absorption by the body. It is supposed to prevent the formation of acetone. The final stage of the digestion of fruit is the conversion of fruit acids and salts into alkaline salts, chiefly carbonates. Owing to the alkalinizing property of fruit and its juices it is excellent in a diet rich in meat and vegetables controlling a rheumatic or gouty condition.

Some suggest that fruits have no nutritive value, but analysis has proved the considerable value of apples, cherries, strawberries, raspberries, huckleberries, gooseberries, currants, bilberries and peaches, to speak only of our commonest products.

In cases where girls have an uncontrollable desire for sweets I have added with great success raw fruit and dried dates and figs.

Apples should be eaten raw, after washing thoroughly. They contain potash, soda, magnesia and phosphorus. The natural acid is invaluable for the gums and teeth, for stomach and intestines, having a germicidal character. A sweet, pulpy, ripe apple is most easily digested. In rheumatic or so-called growing pains I have found apples of great benefit.

The banana is excellent if ripened on the plant. It has a larger carbohydrate content that the potato—16-22 per cent. Bananas may be tried, baked, made into omelets and used as flour. The flour should be made from the best quality of ripened fruit, and served as a gruel or porridge with milk or cream, when it is very tempting to children.

Grapes are one of the best fruits. They are antiseptic and disinfectant in their effect upon the intestines. They are recommended for all wasting diseases, especially phthisis. They are valuable in bronchitis and heart disease. Raisins, or dried grapes, are beneficial, healthy and nutritious. Of protein raisins contain, according to Hatz, 5 to 6 grains to the ounce.

Fresh figs contain 60 or 70 per cent. salts, and some manganese oxide. The Orientals prize them in diseases of the kidneys and bladder and in gouty and rheumatic conditions. Smyrna figs, I think, are easiest to digest and are sweet as honey. Dried figs contain too much cellulose to be easily digested. Plums and prunes are well digested when ripe and tender. Prunes are a great laxative. Their skins are hard to digest, however, and had best been removed by soaking. According to Balland dates contain twice as much phosphoric acid as figs, valuable salts, a large amount of sugar and carbohydrates. Where children are susceptible to the fermentation of sugar dates can be added instead of sugar in the cooking of food.

Cherries are easily digested if juicy, thin-skinned and in season. Delicate stomachs cannot, however, digest the skins. Their juice is delicious and refreshing. Cherries contain manganese oxide, sugar and the alkalizing salts, potash, lime, iron and more phosphoric acid than any other fruit.

Apricots and peaches when ripe are easily digested. Raw fruit juices often take the place of a craving for sweets and alcohol. The juices of the orange and lemon are usually borne by the most irritable stomach and are very digestible.

I consider pineapple juice the best raw fruit juice I know of. It contains peptogenic and digestive properties. Pineapple juice sprayed upon the mucous membranes of the body cleanses and stimulates them. The sugars in this fruit are partly grape and partly levulose, with some cane sugar.—George Dow Scott.

RALEIGH IN IRELAND.

Picturesque Old Home Still Stands in Quaint Youghal.

Down in the southeast corner of Ireland, not far from Cork and its harbor where the ocean liners put in, is the quaint old town of Youghal. Lying near the sea, it has a little winding street crowded with butchers' carts, pony chaises and bicycles, a picturesque arched clock gateway, an ancient and crumbling town hall, and old, dingy side alleys. But by far the oddest thing about Youghal is the pronunciation of its name, which one speaks as though it were spelled Yawl.

At the far end of the town is St. Mary's Church, the transept of which is known as the oldest building with a roof in Ireland, and adjoining the church, its chimneys peeping over the vine-clad walls, stands a delightful old manor house which once belonged to Sir Walter Raleigh. Myrtle Grove is now a private residence, but, if one is truly interested, not merely curious, one may occasionally be admitted [illegible] there is no question about [illegible] paid for one's efforts.

The old house stands with its [illegible] to the gate, its red brick walls and gables covered with vines, and its casement windows swung open. Inside the great door, with its curious heart-shaped brass keyhole, are rooms panelled in black oak and furnished with marvellous carved oak mantles, dark and massive furniture and deep rugs. It would all be dim and gloomy, if it were not for the leaded windows which are open to the shifting Irish breezes and sunshine. There are various curios of Raleigh and his friend Spenser, who often visited him at Myrtle Grove. Raleigh came to Ireland in 1579, leading some troops who were to put down one of the revolts of the Earls of Desmond. He was given a grant of land here at Youghal on which the manor house was probably already standing. Raleigh is thought to have lived at Youghal for several years, and he was at one time mayor of the place.

Before the house lies a wide court, in one end of which are four very aged yew trees under which proud peacocks strut. Beyond lies the enclosure in which Raleigh is said to have planted the unknown potatoes which he had brought back with him from distant Virginia.—Christian Science Monitor.

BRONCHITIS
WAS SO BAD
Coughed Every Few Minutes.
DR. WOOD'S
NORWAY PINE SYRUP
CURED HER.

Bronchitis starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with a rapid wheezing, and a feeling of oppression or tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is of a light color but as the trouble progresses the raising from the bronchial tubes becomes of a yellowish or greenish color, and is very often of a stringy nature.

Bronchitis should never be neglected. If it is some serious lung trouble will undoubtedly follow.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This well known remedy has been on the market for the past 25 years.

It cures where others fail.

Mrs. Geo. [illegible], Ont., writes: "I have had bronchitis so bad I could not lie down at night, and had to cough every few minutes to get my breath. I had a doctor and he did, but his medicine seemed to do me no good. I sent to the druggist for some good cough mixture, and got Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. One bottle helped me wonderfully. I stopped coughing, and could lie down and rest well at night. I cannot praise it too much."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; 3 pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

Bradstreet's Trade Revi[illegible]

Toronto—Wholesale business is ahead of last year. Wholesale dry goods firms report increases over last year; staples are more active and dress goods are still quiet. Staple hardware lines are rather quiet. Grocery lines are fairly active, with sugars firm at the recent advance, although raws are easier with the passing of the Cuban disturbance. Teas are firm, with both Ceylons and Indians higher in London this week, and with the embargo on shipments of all teas from Great Britain. Collections are fair to good.

Montreal—Travellers send in batches of fall orders that are encouraging for the autumn trade. The dry goods trade is reported by wholesalers to be active with carpets and gents furnishing showing very satisfactory returns. Boot and shoe wholesalers have practically finished sending out their spring orders. The leather market is firm, with the proposed restriction of exports a disturbing factor, which, however, dealers believe will be modified somewhat. The iron and steel trades are rather quiet. There is little change in the grocery situation, except that the outside sugar markets are easier, while Canadian refined is holding steady at the last advance. The hardware trade is seasonable quiet. Collections are fair to good.

Ottawa—Spring orders of satisfactory volume have been taken by retailers, while orders for fall delivery which have already been placed indicate a favorable condition of affairs. Country buyers show little hesitation in taking goods at the higher prices.

Hamilton—The prospects for a good spring trade look good, and retailers and wholesalers alike seem imbued with a spirit of confidence for the future. Country retailers are doing a good trade in staple lines, and besides taking large spring orders they are buying fall goods quite readily, according to the orders which travellers are already beginning to send in. Boots and shoes are quite active. Collections are fairly good.

London—Milder weather is bringing about better conditions in the country trade. Good returns continue to be made by travellers on the road with fall goods. The leather market is firm, and wholesalers boot and shoe dealer report moderate buying of goods for future delivery. Conditions are good throughout Western Ontario. Payments are fairly well met.

Winnipeg—The jobbing trade is quite active, and better weather has resulted in a recovery of business in the country. City retail business is fair.

Calgary—Trade conditions in Alberta are good, and the opening up of spring business which has come about with recent milder weather gives promise of being maintained.

Vancouver—All industries are busy. Dry goods lines are fairly active, and the grocery trade is fairly good. Collections are being fairly satisfactory, and failures average fewer than last year.

Quebec—Wholesale trade is active and orders as a rule are coming in freely in all lines. Industrial conditions are showing up well, shoe manufacturers being especially busy. City and country collections are fairly good.

St. John—Collections fair to good. One important failure.

Newsy Happenings of the Week Collected for Our Readers by a Staff of Live Correspondents

MILDMAY

Mr. Henry Reuber of Didsbury Alta. made a flying visit in town last Friday just before returning to his home in the West.

Walkerton played a game of hockey with the local boys on Thursday night, March, 15, and won out by a margin of one goal. The score was 6–5. Ed. Wittich acted as referee.

There was to be a carnival the same night but only two or three masqueraders turned up so it was called off. The races on the evenings program however were run off. A trio of Walkerton boys won the relay race. Alfred Sauer won the backward race and Miss Pauline Clapp and Alf Sauer the couple race. A large crowd was present and all enjoyed a good evening's sport.

Capt. Dr. Minifie delivered a touching address in the Presbyterian Church on Sunday afternoon on behalf of the British Belgian Relief Fund. A large sized Congregation was present to hear Dr. Minifie who is a very splendid speaker.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Helwig and daughter Celeste and Misses Rose Helwig, Sarah Fisher, and Dora Wendt drove to Walkerton on Friday to hear the Ebony Lady Minstrels.

Mrs. Conrad Liesemer is still on the sick list.

Ptes. George Pe[illegible] and R. E. Pinkney of Brampton spent Sunday in town.

Mr. Ed Wittich visited friends in town last Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Ezra Schmidt of Con 8 purchased a new Ford touring car from Liesemer and Kalbfleisch on Saturday. We may also add Mr. Schmidt brought out a load of hogs the same day.

Mr. J. T. Kidd, principal of the Public School left on Friday afternoon to attend the funeral of his father at Lisle.

CHEPSTOW

Mr. Frank Fritz of Detroit, Mich., is on a visit to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jos. Fritz.

Mr. Geo. Anstead has returned to his parents after having been employed in Kitchener for the past half year.

Mr. John Hehn of Culross who lately purchased Stephen Powers' 10 acre farm removed his family and effects to his new home on Thursday of last week. We welcome Mr. Hehn into our midst and wish him success in his new undertaking.

Miss I. McNab who was obliged to resign her position as teacher at Hillsdale, owing to ill health, is convalescing at the King Edward.

Owing to the inclement conditions in the woods, with the approach of Spring, Foreman Murray's lumberjacks have disbanded and will be engaged in the mills where the fruit of their winter labours enters upon the second stage.

According to report, our metropolis is due to vie with Detroit, the Automobile City, with regard to the number of motor cars during the coming summer.

Messrs. F. Hehn and F. Zettler have assumed joint managership of Sen. Donnelley's 200 acre farm. With these energetic youths at the helm things are bound to boom.

Mr. Alex McNab who has spent the past year at his home, left for the West last week and will engage in farm work in the vicinity of Youngstown, Alta. during the coming summer.

Mr. Max Hehn returned last week from Trout Creek where during the winter months he was engaged in the woods.

CARGILL

Mrs. (Dr) Bricker returned from Toronto on Saturday night after spending a week at her home there.

Mr. John Clancy made a business trip to Paisley on Tuesday.

Miss Rose Hergott our former milliner, who is now training for a nurse in St. Joseph Hospital, Guelph, called on friends here on Monday.

Mr. Norman Cargill who has been visiting friends here left for his home in Herschel, Sask. on Tuesday.

Mr. James Alexander of the Royal Bank staff, Elmwood, spent the week end at his home here.

A load of youth and beauty attended the Carnival in Paisley on Friday night and in spite of the disagreeable night they report a good time.

The people of the village gave a reception in the Forester's Hall on Monday night in honour of Capt. G. S. Hanmore who is on furlough to his home, after spending some months in France. A very nice programme had been arranged for. Among the speakers were Rev. Father Goodrow of Chepstow, Rev. [illegible] Gale and Senator Donnelly [illegible]inkerton, Geo. Sirrs, E. Crawfo[illegible] C. Kyle, E. A. Ruttle, [illegible]y and W. D. Cargill of the village, [illegible] latter very ably filling the part of Chairman. Capt. Hanmore [illegible] a very interesting speech relating a good deal of his experience while in England and France. The Capt. has certainly been through a lot but being under military orders and not having a discharge was unable to tell much of the actual doings at the front. After the programme Capt. Hanmore was presented with a five dollar gold piece and a pair of socks. A dainty luncheon was served by the ladies, and the meeting closed by all singing "For He is a Jolly Good Fellow" and the National Anthem.

Mr. G. Saunders made a business trip to Walkerton on Tuesday.

Capt. G. S. Hanmore left on Tuesday for Ottawa where he will spend a few days, from there he intends going to Mount Clare, N. Y. to visit his sister who is training for a nurse in that city.

BORN—To Mr. and Mrs. Henry Spitzig, on Friday, March 16th, a daughter.

Mrs. Walter Stark and babe of Paisley are visiting at the home of Mr. Horatio Parker.

Messrs M. L. Ziegler and W. J. Loughleen made a business trip to Owen Sound on Monday.

Mr. Geo. Austett of Kitchener renewed acquaintances here on Tuesday.

OTTER CREEK

High and low the March winds blow,
They fill the hollow with drifts of snow
They toss and tumble the curly heads
And shake the people out of bed.

Mrs. George Switzer who returned from the West visiting at Mr. Charles Smith's.

Quite a number from here took in the carnival at Mildmay on Thursday night.

Mr. Red Kopf visited friends near Carlsruhe.

Quite a number of farmers attended the auction sale at Mr. Voelzing's in Brant.

Mr. Fred Quanz was renewing friends and acquaintances here.

The Rawleigh man passed through here.

JOHNSTON'S CORNERS

Pte. David McCarter of Toronto was home two days on leave prior to going overseas in a few days. We all wish him a safe journey and hope to see him back soon again.

Mr. Wm. McCarter, fireman on the G. T. R. at Palmerston, also spent a few days at home to see his brother "Dave" before going overseas.

Mr. Peter Scanlon is able to be out again after being confined to bed several days with a bad cold.

Quite a few of this line attended the funeral of the late Francis Scanlon at Formosa last Wednesday. He was sociable and well liked by all who knew him.

Mr. Con. Weingart has taken the contract of cutting a lot of wood for Mr. Wm. Johnston. His brother "Steve" is helping him. They seem to like cutting wood for they are at it steady all winter for over 30 years, some record alright.

Mr. Andrew Zettler purchased a new sleigh from K. Weber of Carlsruhe. He believes in a good sleigh for bad roads.

Mr. Harvey Whitehead returned home again after being out near Cargill most of the winter working for his brother Benjamin.

One of our bachelors on this line has a housekeeper now. It seems he don't believe in doing all the work alone. We don't blame him.

Several of our farmers hauled a lot of turnips to town to be shipped to the cities where such sort of produce is scarce. Prepare yourselves to grow bigger crops than ever as we have a fertilizer agent in our vicinity and he is willing to give any information requi[illegible]garding more production.

Mr. [illegible] Connel has cut and sold a fine lot of sawlogs out of his hardwood bush. Long Bros. teamed them to town for him. They're hustlers alright.

Mr. J. J. Zettler has installed a new chopper in his barn at home as it takes a lot of chop to feed all those porkers which he has in that big piggery.

KINLOSS

We see old Winter is having its usual encounter with Spring.

Mr. Peter McDonald and Ortie Herd intend leaving for the far West on Thursday of this week. We all wish them a safe journey and success. Say, Ortie, beat it while your boots are good.

In spite of the storm on Saturday our faithful little band of Red Cross workers had a very successful meeting with the usual supper in the evening which was well patronized by both old and young.

Miss Hattie Stanley returned to London on Saturday last.

Mrs. George Richardson of Teeswater spent Sunday at her mother's here.

The sale of Mrs. H. Herd was well attended, as usual good prices prevailed.

Mrs. F. Cole and Mrs. H. Thompson accompanied by Miss I. Pollock and M. Richards journeyed thither selling tickets for a beautiful satin cushion and realized the sum of $13.75 for Red Cross purposes.

Miss Florence Herd donated two ducks also, for Red Cross purposes, accompanied by her sister Miss Violet they sold tickets to the amount of $6.75 Ed. Petteplace was the lucky duck.

Good Luck to the men and boys who were not afraid to venture ten cents for Red Cross work.

Mr. Russell Hewitt visited his uncle Mr. Peter McDonald Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. James Halliday sr. visited at Dick Leeson's one day last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Richard Lockart of Rainy River spent the week-end at Mr. and Mrs. D. S. Campbell's.

We are pleased to hear of Mrs. Alex Hewitt's recovery after her recent severe illness.

MAPLE HILL

Mrs. Tom Sykle entertained a number of ladies to a quilting bee, Thursday afternoon.

Herb Cunningham and Ira Scake attended Pearl Lake box social last Thursday night.

The young people of this section are talking of having a box social.

A quiet wedding was solemnized at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. Tanner of the South Line, Brant, when their daughter Grace was united in marriage to Franklin J. Little on March 14th, by Rev. Mr. Jackson of Hanover. We all join in wishing them a long and happy life.

The knitters of this section have returned twelve pair of socks to Mrs. Ramsay. Very good owing to the small attendance and the work of one knitting bee.

Herb Cunningham had the misfortune to cut his foot while cutting at his own home on Thursday last.

The ladies of the Knitting Society are having a meeting Monday evening in order to organize a Red Cross Society. We wonder if the ladies think that the war is near an end or better late than never.

PINKERTON

The local branch of the Red Cross Society at their weekly meeting, packed and sent away 22 boxes of eats to the soldier and sailor boys from this district. We feel sure that if the men living in this district saw the inside of those boxes, they would all attempt to enlist at once.

Mr. and Mrs. S. Nelson and son and Miss Clara Clark returned to Manitoba on Saturday after spending the winter months at the home of Mr. Jas. Clark.

Mr. R. Gale of Alma spent Sunday with his parents at "the Manse."

A large number from here attended the Carnival in Paisley on Friday night.

Miss Florence Diehl spent the week-end at her home in Paisley.

EAST BRUCE

Mrs. A. Colwell is seriously ill.

Mr. Peter McArthur of Calgary is visiting his old friends in the neighbourhood. It is 18 years since he left here and very few of the old people are left who were here then.

Mrs. W. J. Ross fell and fractured the bone of her ankle and is laid up.

Three successful auction sales were held last week in the neighbourhood, Sinclair's, Shipley's and Metcalfe's. Auctioneer Pearce wielded the hammer and got good prices for every thing, stock going at record prices.

Word has been received that Sergt. Neil McGillvary, late of the 12th Bruce has been wounded at the Front but no word has been received as to the seriousness of the wounds and his friends are waiting anxiously for word.

Mr. Peter McArthur is very low and little hope is given for his recovery owing to his advanced age.

A meeting was held in S. S. No. 8, Greenock on Thursday evening to form a Farmers Club. Officers were elected and quite a number enrolled as members.

Mrs. Rich. McGregor is under the Doctor's care at present.

Mr. Alex Vance has left the 8th and got settled in his new home on the 4th.

SOLWAY

(Intended for last week.)

Messrs. Andrew and Xavier Fischer from Rosetown and Elbow, Sask., respectively spent a couple of days last week at the home of their, sister Mrs Jno. Stroeder, and returned to the West on Monday.

We are sorry to report the death of the infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alex Knoll on Wednesday morning last. The funeral which was well attended took place on Thursday afternoon. We extend our sympathy to the bereaved ones.

A successful box social was held in Baird's school on Friday evening last in aid of the Bruce Preparedness League and Brant Ladies Hospital aid. Mr. Walter Findlay occupied the chair, and the program which was much enjoyed by the large audience opened and closed with the singing of the National Anthem. Mr. Abel disposed of the boxes in his usual able manner and this part of the program was also much enjoyed. The proceeds amounted to $93.

Miss Eleanor McGarrity, who is teaching near Durham, attended the box social and spent the week-end at her home here.

Mr. Jno. Cahoon is renewing acquaintances in this locality this week.

A few in this vicinity have been quarantined for measles the past week.

RIVERSDALE

Mrs. L. S. Beninger of Grand Valley is visiting friends here.

A pleasant little time was spent at the home of Miss Winnie Abbott on Friday night.

Born—On Friday, March 9th, to Mr. and Mrs. James Valad, a daughter.

HANOVER

Mr. Martin Menk's sale of March 9th was a big success. Sheep sold as high as $32 each; 2 year old heifers as high as $106; a two year old colt at $146.

The death occurred on March 8th of another one of the early pioneers of Hanover, in the person of Henry Oppertshauser, son of the late Henry Oppertshauser, at the age of sixty-four years and eight months, at the home of his sister Mrs. Engleshaw. Born in Woolwich Township in 1852, he came with his parents to Hanover in 1850, where he continued to reside up to the time of his death. He was one of the oldest employees of the Knechtel Furniture Co., having been in their employ for about thirty years.

News About Town

Sailed For England

Les. Huether sailed from Halifax this week for England where he is to take a Commission in the Royal Naval Air Service.

A Sure Sign

A citizen pointed to the presence of half a dozen herring gulls up the river on Monday as an unfailing sign of an approaching storm. Sure enough, the storm came on Tuesday.

Mr. Walker Not So Well

Word has been received in town that Rev. D. A. Walker is not so well and was removed recently from his home to the hospital at Kitchener. In addition to the nervous break-down Mr. Walker has been troubled lately with an affection of the throat and has had his tonsils removed.

Property Changes Hands

Mr. W. G. Cheshire, who came here last month from Wiarton to take a position as accountant at the Rattan Works, has bought from Mrs. Forbes Clarke of Toronto, her storey and a half frame residence opposite the County Buildings, and will bring his family here from Wiarton the first of the month. The present occupant, Mr. James Crawford, will move into Mr. V. Messner's house in the West Ward, which was vacated this week by Mrs. Herman Becker.

Will Launch Recruiting Campaign

An organized effort is to be made in this county to keep a steady stream of recruits moving forward to the 160th Bruce Batt'n. Maj. Hay, senior officer of the 32nd who will be in charge of recruiting, expects to open recruiting offices at various points throughout the county soon. Recruits will be sent to the 25th Reserve Battalion in England, under the new scheme and drafted to the 160th in France as required.

Not a Scratch In Two Years

R. E. Truax M. P. had a letter from Sgt. Geo. Kingsbury saying that he is still on the firing line and feeling fine. George seems to have led a charmed existence. He has been at the Front practically since the beginning of the war and has not had a scratch, although he has had no less than six machine guns shot away from him, which shows the kind of fighting he has been through. If his good luck continues George hopes to return to Walkerton, where he has many warm friends, and take his old job with Truax & Son again but not until they have made a thorough clean-up in Belgium.

Did His Bit

Few men have been so anxious to "do their bit" as Mr. Ernest Wiles, brother of Mr. J. H. Wiles, Supt. of the House of Refuge, who was recently invalided home from the front. Mr. Wiles left his wife and three small children to enlist with the 71st. He was afterwards drafted to the 48th Highlanders and saw a good share of hard fighting. He was severely wounded both in the hand and knee and has not yet recovered the full use of those members. Mr. and Mrs. Wiles and family came up from Paris last week and have been spending a few days with the former's brother here.

Spoiled Their "Soft Thing."

Rev. D. McLennan, Children's Aid Agent, went to Southampton on Friday to investigate the case of two children, who had been left in charge of an aunt by their father, who is a Soldier at the Front. The children were being very well looked after by the aunt who is quite attached to them, but the whole family of three grown-ups appeared to be living off the money sent home by the Soldier, the separation allowance, and the money received from the Patriotic Fund. Rev. Mr. McLennan considered it inadvisable to take the children away as they are being fairly well looked after, but he secured a signed agreement from the aunt to deposit $14 a month in the Savings Bank to the children's credit. A copy of the agreement was left by Mr. McLennan with the Magistrate to insure its being properly carried out.

BIGGEST FLOOD IN YEARS

Saugeen Rises to Within 28 Inches of Record Height on Tuesday— East Ward Yards are Flooded

Last week it looked as if there would be very little flood. The mild weather with the frosty nights, kept the snow from going too quickly. But a spell of warm weather on Monday, followed by rain, set the water free with a rush, and the old Saugeen rose to a height of which has not been equalled since the big flood of 1912, and with that single exception has not been equalled for many years. At 4.30 p. m. on Tuesday the water was within 28 inches of the high water mark reached in 1912. A number of dooryards in the East Ward were flooded and a couple of families had to vacate their houses. The Truax firm have had to shut down the past three days owing to the height of water at the dam but have not sustained any damage from the flood. The Walkerton E. L. & P. Co. have been able to keep their plant going and maintain continuous service. No great damage has been done thus far by the flood, which is now abating.

For Sale

Several Clyde horses and colts, coming three years, two grade bulls. Shorthorn bull and boars for service. Paul Hofarth, 14th con. Carrick, R. R1 Carlsruhe.

A Sad Loss

Deep sympathy is felt for Mr. and Mrs. J. A McGuire of Malcolm in the double bereavement which they suffered on Friday last. Their bright little boy, Francis Paul, aged two and his month old brother, Daniel Patrick, both succumbed to pneumonia following a few days' illness. The two little babes were buried side by side in the North Brant R. C. Cemetery on Sunday morning.

A Culross Pioneer

Mr. Mathew Schiestel, a respected pioneer of Culross, succumbed on Friday to a severe attack of pneumonia. Mr. Schiestel had resided in Culross over fifty years, settling on a bush farm there in the early days. He is survived by his widow and a family of twelve. Mrs. Geo. Detzler of Walkerton is a daughter. The funeral took place on Monday at Formosa R. C. Church.

The Vacant Lots Too!

The call has gone forth for help on the farms, and a response will no doubt be given by the towns such as has never been given before. In the cities vacant lots are being brought under cultivation and the same can be done to advantage right here in Walkerton. While the Bruce Preparedness League is figuring out how to get the work done on the farms, it might also give production a boost by figuring out a scheme to make scores of vacant lots in town yield an abundance of potatoes and vegetables.

Chester Cunningham Wounded

Mr. Thomas Cunningham had a telegram from Ottawa on Friday reporting that his son, Chester A. Cunningham, had been wounded in France. According to the telegram, Chester showed his good fighting qualities by sticking pluckily to his post. "Wounded but remained on duty" is the way the official message had it. Chester is the fifth out of the seven Walkerton boys in the Trench Mortar Battery to appear on the casualty list. Mr. Cunningham had a letter the same day from another son, David, of Moosejaw, Sask., stating that he had sold off his stock and implements, rented his farm and had signed with a battalion at Moosejaw.

More Boy Offenders

Another case of housebreaking by boys was brought to light Monday by Chief Ferguson who arrested four youthful offenders for breaking into Judge Klein's residence during the absence of the family in Florida. The act was committed last Thursday night about 9 o'clock. The boys secured entrance by prying open a cellar window. All they took was a bottle of wine each from the cellar. As the boys apparently had the idea of doing something smart and did not appreciate the seriousness of the offence Chief Justice Mulock allowed them to go on suspended sentence. As a judge has only one alternative in a case of house-breaking either to send boys to penetentiary or let them go scot free a good many youthful offenders are naturally being let off which may account in some measure for the number of boys' cases that are being tried in the local courts these days. A good old fashioned 'licking' under the direction of the court might have a salutory effect in lessening the number of these offences.

BIG MEETING CALLED

By Ex-Warden McNab to Discuss Farm Help Problem and Also Recruiting for 160th Bruce Batt'n Reinforcements

Ex-Warden McNab has issued a call to the members of the Bruce Preparedness League throughout the County to attend an open meeting of the League to be held at the Town Hall, Walkerton, on Friday afternoon at four o'clock.

Two important matters are to be considered: The question of getting help for the farmers during harvest from the residents of the towns and villages: and the best means of assisting the military authorities to secure recruits for drafts to the 160th Bruce Batt'n.

The meeting is called largely in response to an urgent telegram from Dr. Abbott, Prov. Sec. of the Organization of Resources Committee, who wired on Monday:—"The Call of the Empire for more food is urgent but the Ontario farmers cannot respond unless labor is available for seeding which commences early in April. Immediate action is imperative if assistance is to be given. Will your patriotic committee kindly call an emergency meeting and ascertain whether retired farmers and others in your community are willing to help. Co-operation with Boards of Trade and other organizations interested is advisable."

Major Hay, of Paisley, who is to have charge of recruiting recruits to go as drafts to reinforce the 160th Batt'n. in France, has also called for the co-operation of the citizens of the County through the Bruce Preparedness League.

The members of the Walkerton branch of the Bruce Preparedness League are also urged to be on hand for the County meeting Friday afternoon.

Good Business Opportunity

Owing to scarcity of help, and being unable to do the work myself, I am offering my milk business for sale. Buyer can have possession immediately. Business is profitable and is a fine opportunity for a good active man.—Robt. Russell.

Airing Their Troubles

A wife of a farmer named Graves, living north of Cargill, is accused by her husband of having gone after him with a butcher knife. The wife claims that she simply had the knife in her hand and the man tried to snatch the knife away with painful results. Her wounded spouse however took the affair seriously and laid information before Magistrate Jas. Tolton. The Magistrate held a preliminary hearing on Friday and decided to send Mrs. Graves up for trial on a charge of "assault with intent to do bodily harm."

Boys All Enlist

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is a job that has not appealed to the sons of Reeve Robt. Russell. They preferred to be in the thick of the fight, and already one of the four sons who have been in khaki, has fallen gallantly in Action. Mr. Russell now finds himself forced to quit business as his helper, Wess, the last of the Russel Clan, can stand it no longer, and will be off to Toronto on Monday to enlist with a Kiltie Battalion. Mr. Russell is not physically able to handle his large dairy business alone and is advertising it for sale in this week's paper.

Corp. Nutting Landed

Corp. C. Nutting who is coming home from England on sick leave, is expected to reach Walkerton about the end of the week. He landed at Halifax on Thursday, reached Quebec on Monday, and wired from there that he would be detained at Quebec four days. Unless he is detained further at military headquarters at London, he should reach Walkerton about Saturday. Further definite word is expected shortly. Mr. Nutting was seriously wounded in the shoulder by an expanding bullet, while working a machine gun at the Front. The bones of his shoulder were badly shattered, and he has been confined in a English military hospital the past six months or more. He has been allowed six month's leave.

Off On Suspended Sentence

Mrs. Emma Helwig pleaded guilty to the conspiracy charge before Judge Greig on Friday morning and was allowed to go on suspended sentence. She was required to give a bond of $500 for one year for good behavior and to leave the town at once. Mrs. Helwig was represented by Lawyer Henry of Markdale, owing to the illness of her solicitor, Mr. O. E Klein. Crown Attorney Dixon appeared for the Crown. The charge against Mrs. Helwig arose out of the writing of blackmailing letters to several respectable citizens of the town last Fall. Tony Zuber, by whom Mrs. Helwig was employed as house keeper, served 5 days recently for writing one of the letters. Zuber is at present out on $500 bail on a conspiracy charge and will be tried summarily on April 30th.

ANOTHER WALKERTON BOY

Everitt A. Truax Makes the Great Sacrifice on the Field of Battle in Flanders—Died of Wounds March 11th

Scarcely a week passes now that a message does not bring sorrow to some Walkerton home from the trenches where Bruce's best sons are valiantly paying the price for liberty. On Thursday last word came that another gallant Walkerton boy had made the Supreme Sacrifice. Everett A. Truax, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Truax, now of Toronto, and nephew of R. E. Truax, M. P. of Walkerton was reported "died of wounds on March 11th." The parents had heard nothing in regard to Everett being wounded and the message conveying the news of his death was the first word that reached them.

Everett was born and raised in Walkerton, and up to the time of his enlistment was employed in his uncle's mill. He was well-liked among his companions for his straight-forward manly qualities. Two years ago his life was saddened by the death of his young wife (Laura Kerner) just a month to a day after their happy marriage. Everett shortly afterwards signed up with the 71st. Batt'n. and went Overseas a year ago. He was afterwards drafted into the Trench Mortar Battery of the 10th. Brigade, 4th. Division, along with six other Walkerton boys. This is the little contingent from the old town which has paid such heavy toll during the past two months, no less than three of the seven having died on the Firing Line and two others having been wounded.

On the receipt of the news on Friday the flags on the Court House, Town Hall and the Truax factory were floated at half mast.

Farm Helpers Write Exams

Sixteen High School students who hope to work on the farm this coming summer are writing on their final examinations this week. The results will be announced on April 20th, after which the successful candidates will be permitted to don their overalls and do their bit for Greater Production.

Vegetable Growing Campaign

Under the auspices of the Walkerton Horticultural Society Mr. G. H. Goad of London, Ont., will deliver a lecture in the Town Hall, Walkerton, on Wednesday April 4th, 1917, at 8 o'clock p. m., in which he will treat on how to grow vegetables, and the most useful varieties. In these strenuous times brought about by the world-wide war, it is the duty of every householder who has charge of a vacant piece of ground to have it under cultivation and growing something to aid in this time of food shortage. Lecture free. Come one, come all.—M. G. Dippel, President, Jas. Tolton, Sec'y.

Our Boys Of The Battery

There is a Trench Mortar Battery over in France in which the people of this town, have taken a very warm interest because it numbered no less than seven Walkerton boys. During the past two months the battery has been in some very heavy fighting and the Walkerton contingent has suffered sorely in casualties. Of the seven gallant lads from town only two have come through unscathed: Roy Oberle and Ted Wilhelm. Ed. Eidt and Chester Cunningham were both wounded recently but stuck manfully at their posts. "Wounded but remained on duty" is the way the official messages from Ottawa expressed it. Three others of the seven, Alvin Wilton, Leith Russel and Everett Truax have paid the supreme sacrifice while at the post of duty. Walkerton has reason to cherish the memory of her gallant sons of the "Trench Mortar Battery, 10th Brigade, 4th Division, Canadian Expeditionary Forces."

DAY GETS TWELVE YEARS

Escaped Criminal who Assaulted Farmer's Wife Found Guilty by Jury —Only Two Cases at the Spring Assizes

Only two criminal cases were up for trial at the Spring Assizes which opened here on Tuesday before Chief Justice Sir William Mulock. There were no civil cases.

The Grand Jury, Reeve Phil Forbes of Lindsay Tp. foreman, congratulated the officials of the gaol, County Hospital and House of Refuge, on the good condition in which they kept their premises. They expressed also the hope and belief that the war would soon be over with victory for the Allies.

Bruce's Good Example

The Chief Justice, congratulating the Grand Jury on their report, said he was sure Bruce would continue to do her part in the Great War and referred to the splendid lead the Bruce County Council had made in contributing generously to the Patriotic Fund, setting a good example which other Counties had followed.

Boys Are Let Go

The first case was a charge against four young boys of the town of housebreaking. The boys who were 20, 16, 14, and 14 years of age, broke into Judge Klein's residence through a cellar window last Thursday night and stole a bottle of wine each. The boys pleaded guilty and the Judge after giving them a severe lecture allowed them to go on suspended sentence. He said that while they had technically committed burglary, they had done it thoughtlessly in a spirit of bravado. He exacted a promise from each boy in regard to his conduct from now on.

Day Gets 12 Years

William Henry Day, charged with raping an Amabel farmer's wife, is a shaggy powerfully built man who looks as much like a gorilla as a human being. He has a bad record. Day was sentenced in 1913 to fourteen years in penetentiary for bigamy. In April 1916, he escaped from the prison farm at Guelph, and went as far as Port Elgin by train. In tramping across country, he came to a farm house at night and sought a night's lodging. The farmer befriended him and as a reward Day attacked the wife while the farmer was absent doing the chores. He made his escape at the time but was arrested the next day on a vagrancy charge and when his 30 days sentence in the County Gaol was completed, he was sentenced on the rape charge. In the meanwhile he has been back in penetentiary. When the trial opened Day said, of course he was guilty but claimed he was insane and protested that an insane man should be tried. He declined to challenge any of the jury or even to look at them and turned his back on the Court. It took the jury only twenty minutes to find Day guilty both of rape and of escaping from the Prison Farm. The Chief Justice sentenced him to twelve years in the penetentiary, the sentence to run concurrently with his fourteen year term for bigamy, on which he has about ten years to serve.

New Garage

Mr. J. E. McGregor, Agent for the Overland, is opening a new garage on Durham St, in the building next to Andy Johnston's barber shop.

Prizes For H. S. Pupils

High School Students are being offered cash prizes by the Organization of Resources Committee of Ontario for the best answers to the question: How can the Ontario High School boy by working on a farm this summer help. 1. Himself, 2. The Farmer. 3. The Empire. Cash prizes of $3, $3, and $2 are offered for the best answers from each High School and $25, $15, and $10 in gold for the best answers received from the Schools of the Province. The answers are to be in the Principal's hands by April 10th.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN

We invite you to a Soldiers Birthday Party.
To which we will give you a welcome right hearty
For each year of the age of a soldier
you know,
Make a neat little bag for your coppers to go
And bring to the Armouries on Jane
Street
Where many good friends of your own you may meet,
On Easter Monday from three to nine thirty
We promise you music and something to eat
Which will make the bright hours seem to pass all too fleet
To the Soldier Boys brave will the money we raise
Be devoted—a purpose well worthy patronage.

CURRENT COMMENT

More perfidy. The Philadelphia Record recalls that on February 27 Dr. von Bethmann-Hollweg said to the Reichstag: "For more than a century friendly relations between us and America have been carefully promoted. We honored them as Bismarck gave put it—as an heirloom from Frederick the Great." But 39 days before this Dr. Zimmermann sent through Count von Bernstorff to the German Minister in Mexico the message that if the United States did not submit to "submarine war unrestricted"—which we had declared we would not submit to—we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico: That we shall make war together, and together make peace. We shall give general financial support, and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in New York, Mexico, Texas and Arizona. And Count Bernstorff left American soil swearing eternal friendship for the American people.

TO STARVE GERMANY.

Mr. Winston Churchill, formerly First Lord of the Admiralty, in the Imperial Parliament last evening, urged the Government to make immediate preparations for the 1918 campaign. Mr. Churchill evidently believes with General Maurice that there is nothing in the military situation to lead one to believe that another winter's campaign will not be needed. But Mr. Churchill has no idea that the Central Powers can be defeated in 1918 by pressure of the blockade—by starvation. He believes that peace can be obtained in this way cheaper than by forcing a military decision on the French front. He believes also that, before the final collapse of Germany, she will send out her fleet in a desperate chance to gain a victory in this way.

At this writing we do not know what arguments Mr. Churchill advanced for his belief that the blockade will bring Germany to her knees. However, we have an idea that General Haig will continue to push back the Germans until he gets them well into Germany. If in the meantime the blockade can help in this, so much the better.

THE IRISH CONTROVERSY.

When Premier Lloyd George opposed T. P. O'Connor's resolution for the immediate application of the Home Rule measure to Ireland, he appealed over the heads of Ireland and of Britain, to the wide world for approval of the course he had adopted—of giving Home Rule to that part of Ireland which wanted it, while he refused to force Home Rule upon the part of Ireland that did not want it. Mr. John Redmond has followed his example, for the Nationalist manifesto, issued yesterday, appealed to the men of Irish blood in the Dominions and in the United States. It especially appealed to the American people. The manifesto arraigns Premier Lloyd George for going behind his pledges made in the House when the Home Rule bill was under discussion. There is no doubt that the Asquith Government, of which Lloyd George was a member, passed the bill, with the intention of bringing it into force at the close of the war. There were certain conditions in the bill relating to Ulster which the Nationalists accepted, and with this acceptance it was understood that the law was as good as passed for the government of Ireland.

Since the war began, the Nationalists have given every possible help to the Government to carry on the war. They have voted for every war measure. They have done this because they believed in the righteousness of the cause of the Allies, and also because they believed that Home Rule had been granted to their country. But evidently, of late, they have begun to be suspicious of the Government's intentions regarding Ireland, and they made up their mind to force the issue while the war was on, only to learn that the Government refused to enforce the Act either now or at any other time. The question is, has Lloyd George fallen under the spell of Sir Edward Carson? The Premier has surrounded himself with a body of men who are not in sympathy with Ireland's aspirations.

The question whether Ireland should or should not get Home Rule is not the paramount question at present. That is, should the present Government give effect to the resolution of Parliament that Home Rule as laid down in the Act be applied to Ireland? An Act was passed. It is now on the statute books, and the Government refuses to put it in force. Is minority rule to govern? We are satisfied that this Irish problem is capable of being solved, if tackled by the proper parties. Men of the stamp of Sir Edward Carson and Lord Lansdowne are a brake upon all progress. There should be some way of reconciling Ulster to Home Rule, and a way must be found if peace is ever to brood over Ireland and the British Empire.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"Perhaps so; at any rate he will not miss the sum required to make the Grange fit for the reception of Miss Laura Derwent. She must be considered as his guest, and treated accordingly. If I know Delamere—"

"You are an intimate friend of his," grins Lady Rookwell.

He nods.

"He will not care, whatever it may cost. No doubt the steward has orders to pay all the charges. At any rate, we must set about the work at once."

"Surely there must be some means of communicating with Lord Delamere," says Signa, gently.

Hector Warren shakes his head.

"Poor Delamere," he says, with a laugh. "Let us forget him. He has handed over the Grange to Miss Laura Derwent, and is of no consequence to her or to us! Very well, Lady Rookwell. Three weeks! It is short notice, but I think I can manage it. Did I ever tell you that I once thought of becoming an architect?"

"No, you didn't," retorts her ladyship, shortly.

"No? Well, I did and now my studies in that 'direction' will come in useful. I think if I do not flatter myself—that I can make the Grange so fit as to surprise even Miss Laura Derwent. After all, the principal things wanted are a dustpan and broom."

"I am glad you take it so easily!" remarks Lady Rookwell, sarcastically.

He laughs.

"What else can we do?" he says; "Miss Laura Derwent takes it easily enough."

Lady Rookwell looks at him steadily, then she folds her letter.

"It's a most elaborate practical joke," she says, "and if I were you I would have no hand in it."

"On the contrary, I love practical jokes," says Hector Warren, with mild sarcasm, "and I intend carrying out Miss Laura Derwent's instructions to the letter."

"You do?"

"I most certainly do!" he says.

"Then you are a bigger foo—simpleton than I thought you!" says the old lady, concisely.

He laughs, and rising, walks to the writing-table.

"I could not easily be that, Lady Rookwell. I am now going to write to the steward, to make a commencement. Will you convey my thanks and gratitude to Miss Derwent for her confidence in me?"

"I think you had better write yourself," says Lady Rookwell; but he shakes his head.

"Wouldn't that be rather bad form," he says, "a — sort of intrusion, you know?"

"What a truly modest nature your husband will have, my dear child," she says, nodding sarcastically at Signa. "Very well; I'll write, but mind, I'll have nothing to do with it—nothing."

"On the contrary," he says, smiling, but looking at her with pleasant steadfastness, "you will do your part as set down in the letter, and play hostess."

"I will not! I have said that I will never enter the man's house!"

"Oh, come; Lord Delamere's house will not contaminate you," he says, laughing. "Now, Lady Rookwell, you must take your part to oblige your niece—or cousin—and to oblige me; I shall never have courage to go through it alone! If you refuse, I shall say that you are not so good-natured as I thought you."

"Do, dear Lady Rookwell," says Signa, coming up to her, and laying a hand on her shoulder, entreatingly.

"Dont' come near me," says her ladyship, smiling all the same. "He is bad enough to fight, without you to help him. Well—well, have your way; but, mark my words, mischief will come of this absurdity."

"All right," he says, nodding over his letter, "and when it does, and we are in the midst of the trouble, whatever it may be, you shall have the satisfaction of saying, 'I told you so!'"

CHAPTER XX.

If gold works wonders by itself, its power is increased tenfold when it is allied with the name of such an one as my Lord Delamere.

Hector Warren uses that name like a magic wand, and waving it, as it were, before the eyes of the decorators and upholsterers, makes such an impression upon them that they work as if heaven and earth opened upon their exertions during the short three weeks. A few mornings after Lady Rookwell's visit to the Rectory, an army of men is at work on the Grange, and the sound of hammering, the whistling and singing of workmen, the splash of whitewash brushes, and the rip rip of paper go all day, and indeed all night; for the contractors, bound to time, arrange for day and night gangs. Armed with a letter from the steward, Hector Warren superintends the whole of the operations. It is no easy task, and would be still harder, but Hector finds a subtle delight in having Signa for an assistant. To her, when the decorating part of the proceedings arrives, he refers continually, and it is really she who chooses the colors and the papers, and who decides the ballroom shall be enamelled white and gold and the library repanelled.

"How strange it is," she says, as she makes her way through the topsy-turvy turned place, "that my wish should so soon be gratified. Don't you remember?"

"Yes, I remember," he says, with a faint smile—"yes, you wanted to turn out the old place and restore it to its ancient grandeur; and now, lo and behold! you are at it in real earnest. Perhaps you wish that it were your own?"

And he looks at her curiously.

She laughs and shakes her head.

"No," she says, "not at all. I should be just as happy over a little bit of a cottage; but yet I do enjoy having a hand in this. How wonderfully handsome it is!" And she stands and looks round the vast hall, the old carved wood work of which has been cleaned and restored. "It is a magnificent place! I wonder whether Miss Derwent will be satisfied? She ought to be."

And she points with feigned envy.

"I don't know," he says; "I suppose she will. At any rate, we are doing our best. Come into the drawing-room—they have nearly finished it. You must tell me whether it pleases you."

Signa stands in the doorway and looks around. Half a dozen French decorators are at work, and each man lifts his paper cap with deferential courtesy, and one, the foreman, comes forward to answer any questions. It is well understood about the place that the beautiful young girl is really the guiding soul of the work; and the Frenchman pay her even more deference than the English workmen, in consequence of her being able to converse with them in their native tongue.

"Is mademoiselle satisfied?" asks the man, with his cap in his hand, and making a low bow.

"Quite," answers Signa. "You are excelling yourself, monsieur."

"Mademoiselle, in the goodness of her heart, does me too great honor," he responds, with another low bow. "Mademoiselle will deign to inspect the other apartments? The colors are as you selected. We have taken the greatest pains to follow mademoiselle's directions. But see!" and he throws open the door of an ante-room, and waves his hand.

"It is simply perfect," says Signa, with a flush of womanly pride and pleasure at the results.

"You are a born artist, Signa," murmurs Hector Warren, almost inwardly; but the man overhears him, and shrugs his shoulders.

"Monsieur is right; no one but an artist at soul could have designed these combinations of colors. Monsieur is quite right. I am myself, I trust, an artist; but I bend the knee to you, mademoiselle. But yes! This house will be a memorial of the most exquisite taste. Ah, mademoiselle should have been the daughter of fair France!" he adds, with the delicate flattery of a true Frenchman.

"'Pon my word, I think you have achieved a great success!" says Hector Warren, as they pass on, Signa blushing a little under such admiration. "The man is right; you have the true artistic faculty. It is a lucky thing for Miss Derwent that such a genius was near at hand to carry out her wishes," and he laughs; but there is an undertone of pride in his voice.

"Miss Derwent! Miss Derwent!" It is all Miss Derwent," says Signa, laughing, with an affectation of petulance. "We all forget the unfortunate proprietor. What will Lord Delamere say when he comes home and sees what we have done? Perhaps his taste will be diametrically opposite to mine, and what will be done then?"

"Oh, Delamere," he says, carelessly. "He may never come—who knows?—and if he should I am sure he would be only too delighted. Take care, darling, or you will rub against the wet paint!"

She laughs, and draws nearer to him.

"I am all over paint!" she says. "I think I shall send a bill into Miss Derwent for some new dresses."

"You forget," he says, "Delamere pays all the bills; better send it to him."

"I suppose he wouldn't notice it?" she says, laughing at the idea. "How wonderful it seems to be so immensely rich! I wonder how he would feel if he were suddenly to become quite poor?"

"As poor as I am, for instance," says Hector Warren, with a smile.

"I suppose he would be very unhappy!" rejoins Signa.

"Unhappy? I don't know. I've an idea that he would feel rather relieved. Do you remember the story of the emperor who disappeared, and was found digging potatoes as a farm laborer? They asked him why he had relinquished his high estate, and he replied that there was a knob in the back of his throne which always run into his back, and he couldn't stand it any longer. I expect that is what many a rich man feels; there is a knob in most thrones. If I were Lord Delamere—by the way, if I were Lord Delamere, all this would be your very own, my darling. Tell me honestly, do you wish that it were?"

"Honestly, no," she says, and casting that feminine glance around, which, swift as it is, looks in every corner to see that no one is in sight, she glides nearer to him as he sits on a workman's trestle, and puts her arm around his neck. "Honestly, no, I would rather be Hector Warren's wife than—than Lady Mayoress of London!" and she laughs.

He takes her hand and kisses it with a murmur of endearment.

"How badly you have been brought up, my poor darling!" he says, with a smile. "Fancy any perfectly trained girl of the period preferring a plain 'Mr.' to an earl! Never mind, I must look over it, I suppose, taking your youth and inexperience into account. Well—what was I saying? If I were Lord Delamere, I should be heartily sick of ceremony and fun, and—go and dig potatoes. Poor Delamere!"

"Wicked Delamere, you mean," she says, chidingly. "You pity him too much, Hector."

"Perhaps I do. Well, wicked Delamere, if you like. Now come and see the garden"—they have had fifteen men at work there—"I have had the lawn carried down to the drive as you suggested, and the head man—a Scotchman—was good enough to admit that it was a great improvement," and he laughs.

They go down the broad stone steps into the garden, no longer a mass of straggling grass and weedy paths, but a trim and stately pleasaunce, with primly cut laurels, surrounded by graceful shrubs, and here they find Archie extremely busy with a spade and a wheelbarrow.

"Hallo!" he shouts. "I've been waiting for you two. I've been down to your lodgings, Mr. Warren, and here are some letters that have come for you!" and he holds up a packet not a little soiled with fresh mould and finger marks.

Hector Warren takes them and turns them over, then he thrusts them into his pocket and nods.

"Thank you, Archie. What are you trying to do? Let me give you a ride," and he lifts him into the barrow and sets off with him.

Signa seats herself on a step of the terrace and watches them. Never, perhaps, does her heart beat with more tenderness and love than at such moments as these, when he is exerting himself to make Archie happy.

Between him and the boy has grown up a very deep affection, which on Archie's side partakes of the character of worship, and often, when she and Archie are alone, the child will sing the absent one's praises to her by the hour together. If it be true that no utterly bad man can care for dogs and young children, then of a certainty there is some good in Hector Warren, for both these descriptions of animals trust him instinctively, and wag their tails or clap their hands when he approaches them. Archie, when first informed of the engagement between Signa and Hector Warren, had been rather inclined to rebel and object, but upon being assured that he might come and spend most of his time with them when they were married, he generously gave his consent and yielded Signa to his rival, exacting from Hector Warren a solemn promise that he would always treat her kindly, and on no account to scold or beat her, or send her to bed without her supper.

Signa, as she sat and watched them, could not help a feeling of wonder almost amounting to awe, at the strange mixture of firmness and modesty, of gentleness and strength combined in her lover's nature, and her girlish heart thrilled with passionate pride as she reflected that, though strong enough to quell the fierce temper of a man half insane, yet he could find delight in affording amusement for a child.

"Won't you make Hector very hot, Archie?" she asks, smiling, as the wheelbarrow dashes past her, Archie seated therein, and Hector pushing it, while the perspiration stands on his brow, the gardeners looking up from their work with respectful amusement.

"Oh, I'm all right," says Hector Warren. "I'm inclined to believe that Archie is right when he informs me that I make an excellent donkey."

"Hector," says Archie, suddenly, "you haven't read those letters I gave you. Why don't you?"

"Oh, they'll wait" he says, carelessly.

"I thought everyone read their letters directly they got them," says Archie. "I wonder what's in that long blue envelope with the red seal?"

"My dear Archie," expostulates Signa, laughing, "you must learn to curb your curiosity."

Hector Warren smiles.

"It doesn't contain hard bake, I'm sorry to say, Archie, or you should have it willingly. But come, we must go home, now. Do you see the fountain?" he asks, turning to Signa and pointing to a tall object standing in the centre of the lawn, and carefully swathed in matting. "Come and let us see it," and he directs some of the workmen to uncover it. When the matting is taken of, a beautifully carved marble nymph, playing with a shell, from which the water will descend, is revealed.

Signa stands open-eyed with wonder and delight.

"Is that what you meant?" he asks, looking at her with quiet gratification in her approval.

"Yes, yes, exactly! but, Hector——"

"Well, my darling?"

"Isn't this rather expensive? Surely Lord Delamere did not intend that you should go to these lengths."

"You mean that he intended giving an inch, and I have taken a marble nymph," and he laughs. "Well, I must be responsible for this. I have no doubt I can make my peace with Delamere. After all, it is a vast improvement; it just breaks the flat expanse of lawn as seen from the windows on the terrace."

"It's lovely!" exclaims Archie. "I wish they had got it set and the water laid on."

"It will be to-morrow, sir," says one of the men, smiling.

"That's right," says Hector Warren, approvingly. "There's no time to be lost."

"No, indeed, sir! I didn't think as how it could all be done, but I think we shall do it now. It will make beautiful grounds of it, sir; there won't be any better in the county by the twenty-fifth; and I hope you'll be pleased, miss," and he touches his hat to Signa, who shrinks back a little and shakes her head with a blush and a laugh.

"Oh, but it is not—I am not—it is nothing to do with me."

The man stares and looks from her to Hector Warren, and touches his hat again.

"Beg your pardon, miss; I am sure."

"You see," says Hector Warren, with a smile, "this is what one gets for interfering in other people's business; the good fellow is under the impression that in some way or other the place belongs to us. I suppose if you explained that you had taken so much trouble to gratify the whim of a young lady whom you had never seen, he wouldn't believe you. The twenty-fifth! It is getting near! I wonder whether it will really all be finished!" and he laughs.

"What will you do if it should not be?" asks Signa, with a smile.

"I? I shall make Miss Laura Derwent a low bow, and say with a grave air, "Miss Derwent, it is not in mortals to command success; but I, and Miss Grenville, have done even more—deserved it.'"

"That's out of the Latin grammar," says Archie, concisely.

"It is, my profound scholar," retorts Hector, catching him up, and setting him on his shoulder, and so, laughing, and chatting happily, they go home.

To-night Hector dines at the Rectory. It is not often he does so, though, strange to say, he is always welcome, for even the rector and Aunt Podswell can't resist the charm of his manner, and though they still patronize him as much as they dare, they are always glad to see him.

"Oh, every cloud has a silver lining," comforted the Optimist. "That's just it," growled the Pessimist. "You have to turn it inside out to get at it."

THE VOICES CALLING ME.

I walk alone on the beach to-night
And the stars throw down their gentle light,
I'm catching the lure of the old church bells,
They sweep me on where memory dwells,
And bring in those visions bright—bring in those visions bright
Of many I loved, who from o'er the sea
Are stretching out hands of love to me;
Oh, their voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

I'm pacing alone on the shore to-night
Where the sea gulls roam in rapid flight;
And the waters are lapping their rocky bound
While silence and gloom reign all around.
My visions to-night are in the past
Where the pale horse rider his shadows cast
And carried a loved one home—carried a loved one home.
My spirit hastes across the sea,
Where hands of love are stretched out to me,
And their voices are calling me, O, tenderly calling me.

I'm keeping my vigil alone to-night,
And the waves are still, no foam is in sight;
The great ships pass on their outward way,
On their journey speed both night and day.
With the mariner 'fore the mast—the mariner 'fore the mast,
How like to life, my heart doth say,
From cradle's rock till the hair is grey;
O, it's coming to me and thee!
Hark, the voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

My watch I'm keeping alone to-night
And the rippling waves show a breeze in sight;
That presently turns to a gale
And the mad-aps foam to their giant might.
Leaving many a bark in direst plight
Great peril for those who sail—great peril for those who sail
How like to life, my heart doth say,
Great billows o'erwhelm us day by day.
Take loved ones over the sea,
Where their voices are calling me,
O, tenderly calling me.

I've come to the end of my watch to-night
And the storm is o'er—has spent its might;
Great wreckage on shore is piled
For some have gone to their last long sleep.
A grave have found in the ocean deep
Laid low by the waters wild—laid low by the waters wild.
How like to life, my heart doth say,
We sail for a port that's far away,
O, far across the sea we're sailing, me and thee;
Hark, sweet voices are calling me, so tenderly calling me.

The Seal Ring.

The seal ring dates back to the days of the Old Testament and products of the glyptic art, of gem engraving was called, were known in the most remote times. In Exodus xxviii, 17-20, mention is made of the following stones, upon which the names of the twelve children of Israel were engraved: The sardius, the topaz, the carbuncle, the emerald, the sapphire, the diamond, the ligure, the agate, the amethyst, beryl, onyx and jasper. In verse 21 of the same chapter we find mention of the engraving of signets upon the hardest stones. It is believed, that the Egyptians instructed the Israelites in the art of stone engraving. The Egyptians used the lapidary's wheel and emery powder and knew the use of the diamond in engraving other hard stones. Among the Assyrian and Babylonian ruins were found fine specimens of signets on gems, many of them set in rings.

Picturesque Cretan Garb.

An interesting description of the Cretan's picturesque dress is given by a writer in Blackwood's:

"The Cretan's national dress merits a word of description. He wears on his head either a twisted kerchief or a sort of pirate's cap, with a tassel hanging over one ear. His upper limbs are clad in a loose black shirt and his lower in a pair of black cotton breeches of a bagginess which is well nigh inconceivable even to one who is used to the shalwar of the Levant. These breeches finish tight immediately below the knee and leave an inch or more of sunburnt leg showing above the top of a high yellow boot of untanned leather. The men stride along with the highlander's easy gait, and as they go the slack of their preposterous breeches swings out behind them with all the jaunty air of a kilt."

CORAL REEFS.

Nature's Methods in Building Those Seashell Monuments.

Coral reefs surrounded many of the islands in the Pacific. They protect the lowlands from the washing of the waves, and the still waters inclosed by them are the only harbors of refuge for ships. The reefs themselves furnish the greatest peril to navigation, and if there were no inlet through which a vessel could enter their protected circle they would be a danger and nothing else.

But almost every reef has such an inlet. It is a necessary result of the laws under which the forces of nature work. To understand this we must see how these reefs are formed.

Chemically the reef corals are almost pure carbonate of lime, the substance of ordinary limestone and marble. The reef grows as the shell of the oyster or any other shellfish grows. It is itself the common and undivided shell of innumerable polyps or minute insects, which are being produced and are dying in successive generations.

These tiny beings get all their living from the waters of the sea. It is from this source also that they derive the salts of lime from which they secrete the bony structure that remains after the animal is dead.

The coral polyps cannot live in fresh water. Their food supply is brought to them by the waves and currents of the sea. As a result it is found that directly opposite the mouth of the stream from the island the reef does not grow. There will be the inlet to the inclosed waters.

NERVOUS CHILDREN

The Trouble is Often Really St. Vitus Dance—Do Not Neglect It.

Many a child has been called awkward, has been punished in school for not keeping still or for dropping things, when the trouble was really St. Vitus dance. This disease may appear at any age, but is most common between the ages of six and fourteen years. It is caused by thin blood, which fails to carry sufficient nourishment to the nerves, and the child becomes restless and twitching of the muscles and jerking of the limbs and body follow. In severe cases the child is unable to hold anything or feed itself. St. Vitus Dance is cured by building up the blood. The most successful treatment is to remove the child from all mental excitement, stop school work and give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. These pills renew the blood supply, strengthen the nerves, and restore the child to perfect health. Here is proof of their power to cure. Mrs. S. Sharpe, Oakville, Ont., says: "When my daughter was nine years old she was attacked with St. Vitus Dance. She was sent to a sanatorium, where she remained for nine weeks, without any benefit. Indeed, when we brought her home she was as helpless as a baby. I got a supply of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills and continued giving her half a pill after each meal for several months, when she had fully recovered and has never had a symptom of the trouble since."

You can get Dr. Williams' Pink Pills through any dealer in medicine or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Graphic Description.

Zach had been introduced to a new circular saw. The foreman of the sawmill performed the introduction, and after giving Zach a few necessary extra instructions he left him to his work. Zach was really interested in the buzzing blade, and his curiosity getting the better of his discretion, he soon found himself minus a finger. Despite his excitability he was something of a stoic, so he bound up his wound without seeking assistance. While he was thus engaged the foreman reappeared. To him Zach described the accident.

"But how on earth did you manage it?" the foreman exclaimed, anxiously, for the prospects of damages ahead were not exactly pleasant.

Zach shook his head.

"Sure, an' I don't know," he said. "I just touched the thing like this with my finger when—I'm blessed if there ain't another one gone!"—New York Times.

Keep Minard's Liniment in the house

IN DAMP WEATHER.

Precautions to Be Taken by the Housewife.

A little while ago two young housewives were condoling with each other over the prolonged season of humidity and dampness.

"We can't get a single bureau drawer closed," said one, "and last night when I wanted to get out the very best table lunch I own for an unexpected guest, we couldn't get the linen drawer open, and instead of showing off my best, we had to use paper napkins."

"We're in a worse state," said the other. "Finally, after much pulling I got a bureau drawer all the way out, and now I keep it propped up on two chairs because I can't get it in again."

Summer dampness is really hard to guard against. It is sure to come every year. The weather is too warm to permit fires which might restore the house to a comfortable dryness, and as the dampness is only temporary not very much can be done to furniture or inside fixtures. It is a temptation to have the sticking drawers and doors planed off a little, but to do so is a mistake for the return of heat and dry weather will cause them to shrink back to their normal proportions. If they are planed off now they will let in most unpleasant draughts and dust later.

Perhaps no one thing about damp weather is more distressing than the condition it inflicts on the salt cellar. If the salt cellar or shakers are emptied after each meal and thoroughly dried in a warming oven, and refilled just before the next meal, the salt will still be moist and sticky when it is used. One of the hotels at the seashore where dampness is inevitable keeps inverted water glasses over the salt dishes. Of course it is a little bit inconvenient to lift up a glass whenever you wish to get a spoonful of salt, but the results do make for dryness. Grains of uncooked rice can be mixed with salt used in shakers with rather satisfactory results.

Probably the fact that there is much greater humidity in England than in this country in part accounts for the fact that open cellars are always used there and that "salt shakers" are regarded as a decided Americanism. The obvious advantage of shakers is that in them the salt is kept free from dust and contact with the air, but in times of dampness one is tempted to use the English cellars, from which salt may be taken by means of a salt spoon so much more easily than it can be shaken out when it has absorbed a good share of moisture.

THE CHEMISTRY OF A MAN.

A German investigator has recently calculated that 100 dozen eggs would hold all the chemical elements which would go to make up a man weighing 150 pounds. This does not mean that if you made an enormous omelet of these 1,200 eggs a man would be produced. It does mean that the elements in the eggs would be equal to the elements in this man.

If a person were to eat nothing except eggs he would get just the chemicals needed for supporting life, but the human system would not digest an excessive diet like this, and the person trying to live on eggs alone would soon sicken, and if the diet were not changed would die.

If an average man weighing a hundred and fifty pounds were reduced to a fluid he would yield 2,420 cubic feet of illuminating gas and hydrogen, sufficient to fill a balloon that would carry a hundred and fifty-five pounds.

If the normal human body were taken apart and all of the elements extracted from it there would be found enough iron to make seven large nails, enough fat for fourteen one pound candles, enough carbon to make the lead in sixty-five gross of pencils and phosphorus enough to tip 820,000 matches. Besides all this would be found twenty teaspoonfuls of salt, fifty lumps of sugar and thirty-eight quarts of water.

Thus it is evident that a human being is a great chemical factory and the value of a man in actual material is considerable.

The hundred dozen eggs would yield precisely the same quantities of these chemical elements and at the present high price of eggs most people would prefer to have the eggs rather than the man.

Montreal Man Tells Wonderful Story

BAD CASE OF BRIGHT'S DISEASE CURED BY DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

George Sullivan, Who Suffered From the Dread Disease for Two Years, Gives Credit for His Recovery to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Montreal, Que., March 22.—(Special)—Completely cured of that most dreaded of all diseases, Bright's Disease of the Kidneys, Mr. George Sullivan, 281 de St. Valliers street, this city, is spreading the good news that he found his cure in Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I suffered from Bright's Disease for two years," Mr. Sullivan states in an interview. "I was unable to work for weeks at a time. I spent hundreds of dollars on doctors without receiving any real benefit and received outdoor treatment at the Toronto General Hospital.

"I was feeling very badly discouraged when a friend advised me to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. After using three boxes I was much better. I kept on till I had used nine boxes, when I was completely cured.

"Naturally I consider Dodd's Kidney Pills a wonderful remedy."

Dodd's Kidney Pills are no cure-all. They cure kidney diseases of all kinds from backache to Bright's Disease. The proof of this is their growing popularity in Canada for over a quarter of a century. If you haven't used them ask your neighbor about them.

Siberia's Boom Town.

What the great Trans-Siberian Railway has done to develop the remote districts which it penetrates is strikingly shown in the story of the town of Novo Nikolaievsk, Siberia. When the rails of the Trans-Siberian reached the Ob River, the site of the town was a tangle of underbrush, with no signs of human habitation; now it is a modern city of 10,000 inhabitants, with electric lighting, large stone buildings, schools, a large town hall and a cathedral in the Byzantine style of architecture.

The reason for this rapid development is that Novo Nikolaievsk is situated at the intersection of the Trans-Siberian Railway and the River Ob, the great artery of communication for Western Siberia. Now that the Altai Railway has reached Bilsk, Barnaul and Semipalatinsk, much freight will go beyond Novo Nikolaievsk, but it is expected that the new city will make up for this loss by the cargoes that will be transhipped into vessels on the Ob for conveyance down the river to the projected railway from the Ob to the White Sea. Novo Nikolaievsk will thus become a "window into Europe," not only for the Altai region, but also for all Siberia tapped by the railway from the eastern boundary of the Tomsk government almost to Omsk.—New York Times.

TWO NEW V. C.'S.

Heroic Officers Win Highest Award for Bravery.

According to the London Gazette the King has been pleased to confer the Victoria Cross on the undermentioned officers:

CAPTAIN WILLIAM ANDERSON BLOOMFIELD, Scouts Corps, S. African Mtd. Bde.

For most conspicuous [illegible] Finding that, after being [illegible] in an advanced and isolated position the enemy were working round his flanks, Captain Bloomfield evacuated his wounded, and subsequently withdrew his command to a new position, he himself being amongst the last to retire.

On arrival at the new position he found that one of the wounded—No. 2475; Corporal D. M. P. Bowker—had been left behind. Owing to very heavy fire he experienced difficulties in having the wounded corporal brought in.

Rescue meant passing over some 400 yards of open ground, swept by heavy fire, in full view of the enemy. This task Captain Bloomfield determined to face himself, and, unmindful of personal danger, he succeeded in reaching Corporal Bowker and carrying him back, subjected throughout the double journey to heavy machine-gun and rifle fire.

This act showed the highest degree of valor and endurance.

TEMP. LIEUT. EUGENE PAUL BENNETT, Worcester Regiment.

For most conspicuous bravery in action when in command of the second wave of the attack. Finding that the first wave had suffered heavy casualties, its commander killed and the line wavering, Lieut. Bennett advanced at the head of the second wave, and by his personal example of valor and resolution reached his objective with but sixty men.

Isolated with his small party, he at once took steps to consolidate his position under heavy rifle and machine gun fire from both flanks, and though wounded he remained in command directing and controlling.

He set an example of cheerfulness and resolution beyond all praise, and there is little doubt that but for his personal example of courage, the attack would have been checked at the outset.

New Monarch Where Mahomet Once Ruled

(F. Cunliffe-Owen in N. Y. Sun.)

While most of the readers of the Sun are aware that Arabia has shaken off the oppressive rule of the Turks and that its princes, emirs and great tribal chieftains have proclaimed the Hedjaz as an independent monarchy, with the Grand Sheriff of Mecca, El Husein Ibn Ali, a scion of the dynasty founded by the prophet as their king, no mention has, so far as I am aware, been made in this country of the crowning sacrilege perpetrated by the Turks, which alienated from them the entire Moslem world and caused it to give its unquestioned spiritual allegiance to Husein as Caliph of Islam and to recognize him as temporal ruler of Arabia.

There is no holier place in all Islam than Mecca, the birthplace of Mahomet, while the Holy of Holies is the Ka'aba, which tradition asserts to have been the stone house in which Adam and Eve lived in paradise, in its wall being imbedded the famous Black Stone, probably a meteorite, alleged to have been given by the angel Gabriel to Abraham. To kiss this stone, to which the prophet ascribed divine origin, is regarded as sufficient to secure eternal salvation, and there are many fanatics each year who, after kissing the stone and gazing on the Ka'aba, deliberately blind themselves by staring fixedly at bricks glowing white with heat taken from a brazier near by, so that their sight may never again be contaminated by the spectacle of anything impure or profane.

Moslems from all quarters of the globe flock to Mecca in order to win for themselves blessings on earth and everlasting felicity in the Great Hereafter. One finds there great Indian rajahs and vassal rulers of portions of the British Empire, who have received a western and altogether enlightened education at English schools and who have won their degrees at Oxford and Cambridge; mandarins from China, where there is a large Moslem population; powerful khans from Central Asia, Persian nobles, multimillionaire Egyptian merchants, Central African sultans, princes and tribal chieftains from all along the northern coast of the Dark Continent. Moorish potentates, Tunisian beys and petty rulers from the Philippines and the Dutch East Indies, all consider it incumbent upon them to make, at least once in their life, a pilgrimage to Mecca, to press their lips to the Black Stone, to drink from the miraculous well from which Hagar drew water for her son Ismael when he was about to die of thirst and to wander round the Ka'aba the seven times prescribed by the founder of the faith.

In short, Mecca is to the Moslem—be he an illiterate black from Central Africa, an Oxford trained Indian prince, a Turkish or Persian physician who has won his degrees at the principal universities of Germany and France—the most holy thing in all the world; far more sacred to him and with a much stronger hold upon his religious sentiments than Bethlehem in the case of the Christians, or Jerusalem in that of the Jews.

This being the case, it may be imagined how great was the shock and the feeling of horror when in a proclamation issued last fall by the Hereditary Grand Sheriff of Mecca, the new King of Arabia, he announced to his coreligionists in every corner of the globe that the Turks, not content with falsifying the Koran and inserting in the Holy Books of Islam verses and precepts not contained in the originals, had actually rendered themselves guilty of the sacrilege of firing with their artillery upon the Ka'aba.

One shell struck the Ka'aba about a yard and a half above the Black Stone, which miraculously escaped injury, although the Ka'aba itself was damaged. Two other shells fell in the courtyard of the Mosque sufficiently near to cause the great carpet of embroidered tapestry, sent in state each year from Cairo to the ruler of Egypt for the covering of the Ka'aba, to burst into a blaze. Thousands of pilgrims, frenzied with horror and alarm, pressed forward to extinguish the flames, some being trampled to death and others fatally injured by the flames, and then in the midst of the crowd there fell more shells, killing many scores of devout worshippers.

No such profanation of the Moslem Holy of Holies had ever taken place before in all the history of Islam. There have been fights in and around Mecca, but the Mosque containing the Ka'aba and the Black Stone had always been treated with profound veneration by the rival combatants, and that the Ka'aba itself should have been shelled by the Turks, subject to the dictatorate of Enver Pasha, who professes a Teuton form of atheism, exasperated the people of Arabia to such a degree that, setting aside all petty differences and old standing feuds among themselves, they united in driving the Turks from the Hedjaz and proclaimed the Grand Sheriff as their King.

Husein, who thus unites in his person the temporal sovereignty of Arabia with the spiritual authority of Caliph, that is to say of Supreme Pontiff over the entire Moslem world, numbering between 200,000,000 and 300,000,000 souls, is an enlightened ruler, who inaugurated his election to the throne of the Hedjaz by despatching through his Secretary of State formal messages to the principal foreign Governments announcing the constitution of the Hedjaz as an independent state under his sway and requesting recognition. This was accorded to him in the fullest fashion by the powers of the Entente.

King Husein having found a place among the brotherhood of sovereign rulers of the Old World, some notes concerning this wonderful old man may prove of timely interest, the more so since little is known of him abroad.

Mecca in the past has always suggested savage fanaticism, the worst form of religious reaction and irreconcilable hostility toward everything foreign, modern, progressive and enlightened. It was declared that no Christian could ever pass through the gates of the city and live, and even European converts to Islam, such as the late Lord Stanley, of Alderley, and the present Lord Headley, were barred. This was the work of the Turks, who had every reason to prevent foreign Governments from getting into touch with the Grand Sheriff of Mecca, and for enveloping the holy cities of Mecca and of Medina with an impenetrable wall of mystery, similar to that which used to exist in the case of Lhassa, in Tibet. They sought to terrorize the Grand Sheriff as they had terrorized his predecessors, and to retain at all costs their hold upon him, upon the Caliphate which their Sultan had usurped, and upon the sacred places of Islam.

Emancipated from their tyranny Husein has succeeded already to a very marked degree in dispelling the popular delusions concerning himself and Mecca, delusions devised and fostered by the Sublime Porte for purposes of its own, and perhaps some idea of the man will be gathered from the fact that since Arabia has become independent the exquisite silver lamps, 200 in number, illuminating the interior of the great mosque at Mecca and the Ka'aba, are now lighted by electricity, in lieu of the oil which had been in use there for the past twelve or thirteen centuries.

Moreover, the king has taken the necessary steps to join the International Postal Union, and stamps printed by the postal authorities in Egypt to his order and bearing the inscription "Hedjaz Post," have already been received in Rome, in Paris and in London. The designs and inscriptions are wholly Arabic, and it is quite in keeping with the teachings of the Koran, which takes exception to portraits, that Husein should have refrained from putting his effigy on these stamps.

King Husein is about sixty-six years of age, of medium build and whitish complexion, with large, bright eyes and long gray beard. A white turban covers his head and he arrays himself in the flowing silk robes affected by the Ulemas of Egypt. He is very well versed in modern history, geography, geometry, astronomy and mathematics, and is regarded as the greatest authority in existence on the Shariat laws.

He occupies a fine house at Mecca of the native style of architecture, and receives his visitors in a large hall, the floor of which is covered with a magnificent carpet, while arranged around the walls are gilt armchairs, upholstered in white satin. Near to the entrance is a large armchair, on a dais raised about two feet from the floor, and there Husein takes his place when receiving people in state or dispensing justice. A punkah of white silk is suspended from the ceiling and is swayed backward and forward throughout the day by native punkah wallahs, thanks to which the air is always refreshingly cool, no matter how hot the temperature outside.

On each side of the entrance to the hall stands on guard a giant negro, carrying a lance ten feet long, with silver mounted revolvers and knives peeping forth from the gorgeous silk sash girdling his waist. To the right of the hall is a room in which sit a couple of military officers who attend to the immediate execution of the King's orders by guards quartered in a further room. To the left of the hall is the private bureau or study of the King, where he grants private audiences, usually in the evening. There he sits before an immense oak desk of magnificent Oriental workmanship, adorned with carvings in Persian of verses of the Koran.

King Husein is a very able and upright man, enjoying the profound respect of all who have had the opportunity of meeting him formerly at Constantinople. In particular he possesses the confidence of those immensely wealthy Moslems of India who are among the principal contributors to the maintenance of the holy places of Islam.

His three sons, all of them grown up, whose Western education has in no way impaired either their religious faith or the many admirable and noble qualities of the true blue Arab, have been acting as their father's principal lieutenants, not only in the war which he waged last year for the independence of Arabia but also in his still more arduous task of organizing the Government of the new kingdom, without exciting any ill will or jealousy by the manifestation of preference for one set of Emirs and tribal chieftains rather than for the others.

Husein spent no less than fifteen years in semi-captivity at Constantinople during the reign of ex-Sultan Abdul Hamid. While he was a prisoner in the sense that he was not permitted to leave the city, yet he was in daily contact with the people of the Yildiz Kiosque and with the members of the foreign embassies, and he met many distinguished foreigners, among them Lord Curzon, who conceived a very high opinion of his ability and character. In this way Husein became thoroughly alive to all the weaknesses and the rottenness of the Abdul Hamidian regime, as well as of those of the Young Turk party, which has controlled matters at Stamboul since the coup d'etat there of eleven years ago.

He was able to form his own impression of the manoeuvres of the German Embassy on the shores of the Bosporus, and thanks to his relations with the British Embassy, where he was held in particularly high regard, he learned to appreciate at their true value the advantages of the friendship of England, of that British Empire which has to-day nearly 120,000,000 Moslem lieges, who under the rule of King George enjoy perfect freedom of worship and who constitute the bulk of the contributors of the funds toward the maintenance of the holy places of Mecca and Medina, furnishing nine-tenths of the revenue of these two cities.

His break with Turkey came when in 1915 he resolutely declined on political and above all on doctrinal grounds to proclaim the Jehad, or holy war, against the powers of the Entente, and to yield in the matter to the dictation of the Sublime Porte and the Kaiser. It was his bold obstinacy in the matter which prevented the Jehad from becoming an accomplished fact, and caused all non-Turkish Moslems to refuse to take up arms in behalf of the Ottoman Sultan and of his friend and ally, Emperor William.

The Turks have always been hated in Arabia, where they have been, with good reason, looked upon as spoliators, tyrants and oppressors. Indeed, there has scarcely been a month during the past two centuries when one portion or another of the Arabian peninsula had not been in a state of insurrection against the Sublime Porte. It was only because the latter by dint of intrigues promoted feuds among the various great chieftains and tribes so as to prevent them from uniting against the Turkish Sultan that it was able to retain its hold upon the Hedjaz. As soon as Husein, as Grand Sheriff, counselled and encouraged by Lord Curzon, former Viceroy of India, and Lord Grey of Fallodon, had succeeded in compelling the various Emirs and chieftains and in forming a coalition financed and armed by the Moslems of India and Algeria, the rule of the Padishah in Arabia was doomed.

While it lasted this rule was vested in the hands of a Turkish Vali, or Governor-General. But the limits of his authority were never properly defined from the day when Sultan Selim annexed the Hedjaz to the Ottoman empire, until the time last year when the Turks were expelled from the peninsula. The rule of the Vali depended entirely upon the weakness or strength of the Grand Sheriff, and of his amenability to bribery and corruption.

Whenever he was a man of dishonest or vacillating character the authority of the Turkish Vali or Viceroy was in the ascendant. But when the ruler of the Holy Places was able and incorruptible the Governor General was greatly shorn of his power and prestige. This was the case with Grand Sheriff Husein, and that is why the Sublime Porte was taking steps for his removal when he precipitated matters by refusing to comply with the requests from Constantinople to proclaim from Mecca the holy war against the powers of the Entente.

As soon as this became known at Stamboul, Sultan Mehmed, by virtue of his usurped authority as Caliph, issued a decree deposing Husein from the office of Grand Sheriff of Mecca, and appointing in his stead a remote member of the same family, Ali Haidar, who had spent his entire life in Constantinople, and who, married to a renegade Englishwoman, included in his household an apostate Berlin professor as tutor of his sons. Ali Haidar, however, was never permitted to set foot in Arabia, and remains at Damascus, the authority of the Turkish Sultan to make as Caliph appointments to the Grand Sheriffate of Mecca being denied by all orthodox Moslems.

In olden times the right was enjoyed by the Fatimite Caliphs, so called through their descent from Fatima, the favorite daughter of the Prophet, and they were required to nominate to the Emirship of Mecca one of the Hassan line of the Prophet's family. The last of the Fatimite Caliphs passed away in Cairo in 1517, and some months previously had been compelled by the Turkish Sultan Selim, the conqueror of Egypt, to cede to him the right of succession to the dignity of Caliph of Islam, and to surrender to him the sacred Sandjak-i-Sherif, or historic banner of the Prophet.

That Sultan Selim's successors at Stamboul did not attach any importance to this alleged cession of the title and dignity of Caliph to him by the last Fatimite Caliph of Cairo is best shown by the fact that none of them dreamed of including it among their dignities until the beginning of the nineteenth century, when the right to do so was at once contested by all the leaders of Moslem orthodoxy, on the ground that the Koran, that is to say, the Khadessel Sheriff portions thereof, strictly and explicitly provide that the Caliph of Islam must be a lineal descendant of the Prophet, who founded the faith. None of the Ottoman Sultans fulfilled this requirement. In fact, they are descendants of a race and tribe that was at bitter war with Mohammed throughout his entire career.

The usurpation of the dignity of Caliph was revived by Sultan Abdul Hamid on the instigation of the Kaiser, and in pursuance of the Pan-Islamic movement which he inaugurated, and through which Emperor William expected to influence the entire Moslem world. Abdul Hamid even went so far as to cause the elimination from the copies of the Koran, published in Turkey, of those Khadessel Sheriff portions, which contained the inspired injunction regarding the Caliphate, a sacrilege which excited horror, even among the ecclesiastical authorities at Constantinople, and during his reign hundreds of Ulemas were banished for denouncing the indignity thus done to their holy book.

It was Lord Curzon who, as Under Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs, first became alive to this usurpation and its connection with the ambitious designs of Emperor William upon all that portion of Africa and Asia, more especially India, where Islam is dominant. Lord Curzon, by his travels in the Orient, was particularly well qualified to deal with the subject, and when afterward he became Viceroy of India and found how Sultan Abdul Hamid (prompted and influenced by the Kaiser) was endeavoring by means of his emissaries as Caliph to foment discontent among the Mohammedan lieges subject to English rule in India, and also enmity to England among the Mahommedan States beyond the borders of Hindustan, he devoted his attention to emphasizing the falsity of Abdul Hamid's claims to the Caliphate, and setting forth the rights thereto of that dynasty of the descendants of the Prophet in which the Grand Sheriffat of Mecca has always been vested.

This contention of his that through the extinction of the Fatimite line of Caliphs, at Cairo, the dignity of Caliph or Supreme Pontiff of Islam, had passed by virtue of Koranic law, to the Hashemite Grand Sheriffs of Mecca was indorsed by all the acknowledged leaders of Moslem orthodoxy in India, in Arabia, in northern Africa and at Cairo, where the ten century old El Azhar University stands in the same relation to Islam that the University of Oxford does to the Church of England, and it caused the British, and afterward the French, Government to give recognition to the Grand Sheriff as Caliph.

Shortly before the war, when Great Britain had occasion to entrust a Mohammedan chieftain with the administration of Koranic law in her African dependency of Zeilah, almost exclusively populated by Moslems, she addressed to the Grand Sheriff of Mecca a letter requesting him to give his approval to the appointment in his capacity as the lawful head and Caliph of Islam. The letter also contained an intimation that Great Britain was ready to assist him in securing the emancipation from Turkish despotism of all that portion of Arabia in which the holy cities of Mecca and Medina are situated, and to assure to him the possession of the immense contributions in money from Moslems in India, in Egypt, etc., which, whenever possible, had been misappropriated by the Turks, and the enjoyment of the offices of hereditary guardian of the holy places, and of Caliph of Islam, free from interference by the Turks or any other foreign Power. This may be said to have constituted the genesis of the new Kingdom of Arabia, and of the recognition of its ruler, the former Grand Sheriff Husein, as Caliph of Islam.

PRICES FOR LIVE STOCK=A REVIEW AND FORECAST

Prospects Are That Record Prices Will be Realized fo: Cattle, Sheep and Hogs During the Months of June and July—Don't Sell Now for Shipment During the Summer—Hold On to Your Stock.

The past year, 1916, has been a decidedly good year for live stock men, despite the high price of feed. Never before were such good prices obtained for all kinds of stock, and the prospects for the year 1917 are that prices will be even better and that all previous records will be broken. On account of the scarcity of feed and the difficulty of getting it shipped in because of lack of transportation facilities many farmers are wondering whether it will pay them better to sell now when the selling is good, or hold their cattle until the months of May, June, July and August, when prices are usually at their highest. It is the purpose of this article to try and answer this question.

Present prices for all kinds of stock on the Toronto market are record prices for this time of the year. Thus let us compare present prices for the third week in February with prices for the same week in previous years. At the present time choice steers are selling for $11, last year they were selling for only $8, while in the year 1910 they were selling for only $6.

Choice spring lambs at the present time are selling for $14.50, while during the same week in 1916 they were selling for $12.75, and in 1910 for $7.55. Hogs on the off car basis are selling for $14.65 at the present time, while last year they were bringing $10.25, and for the same week in 1910 they were selling for $8.50.

INCREASE IN EXPORTS.

On the average, prices for cattle are best during the summer months of May, June, July and August. Most men are busy with the crops during these months and receipts are light. This indicates that these months are the best to sell in. The end of July or the beginning of August is the ideal time to sell. The months of October and November are the worst months to sell, as most farmers are unloading them and prices are accordingly at their lowest ebb.

For sheep and lambs the very best months to sell are May, June and July. As with cattle the worst months to sell are October and November, but September is not a good month to sell either.

The market for hogs during the last three years has been rather erratic, but the best months on the average to sell are May, June, July and August. Chiefly on account of the war the export trade of Canada in beef, mutton and pork has increased enormously and is still going up. Thus during the year 1914 the year the war broke out, the amount of beef exported was 12,617,707 pounds, but during 1915 the amount of beef exported rose to 18,828,257 pounds. At the same time the amount of beef imported decreased. In 1914 6,204,842 pounds of beef were imported, whereas in 1915 only 2,082,488 pounds of beef were imported. On account of the high prices prevailing more cattle were sold in 1915 than in 1914. In 1914 the receipts of cattle at the Union Stock Yards were 262,121 head, but in the year 1915 there were 296,873 head shipped in.

In 1914 the amount of mutton exported was 65,167 pounds, whereas in the year 1915 the amount of mutton exported rose to 1,061,963 pounds. In 1915 moreover, the amount of mutton imported decreased by more than 2,000,000 pounds compared with that imported in 1914. In 1914 there were 177,940 head of sheep shipped into the Union Stock Yards, Toronto, whereas in the year 1915 there were 189,673 head of sheep shipped in.

The figures with regard to exports of bacon and pork are even more striking. During 1914 the exports amounted to 27,720,155 pounds, while during 1915 exports rose to 116,018,319 pounds. During 1914 imports were 19,215,273, while in 1915 they had fallen to 10,052,502. In 1914 receipts of hogs at the Union Stock Yards were 416,386, and in 1915 they were 423,976.

We have seen that prices for all kinds of live stock during 1915 and 1916 were good, but what of the future? What prices may we expect to get for our animals if we market them during the best months of the year? Of course it is impossible for anyone to say definitely what prices will be for choice steers say in July, but it is possible from a consideration of the chart to make a pretty good guess. Some farmers consider that choice steers will be selling for as high as $15 per hundredweight during the months of June and July. We believe this is within the bounds of possibility. The practice of many farmers in selling cattle in March for delivery in June or July is a poor one at any time but especially so this year. It is a safe gamble to keep them and sell them oneself at this time, as prospects point to prices being around $14 per hundredweight for the best animals.

In February, 1916, the average price for choice steers was $8, and the top price of the year, which was reached in July, was $10.75, the average for the month being $9.71. The average price for choice steers this February so far has been $11. If steers go up in the same proportion the top price around July should be $13.75, that is about $14.

In February, 1916, the average price for choice lambs was $12.50, and in July the top average price was reached at $14.50. The highest price for this month was $15. That is to say there was a difference of $2.50 between the average February price and the highest price paid in July. The average price of lambs this February so far has been $14.30, so that if we add $2.50 to this we get $16.80, which is the price choice lambs should be around July.

If hogs go up at the same rate during this year as they went up in 1916, we may expect them to be selling around $17 in August. In February, 1916 hogs were selling for $10 on the fed and watered basis. The top price was reached in August, when the highest price paid was $13. This February up to the present time the average price of hogs on the fed and watered basis has been $14.30, there was $3 difference in 1916 between the February and top August price, therefore the August price for hogs should be $17.30.

HEAVY SHIPMENTS OF CALVES.

More cattle, calves, sheep and hogs were sold on the Toronto market during the year 1915 than during the year 1914, and more animals of all classes were sold during the year 1916 than during the year 1915. The receipts of calves during 1916 were particularly heavy. This would indicate that less mature cattle will be sold during the year 1917. Moreover, during the past few months on account of the scarcity of feed and the fact that it could not in many cases be obtained at all, on account of lack of transportation facilities many farmers have sold their stock when otherwise they would have kept them until the spring or early summer.

We have seen that the tendency is for prices of all kinds of live stock to rise. There is a reason for this quite apart from the war. In 1910 in the whole Dominion of Canada there were 4,358,195 beef animals whereas in 1914 the number had dropped to about 3,363,531, that is, was a drop of about 1,000,000 during the four years. Prices in 1914 were about $2.00 better than they were in 1910, chiefly on account of the growing scarcity. In 1915 in Ontario there were only 965,606 head of beef animals as compared with 970,115 in 1914. If figures were available for 1916 we would see that there were less in this year than in 1915. What has been said about cattle regarding the growing scarcity is true also regarding the growing scarcity is true also regarding sheep and hogs. Quite regardless of the war, then, everything points to very high prices during the year.

We cannot neglect the great influence the war has had in increasing prices. From what has gone before it is certain that prices would have increased nearly as much as they have. We may expect prices to be well maintained for several years after the war. This is a war of extermination, and millions of men will be killed and more millions will be maimed for life before it is over. The best soldiers Germany and also the Allies have, are farmers and those who live in the country, and these are the first to be called upon and the ones who are given the most dangerous work, and are consequently the first to be killed. After the war as indeed there is now, there will be a great shortage of farm help in all the warring nations, including Canada. Agricultural production must therefore in the nature of things be greatly reduced after the war to what it was before the war. This means high prices for agricultural produce and high prices for live stock. It is estimated there has been a reduction in England and France and Germany of 33 per cent. in the number of hogs and sheep in these countries, although the number of cattle has shown no reduction. We have seen, however, what a reduction there has been in Canada in the number of cattle during the past six months.—The Canadian Countryman.

THE QUIET SECTOR

(Robert Herrick in Chicago Tribune.)

Paris—As I have said in a previous article Faverolle (please remember this is not the real name; the industrious intelligence department of the imperial government, which is our most faithful reader, might stir up trouble for my host, if I gave the right name, by causing an aviator to drop a few bombs on his house in the usual Kolossal manner)—Faverolle is considered a secteur de repos, to which troops that have had a more strenuous life elsewhere are brought for rest. After the Germans were driven back across the river in the autumn of 1914, they stuck fast in some old quarries on the hills, and the French stuck their heels into similar quarries, so that the line in this sector has practically not changed many feet for two years. For that very reason it presents some interesting and instructive features in the development of trench war, and also in the use of those old quarries for concealing men and cannon.

I do not approve of tourist parties to the trenches; it seems to me that the soldiers who are obliged to give their lives there have a right to resent the curiosity of civils, who come from time to time to see their misery and exclaim, piloted by immaculate young officers from the general staff. Nevertheless, when the colonel proposed taking me up into the advance lines of his sector I could not resist. I wanted to see how trench life close to the Germans had changed in the sixteen months since I visited the front about Verdun. So armed with several hundred cigarettes for the soldiers, I put on a blue steel casque, hung a gas mask and a pair of powerful glasses around my neck, and prepared for a long and tiresome hike through the mud.

Our path wound upwards from the little ruined village of F. along a road made by the engineers for the small railroad that serves this sector. Below us we could see the disemboweled village straggling along its one valley road, and in the distance the blue gray fields through which wound the river, still farther away the opposite hills from which came from time to time the report of a French gun. All about the hillside the soil had been crevassed and torn, destroying the little gardens and fruit patches which had previously covered the slopes. In a number of more sheltered corners were grouped the graves of dead soldiers, for this was one of the bloodier battle grounds of late September, '14.

On the way up we stopped to look at some of the many trench mortars that this war has developed. I have often wondered, in passing through the rooms of museums where old armor and guns are preserved, at the ingenuity of our ancestors in the matter of deadly weapons with which to kill one another, but this war will evenly hold the world record for murderous inventions. The equipment of any sector in the 300 miles of the western front reveals a prodigious assortment of mortars, howitzers, trench guns, bombs, machine guns, etc., etc. What else have the men and their officers to do in the many idle hours of "calm" days than to think up new contrivances for annoying the enemy? As these have been described over and over again and as they interest me but slightly I shall not mention them again.

There is really no longer any distinction between first and second lines of trenches, or rather the only distinction to the eye of the ignorant civilian is between large fields of organized defence. For instance, in this sector there is a mile and a half of highly organized trench ground between the chateau and the extreme advanced post opposite the Germans, in which are included subterranean forts, shelters for men and officers, several separate fields of barbed wire entanglements, and the like. It is really all the same, closely linked up by telephone, cross trenches, boyaus, etc. Then back of this field of defence, on the other side of the river, is another less developed field, and so on. (Thus may be realized the difficulty which the allies encounter on the Somme, and will without doubt meet for many miles back of the present "first line" when they resume their offensive presently.)

The last line before one comes to the famous "no man's land" is not a line at all, but an irregular checker board of trenches with spurs running out to observation and listening posts. It is more properly called a "firing line," and this sector was not meant to be held in case of bombardment; the men would withdraw to their caves in the old "second line," letting the enemy bang to pieces with his heavies the front trenches, and in this rear position are also positions for firing and machine gun emplacements. It is a warren, a maze, where in spite of frequent signs even the officers of the sector are likely to lose their way.

* * * *

We arrived at one of the large quarries on the top of the hill, which makes an admirable shelter for hundreds of soldiers. Great columns of masonry had been built under the stone vaults to support the roof against the heaviest bombardment, and here in the recesses of this primitive cave the men live and sleep when not engaged in work outside. They are lucky to have these old quarries to shelter themselves, for in spite of the "sweating" walls of soft sandstone they make fairly comfortable quarters. Filled with the dusky blue-coated men whose forms it was at first hard to recognize through the smoke of fires, the place reminded me of Wagner's cave for Mimi's men. They were eating or playing cards or moving about in that vague way that groups of soldiers always display, as if they were too uncomfortable to sit still for long. They are well fed, and receive many presents from home, some of which must be money from the amount which they spend at the regimental "co-operative" in the village, chiefly on wine and tobacco. But life in the cold, damp, dark cave must become, especially in winters, fearfully boresome to young men.

No less boresome must be the perpetual work to be done in rebuilding trench walls which have been battered down during the night or in executing new works, which, I fancy, are sometimes undertaken to keep the men from thinking too much about themselves. I came across several such working parties digging out caved in trenches that had been bombarded the night before. We had to crane our bodies and crawl over the light rail among the soldiers at the risk of getting shot by some stealthy German a few hundred feet away. This war, primitive in its caves, is also disgustingly like mine or sewer digging, a cruel lot of back-breaking, hard work.

* * * *

A third characteristic of this trench fighting is its Indian quality, which one finds when finally, after a lot of muddy walking, one gets down into the observation and listening posts where it is incumbent to whisper and not show your head if you don't want to receive some sort of missile from the German who has his eye at a hole seventy or eighty feet away from you. From one of the round steel boxes in which observers are placed you can peep across the raw, desolate, hideous intervening field on to the German trenches which are as silent as death—too silent. They struggle irregularly up and down the rolling fields and over the hills as far as your glasses permit you to see, just as the French lines from which you have come straggle. A few patches of stripped tree trunks may vary the landscape or a couple of marooned farm wagons in the little valley below, but there is always a desolate roofless gray village in their lines just as there is Faverolle and its like on the other.

The real "front" is always, wherever I have seen it, the most terrible commentary on human futility that can be found—desolation and waste. This is a "quiet sector"—it almost never gets into the communique's—nevertheless there are at any moment flying bombs, shells, bullets, and the steam riveter rattle of machine guns.

It is a quiet sector and yet every night parties of soldiers must go forth to crawl about in that desolate, waste strip between the lines, to listen and look and see what is going on "over there." At night some real activity starts in! This appeals well enough to the deviltry of the youngsters who man the front trenches—satisfies the Indian in every young man. It is a dangerous work, for the Germans are always abroad doing the same thing and almost constantly one side or the other sets off flares to see what is going on, when every movement must stop until the light dies down.

The colonel wanted to see some new machine gun position which involved a detour out to the shoulder of the hill where I had the usual thrill of bobbing up my head to take a hurried look at the enemy's nearest hole, which was about fifty feet off. And then we began the crooked descent into the valley where the ground is so soggy that neither side can make a move of any sort, so that it is given over to the care of some "territorials"—"good fathers of families" as the colonel described them. They looked rather sad, these good fathers of families, and I don't blame them; they might be safe down there in the valley, but they were very wet and uncomfortable, forced to live in huts dug in the trench walls.

And then we went back to the chateau through the park where the gathering winter twilight was broken by the exchange of shells over our head, the usual tea-time warming up of the artillery. Back on the hill down which we had just wound our way could be heard the cursed chatter of the machine guns. Somebody thought he saw something moving somewhere—that was all.

* * * *

It was a very quiet little sector, yet it gave me food for thought. How can the German Fritz be made to believe that he is fighting a "defensive war"—"saving the Fatherland" and all that? Why the hardy little Frenchman stick it out in the dirt, mud, filth, cold, discomfort and danger is evident enough! "They" are over there and the French soldiers will stick it out until "they" are "booted off" the land where "they" have no earthly business to be. The sentiment and the resolution that inspire the French are utterly reasonable, and command any one's respect, unless one has lost all sense of reality in pacifist palabra. To defend oneself from assassins and bandits that camp on your land it is natural and as honorable as to fire an impudent thief out of your room.

But for the German? It may be easy enough to convince a lot of schoolmasters in Berlin and Bavaria that you are fighting a holy war of self-defence when from the beginning your armies are camped on other people's territories, but how is the soldier at the front, who is doing the fighting, convinced? He knows what is obvious to any child's intelligence when one has been near the trenches that under modern conditions the defence is enormously strong, practically impregnable. If the Germans are convinced, as they seem to be, from the highest to the lowest, that the world is full of deceitful enemies, who want to take from them German land, why don't they wall themselves in by a good trench line and go about their business? Why didn't they in the summer of 1914, instead of upsetting the entire world with their holy war of self-defence? They would have quickly perceived that the rest of the world had no interest whatever in their precious Germany and they could have played at war within their trenches as long as they wished without doing the least harm.

Reverse the positions and put the French armies in trenches across the Rhine sixty or seventy miles from Berlin and not a French soldier would stick, no matter what his officers said to him about the necessity of defending the Fatherland. I can hear them talk—"Dis done! Tu parles! This MY patrie! Not by a thousand Sundays! I am going to demenager your camp this very minute good-bye, Fritz, and good luck to you! If you want to fight me, you will have to fight me nearer home". And off the poilus would steam as fast as they could make it to their own frontier.

Fritz must have a psychology all to himself to be so easily persuaded that for thirty months he has been defending his sacred rights to his own Fatherland. And there are many signs that at last Fritz is awaking to the cheap trick which his ambitious rulers have played on him, and rubbing his eyes is asking himself: "Well, what am I doing here?" Which may be why the kaiser feels so nobly about peace.

Deluding the Dog.

When forced to travel all night the Siberian natives make a practice of stopping just before sunrise and allowing their dogs to sleep.

They argue that if a dog goes to sleep while it is yet dark and wakes up in an hour and finds the sun shining he will suppose that he has had a full night's rest and will travel all day without thinking of being tired.—London Telegraph.

WAS WEAK and RUN DOWN

SUFFERED WITH "NERVES."

Many women become run down and worn out by their household cares and duties never ending, and sooner or later find themselves with shattered nerves and weak hearts.

When the heart becomes weak and the nerves unstrung it is impossible for a woman to look after her household or social duties.

On the first sign of any weakness of either the heart or nerves, take Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills, and you will find that in a very short time you will become strong and well again.

Mrs. J. A. Williams, Tillsonburg, Ont., writes: "I cannot speak too highly of Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills. I suffered greatly with my nerves. I was so weak and run down, I could not stand the least excitement of any kind. I believe your Heart and Nerve Pills to be a valuable remedy for all sufferers from nervous trouble."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

TORONTO.—Spring business is shaping up fairly well in most lines, and transportation presents a less acute problem than last month, although much is left to be desired in connection with shipments to points east of Toronto. Collections in some districts of the country are reported to be rather quiet, but city payments are up to normal. Failures are comparatively few for this season of the year. In drygoods lines business is stated to be better than last year. Hardware lines are seasonably active, with all goods advanced. Grocery lines are moderately active, with teas stronger, and with exports from Great Britain still cut off. Hides and leather markets are steady. With the attractions of advanced offerings of spring goods, retail trade is generally good.

MONTREAL.—Wholesale millinery openings were not quite as well attended as usual on account of uncertainties in the railway situation, but favorable results were reported by a majority of wholesalers. Drygoods travellers are sending in good orders for fall deliveries. Hardware prices have scored general advances, and the demand for iron and steel products shows no signs of diminution. The grocery trade is seasonably active, with a steady demand for fresh and canned fish, and with a pronounced scarcity of canned salmon. Collections in the country are good.

OTTAWA.—Spring trade is opening up fairly well, despite adverse weather conditions. Deliveries of spring goods are being completed and satisfactory orders are being received from travellers who are on the road with fall samples. Hardware and leather markets are firm.

HAMILTON.—Local industries continue to be very busy, with wholesale lines busy completing the shipment of spring goods and with retailers experiencing a seasonable trade. Drygoods lines are active, with general increases being shown over last year, although dress goods are behind. Hardware is active, with munition orders a source of much of the trade. General advances of shelf goods are reported. The grocery trade is moderately active, with a strong demand for fairly well even at the high prices. The tea market is stronger. Country trade is good, and fall orders from rural points indicate prosperous conditions. Collections are good.

LONDON.—The approach of spring finds wholesale and retail trade generally in a healthy condition. Drygoods lines are active, both wholesale and retail, with prospects good for an extensive distribution of goods during the spring months. Groceries are moderately active. Conditions throughout the western part of the province are good, and the farming community generally is looking forward to larger production.

WINNIPEG.—Retail trade is moderately satisfactory. Money is quite plentiful, and failures are relatively few for this season.

CALGARY.—Both retail and wholesale business in excess of the standard set for the corresponding period for previous years. Drygoods lines are quite active. Regina and Saskatoon reports are indicative of health conditions.

VANCOUVER—Mercantile business is broadening out with the beginning of the spring trade, and with all industries of the province in a healthy condition, the public is showing considerable purchasing ability.

Quebec—Trade conditions are much about the same as the preceding week, staples are in active demand. Builders' materials and hardware trades show activity. City retail trade is holding its own. Shoe manufacturers are well employed. Collections on the whole are very fairly satisfactory.

St. John—Collections fair; no important failures.

Start of the Omnibus.

The invention of omnibuses is due to the philosopher Pascal, who, in February, 1667, obtained a "privilege" or a patent for public carriages to travel through certain streets of Paris. They held eight passengers, who paid six sous each, and were very successful, although an act of parliament of Paris forbade them being used by lackeys, soldiers and other humble folk. Pascal died in 1667, and his useful invention did not long survive him. The omnibus reappeared in London about the beginning of the last century and was adopted in several French provincial towns before Paris accepted it again.

WHOOPING COUGH

The Infant's Most Dangerous Disease.

Whooping Cough, although specially a disease of childhood, is by no means confined to that period but may occur at any time of life. It is one of the most dangerous diseases of infancy, and yearly causes more deaths than scarlet fever, typhoid or diphtheria, and is more common in female than in male children.

Whooping Cough starts with sneezing, watering of the eyes, irritation of the throat, feverishness and cough. The coughing attacks occur frequently but are generally more severe at night.

On the first sign of a "whoop," Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup should be administered, and weeks of suffering prevented, as it helps to clear the bronchial tubes of the collected mucous and phlegm.

Mrs. Nellie Barley, Amherst, N.S., writes: "I have much pleasure in saying that there is no cough syrup like Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. My little girl took whooping cough from a little girl who has since died with it. I tried lots of things but found 'Dr. Wood's' to give the greatest relief. It helped her to raise the phlegm, and she is now better. My young brother is also taking the cough and I am getting 'Dr. Wood's' to work again."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; 3 pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c. Refuse substitutes.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

Owen Sound council has introduced a snow by-law, by which the town assumes responsibility for cleaning the snow from the sidewalks all over the town, and in seeing they are properly sanded.

A FARMER who "sees both sides" remarked, when renewing his subscription to the Markdale Standard, "The Standard is cheaper than formerly." "How so?" said the editor. "I remember well," said he, "when it took two bags of potatoes to pay for the paper a year; now I get it for one bushel, and get half a dollar to boot." And he was right.

The Good Roads proposition offered by the Govern't to the Counties is being improved by a provision that the Government will pay 60 per cent of the cost of maintenance of a trunk line through any county that will link up with the Provincial Highway System. This is a big increase over the present subsidy paid by the government. It is now up to the County Council to get busy on a trunk scheme which will link Bruce up with the outside world and get us back some of the money that Bruce folks have been paying the Government for auto licenses year after year.

THE Prison Farm at Guelph was built at a cost of about 1½ million dollars and has had as many as 350 prisoners. The inmates were taught trades and the object of the Prison Farm was to turn out useful citizens and while those released on parole were under surveillance they were practically free. Since the advent of the Ontario Temperance Act there have been so few prisoners sent to the big industrial farm at Guelph that it has been decided to use this costly Public building as a home for returned soldiers, the balance of the prisoners being sent to Burwash Farm in New Ontario. More evidence of what Prohibition is doing for Ontario.

OUR WESTERN LETTER

Written for the Telescope
By an Old Bruce Boy.

Our local hog buyers say the heathen Chinee may know a few tricks but so do our brethren who have come in from across the border. They also maintain that farmers settled here from other sections are apt pupils. Their present complaint is the feeding of coal to hogs. This little game they claim was inaugurated by certain arrivals from the U. S. A. and is, they say now, altogether too frequent. The farmer who has to buy coal knows that if he has hogs running at large he doesn't want to leave his coal at large also or he wont have much left for his furnace or fire. With pork at $14 and up per cwt. live weight and coal at $5.90 a ton it looks good business to let the hogs have a full feed of fuel just before hauling. When it is further understood that this coal feed has a very constipating effect the thrifty farmer will realize that even on a twenty-five mile haul he has the minimum shrinkage. It may therefore be safely said that the coal feeding farmer gets it both coming and going.

There seems to be a decided opinion among farmers here that grain in the bin is worth more than the same grain delivered at the elevator. We have several neighbors who grow grain to sell having no stock. They have some fifteen miles to draw it to the nearest R. R. station. I tried to buy some but could only get it at an advance of ten cents a bu. on market price. As I was going to town with hogs I got my grain at the elevator for seven cents a bushel less than I could buy at home. Then was the peculiar sight of one farmer drawing away grain to sell and his neighbour drawing it into feed. Speaking of it to farmers in town I find the practice seems general. I heard of one farmer living some eight miles from town who wished to buy some frozen wheat from a neighbour but "nothing doing" under an advance of twenty cents on elevator price. When the neighbour drew in his grain the farmer followed him to the elevator gave the elevator man two cents a bushel for handling the grain, and it was transferred from one sleigh to the other. The farmer made good wages as he saved $18 on every 100 bushels and the neighbour had a 16 mile round trip for nothing.

Mr. Sidney Johnson has been engaged with Mr. James Needham for this year,

We regret to report Mrs. W. J. Graham is very ill. All hope for her recovery.

Mrs. Murdock McKay has returned home from visiting Cargill friends.

Mr. Malcolm McLean, 2nd Con. Bruce, has returned to Alberta. He was accompanied by his brother, Kenneth as far as Toronto.

A number from here attended "Peter McArthur's" Lecture in Tiverton on Friday evening. All report a fine treat.

Nurse, Miss McKay of Chesley, returned to Paisley on Thursday.

Miss Laura Wilson has returned home from Paisley.

Mrs. Geo. Colwell of the 9th Con. Kincardine, is spending a few days with her daughter, Mrs. J. D. Robertson.

Mr. Fiddis of Elmwood was a Sunday visitor in the vicinity.

A gloom was cast over the village and surrounding country last Tuesday morning, when a telegram was received of the death of Miss Beth McKay, age 18 years, 11 months, youngest daughter of Mr. John L. McKay of Port Arthur, who passed away on Monday, March 12, 1917, at St. Joseph Hospital Port Arthur after a lingering illness from blood poisoning. About five months ago she took ill-health but her condition was not considered serious, until about six weeks ago she became worse and was removed from her home to the Hospital. All that medical skill and loving hands could do was done for her, but proved of no avail. They could not save her from the relentless hand of Death. During all her illness and sufferings she never complained, was always happy and bright, and it was here her grand christian character was exemplified to those about her. The deceased was born here in April 1898, and in October 1913 moved with her father, brothers, and sisters to Port Arthur, where she has since resided. Her mother predeceased her 10 years ago on the same day and month as she was called away. Beth was one of an affectionate disposition, bright and winning in her ways, but she was loved not only by her family circle but by a large circle of friends and acquaintances, wherever known. The many beautiful floral tributes which were placed on the casket showed the love and sympathy of her many friends. On Tuesday morning a service was held at the home of her sister Mrs. H. H. Mathews of Port Arthur. After a short service the remains were removed to the station and brought East to Pinkerton Station arriving Thursday noon accompanied by her father and sister, Miss Annie. Interment was made at Purdy's Cemetery. A short service was conducted by Mr. McCauley, pastor Baptist Church, Glamis, at Purdy's Church. The pall bearers were: Messrs Duncan McLennan, Hector McLean, George Percy, Murdock Thompson, Jack McKeeman, and Allan McKinnon. She leaves to mourn her departure a loving father, two sisters and three brothers. Hector of Regina, Capt. Wilfred L. and Pte. Douglas (who is her twin brother) of 160th, Bruce Batt. now in England, and Miss Annie of Port Arthur. To these go out the deepest heartfelt sympathy of a host of friends in these hours of deep affliction and bereavement.

One precious to our heart is gone,
The voice we loved is still.
The place made vacant in our home
Can never more be filled.
Let us be patient, these severe affliction
Not from the ground arise,
But oftimes celestial benedictions
Assume this dark disguise.

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" Brought The Joy Of Health After Two Years' Suffering

MADAM LAPLANTE

35 St. Rose St., Montreal. April 4th.

"For over two years I was sick and miserable. I suffered from constant Headaches, and had Palpitation of the Heart so badly that I feared I would die. There seemed to be a lump in my stomach and the Constipation was dreadful. I suffered from Pain in the Back and Kidney Disease.

I was treated by a physician for a year and a half and he did me no good at all, I tried "Fruit-a-tives" as a last resort. After using three boxes, I was greatly improved and twelve boxes made me well. Now I can work all day and there are no Headaches, no Palpitation, no Heart Trouble, no Constipation, no Pain or Kidney Trouble and I feel like a new being—and it was "Fruit-a-tives" that gave me back my health".

YOU CAN SERVE by Fighting—Working—Saving—Giving

This is NATIONAL SERVICE
Are YOU doing your part?

ALL EYES turn now to the Canadian Farmer, for he can render the Empire SPECIAL SERVICE in this sternest year of the war.

But—our farms are badly undermanned—25,000 men are needed on the land.

With insufficient help, the Man on the Land fights an uphill fight to meet the pressing need for Food.

CITY and TOWN can help.

Municipal Councils, Churches and Schools, and other organizations, both of men and women, can render National Service by directing all available labour to the Land.

Farmers themselves can exchange labour. School boys can assist.

Were you raised on a farm? Can you drive a team? Can you handle fork or hoe? If you can't fight, you can produce. Spend the Summer working on the Farm.

Let every man, woman and child in the Dominion who has access to Land, no matter how small the plot, make it produce Food in 1917.

The Hydro Electric Power Plant at Eugenia Falls to which Walkerton will Probably be Linked Up Under Hydro.

(1) The Power House and Flume Down the Mountain Side. (2) The Big Dam with Concrete Wall. (3) Shows the Type of Construction and Magnitude of the Wall.

BIG EUGENIA POWER PLANT TO WHICH WALKERTON MAY BE HITCHED UNDER HYDRO

The photographs at the top of this page are views taken at the big power plant at Eugenia Falls, with which the Hydro Electric Power Commission is planning to link up Walkerton and other towns in Bruce. The Eugenia Plant which provides power for 26 municipalities in this district has the highest head of power development (510 ft.) in the whole Dominion. The construction comprises one great concrete dam 60 feet high and over half a mile long, and four other dams of earth filling. The total cost was $1,075,000.

About 4,000 h. p. was the initial capacity of the plant but this can be greatly increased. The pipe line runs along the hill for a distance of over a mile to a surge tank 105 feet high and then a steel conduit as seen to the extreme left of the picture carries the flow of water to the power house. The pipe is 46 inches in diameter and has a fall of 454 feet. The dams flood over 1700 acres and in places the place the water is 60 feet deep. The pressure on the pipe is 260 lbs. to the square inch. The force required for this may be estimated when one considers that ordinary water works pressure is only 75 lbs. to the square inch. Cement anchors are placed at various points on the pipeline to hold it in position against the tremendous pressure.

The Engineers who have harnessed this comparatively small body of water so that it provides light, heat, and power for thousands of people throughout this whole northern section have certainly performed a feat to marvel at.

The Eugenia System started with 7 municipalities. The number has since been increased to 19, as follows — Alton, Arthur, Artemesia Twp. Chatsworth, Chesley, Dundalk, Durham, Elmwood, Flesherton, Grand Valley, Hanover, Holstein, Hepworth's Mills, Markdale, Mount Forest, Orangeville, Owen Sound, Shelburne, Tara.

POETS' CORNER

DOWN ON THE FARM

How dear to our hearts was the old horse and cutter,
The old horse and cutter we knew
  long ago:
We would get them both out with the first snowflakes flutter,
And keep them both going six hours or so.
The old-fashioned pair—how we'd grumble and mutter
When the wood pile was white and the north wind was raw:
For the horse was a saw-horse, and as for the cutter—
It was only an old-fashioned, creaky bucksaw.

How Pat Felt

After the battle of Mons an officer congratulated an Irishman on his conspicuous bravery under fire. "Well, Pat" he said, "how did you feel during the engagement?" "Feel, Captain"? answered Pat "I felt as if every hair on me head was a band of music and they were all playing Home Sweet Home."

MAY BE RIGHT

A priest one Sunday was showing off his class and proceeded to ask one little boy in the presence of the archbishop: What is matrimony?"

The little boy's eyes bulged out at the suddenness with which the question was put, and then he said mechanically: Matrimony is a state of punishment to which some souls are condemned to suffer for a while before they are considered good enough for Heaven."

"Tut, tut," said the priest, "that is the definition of purgatory."

"Let him alone," said the Archbishop. "He may be right—what do you know about it, anyway?"

Ripened A Week Earlier

"I fertilized with Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer purchased from Mr. Fred Howe, Dorchester Sta. Ontario, seven acres oats this Spring. At intervals in the field I omitted the Fertilizer a drill width. The oats where the fertilizer was sown, after the first few days' growth showed in a marked degree a more vigorous growth and maintained this advantage over the unfertilized portions throughout the season, ripening a week sooner and with fuller heads of grain."

Ripened 10 Days Earlier

THOMAS KELLY, Copenhagen, Ontario, says:

"I have used Homestead fertilizer on both corn and oats, and am well satisfied; the corn eared up better and ripened about ten days earlier where the fertilizer was used; it also gave a larger yield both in corn and straw."

Better Than Manure

EDWARD WOOD, Ethel, Ontario, says:

"I tested Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on oats, corn and potatoes. The results were beyond my expectations. My corn was better on the fertilized part of the field than on the other part where I put 12 loads of manure spreader, 40 bushels per load. I highly recommend the use of your high grade fertilizer."

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export. It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

"A vegetable garden for every home"

Nothing should be overlooked in this vital year of the war. The Department earnestly invites everyone to help increase production by growing vegetables. Even the smallest plot of ground, when properly cultivated, produces a surprising amount of vegetables. Experience is not essential.

On request the Department of Agriculture will send valuable literature, free of charge, giving complete directions for preparing soil, planting, cultivation, etc. A plan of a vegetable garden, indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free to any address.

Giant Flowering Carnation

This carnation is a great favorite; the flowers are large and fragrant and the plants do well outdoors. Transplanted into pots in the early fall they bloom profusely from October till the end of May. Extra plants are easily propagated from them by cuttings, "pipings" or layering.

Send for our catalogue and learn of our other valuable premiums. 16

A PUZZLING CASE

He was much downcast, as was only natural, as he saw himself environed on all sides by perils, and his enemies being unknown he did not know where they would strike next. His liberty was already gone, so perhaps he would lose his life next; for if it were proved that he had thrown the fatal bouquet, no denial on his part would hold good against such damnatory evidence. The worst of it was that he could do nothing but point, as, saving Phillis & Co., he had no witnesses to prove that the bouquet he had thrown was a harmless one.

The only hope I had of saving him was in finding out who had denounced him to the police, and then, searching into that person's past life, as whoever knew that the bouquet contained a black carnation must undoubtedly know who had committed the crime—and may perhaps himself have been the person who had changed the bouquets and thus indirectly killed Mazzucata.

With Gilbert's consent, I engaged a good firm of solicitors to take up his defence, and they in their turn gave the affair into the hands of Mark Tancred, a rising young barrister, who had already distinguished himself greatly in criminal cases. Tancred heard all that was to be said on the subject and shook his head doubtfully over the matter.

"I'm afraid he'll be committed for trial," he said at length, "as he has at present no defence. Before the trial comes off, however, we must go to work and find out the real assassin."

"It seems impossible."

"At present it does. But reflect, Major Granby. Here is a Black Carnation—there is a gallows—a chain runs between these two, but after hearing all you have told me, I am sure that Sir Gilbert won't be bound by that chain. No; we will do our best now, but if Tressinger is committed for trial, then we must go to work in earnest."

"Yes, but the first step?"

"Will be to find the garden which contains the Black Carnation."

It seemed but a slender hope, still this conversation cheered my heart and also that of Gilbert, to whom I repeated it, so when the day of the preliminary examination came off, both of us were much more hopeful regarding the final outcome of the case than we had hitherto been.

Nowadays a criminal case is looked upon by the public in much the same light as a successful play, with this difference, that while the last is fictitious, the first is real, and attracts an audience for the same reason as did the gladiatorial shows of ancient Rome. What representation of the stage can compare with a drama of real life, in which the ideal villain is supplanted by an actual murderer, who is being tried for his crime, and who will perchance suffer the extreme penalty of the law. In the Roman circus, the ideal Orpheus was actually torn to pieces by the beasts; in the English law courts, the real murderer is fighting inch by inch for his life. You say that the thirst for blood has died out in these latter days, that the refined population of the nineteenth century shudders at the idea of gloating over the death-agonies of a fellow-creature. Pshaw! I tell you it is not so. We have simply transferred the drama of blood from circus to law courts, and substituted worrying lawyers for wild beasts, but the principal actor is the same now as then—a man fighting for his life.

To this realistic drama, therefore came the jaded Londoners, to see Gilbert's struggle with the octopus of the law, which would, if it could, squeeze him to death. From Belgravia came refined ladies, his intimate friends, who would not kill a fly; from St. James' street came those who had shaken hands with him a week previous, but would not do so now, despite their protestations that they believed him innocent; from the city came opulent stockbrokers, eager for a new sensation; from the Strand came actors, actresses and singers, to see the man who—they thought—had killed a sister of their craft; all these various people crowded the narrow precincts of the court, to stare at the pale young fellow who stood in the dock with a terrible charge hanging over his head.

Outside the court thronged Whitechapel roughs; slatternly women from the purlieus of Drury Lane; drunkards torn for the nonce from their beloved tap rooms by a stronger attraction than that of drink; and all the idle vagabond population of the town who have nothing better to do. All these discussed the case without, as the more refined portion of humanity stared at the prisoner within, and the opinions of both leaned in the direction of guilt, condemnation, of hanging.

When the principal witness for the prosecution appeared, I was astonished, for it was a woman; when she threw back her veil, I was stunned—it was Ilma Celinski. Yes, the woman who professed to love Tressinger, who had gone to Curzon street to warn him, was the chief witness against him, and on her evidence hung the balance of his fate; liberty or prison, guilt or innocence, life or death. I was thunderstruck when she appeared, and glanced towards Gilbert, who was evidently as much amazed as myself.

"What does it mean?" I whispered to Tancred, by whom I was seated.

"I think I know," he replied, in the same tone, "but I shall be more certain when I hear her evidence."

She was a handsome woman, in a bold insolent way, with large black eyes, black hair and a voluptuous red mouth, speaking excellent English, with a slight foreign accent, which added piquancy to her speech. She gave her evidence in a cool and collected manner, but I noticed that all the time she kept her eyes on the lawyers, and never once glanced in the direction of the reproachful face of the prisoner. Tancred noticed this also, and I saw him imperceptibly smile as he wrote something on a scrap of paper and passed it on to me. I glanced at it and read as follows:

"I thought I knew, now I do know."

What did he know. I was puzzled to answer; but without doubt Tancred, learned in the subtleties of the law, had discovered some clue which had hitherto escaped my less experienced wits. I should have liked to ask for an explanation, but at this moment Ilma Celinski began to give her evidence, of which I here give a condensed report.

"My name is Ilma Celinski. I was born in Warsaw, and am a Pole by nationality. For the last four years I have been lady's maid to Madame Mazzucata, and was with her on the night of her death. She was a very good mistress to me, and I was more her companion than her servant, being quite in her confidence. I know nothing about her past life before she became a singer, as she was very reticent on that point."

Here, the witness gave many unimportant details which did not apply to the case, and afterwards proceeded as follows:

"In Italy some eighteen months ago madame was much in love with a M. Dallas, who desired to marry her. As he wished her to give up the stage she refused to do so at first, but ultimately promised to marry him when he returned from the East, where he was then going. When M. Dallas left, madame went to fulfil an engagement at Vienna; afterwards, in course of time, she came to Paris, and there met with Sir Gilbert, who was much in love with her. He also wished to marry her, but madame, mindful of her promise to M. Dallas, refused to marry him."

I saw Gilbert start at this last piece of evidence, and with an indignant flush on his face would have spoken, but that Tancred made a sign to him to remain silent.

"Sir Gilbert," resumed the witness, "was so much enamoured of madame that he said he would sooner see her dead than married to M. Dallas, at which remark madame laughed, treating it as a joke. When madame came to England, just before the beginning of the opera season, she received a letter from M. Dallas saying he was returning to London to marry her, and Sir Gilbert, finding this out, had a violent scene with madame, which enraged her very much, and she forbade him to come near her."

"What falsehoods," cried the prisoner, upon which the witness stood erect.

"Silence," said the magistrate severely, "you must not interrupt the witness."

Gilbert would have spoken again in spite of this order, when Tancred hurriedly arose from his seat and crossed over to the dock.

"Be silent," he whispered, eagerly, "let her go on. All this lying evidence means more than you think."

Ilma Celinski, at this point, without displaying any emotion, resumed her evidence.

"Madame was a very practical woman, but had one superstition connected with a black carnation. She often told me that she would die a violent death, and that she would receive a warning in the shape of a black carnation. After Sir Gilbert had been forbidden the house, she received a black carnation." (Sensation.)

Counsel for the prosecution—From Sir Gilbert?

Witness—I do not know.

Counsel—Was Sir Gilbert aware of Madame Mazzucata's superstition regarding the black carnation?

Witness—Yes, she had often talked about it to him.

Counsel—When she received this token, did she make any remark?

Witness—She cried out "Gilbert!" (Sensation.)

Counsel—Meaning, I presume, that the prisoner had sent the flower?

Witness—That was my belief, but she refused to say anything more.

Counsel—And what did she do with the flower?

Witness—She placed it in a glass of water on the table, and said to me, "I have my death before me."

Counsel—When did all this take place?

Witness—About four days before the first night of the opera, just after madame arrived in England.

Counsel—Had Sir Gilbert then been forbidden the house?

Witness—Yes; the black carnation arrived just after the quarrel between madame and Sir Gilbert about the letter of Mr. Dallas, when he went away, saying he would sooner see her dead than married to Dallas.

I was near Gilbert and overheard him murmur to himself, "My God! what falsehood. What does it mean?"

"On the first night of the opera," resumed Ilma, calmly, "which was the night upon which madame was killed, Sir Gilbert came to the hotel. After madame had forbidden him to see her he had gone to Paris, but on the previous day he had returned, and wrote to her asking her to see him."

The letter produced and read in court was as follows:

"Curzon Street, May 15, 1890.
Dear Madame:

"I must see you. If not, it will be the worse for you. I know all about Dallas; he comes back to-morrow. What of the black carnation?

"Yours in haste,
"G. T."

The reading of this curt note produced a profound sensation, and seemed to many to confirm the guilt of the unhappy young man, as it contained a distinct threat, an allusion to the Black Carnation, and the name of Dallas. I own, my belief in Gilbert's innocence was for the moment shaken, but when I glanced at him, and saw how open was his look, how calm his demeanor, I repented of even the momentary treachery to my friend. As for Tancred, he merely smiled when the letter was read, and looked steadily at Ilma, who, catching his penetrating gaze, looked considerably discomposed. In a short time, however, she recovered her nerve, and went on calmly with her evidence.

"On receiving this note, madame was much agitated, and wrote to Sir Gilbert, saying he could come the next night before she went to the theatre. He came just after she went, and I was left behind to look after some things which I was to take to the theatre later on. I saw Gilbert in the sitting-room—he had a large bouquet of white flowers with a dark one in the centre, and said he wished to give them to madame. I said madame had gone, but if he would give me the flowers, I would take them to the dressing-room at the theatre when I went down. He refused to let me do this, and said he would let no one but madame take the flowers, as they were meant especially for her."

A thrill of horror ran through the court at this last speech, for all present firmly believed that this was the fatal bouquet and this piece of evidence regarding Gilbert's refusal to give them to anyone but the dead woman was regarded as an additional sign of guilt.

"I had to go into the next room," continued the witness after a pause, "and as I went I heard Sir Gilbert murmur, 'I must let her know it comes from me.' The door of the next room—a bed-room—was open, and there was a mirror on the opposite wall which gave a partial view of the sitting-room. While looking in this, I saw Sir Gilbert take the Black Carnation out of the glass on the table and place it in the bouquet. When I came back to the sitting-room he was gone."

This evidence was dead against the prisoner, as all present knew that the fatal bouquet had contained a Black Carnation, and this then was the mode in which it was obtained. Ilma then took a drink of water and went on weaving the rope she desired to put round the neck of the prisoner.

"When I got to the theatre, I told madame all about Sir Gilbert's visit and the Black Carnation. She said to me that she did not care for that night at least, as he could not hurt her on the stage. During the opera I was down each act at the side wings in accordance with madame's instructions. When she was given the bouquet after the third act, by M. Ivan I heard her say, and knew that the bouquet she held contained the Black Carnation. After that, the explosion took place, and the bouquet was blown to pieces, but afterwards, I went on to the stage and I found this."

"This" proved to be a faded Black Carnation, which was handed up to the Magistrate and examined by him with considerable curiosity. Afterwards, Ilma Celinski stepped down from the witness box and left the court, having given evidence enough to have hanged a dozen men, let alone one. At least, such was my humble opinion, but not Tancred's.

"What do you think now?" I asked, bending over to him.

"I think I've got a clue to the assassin," he answered in a whisper. "Hush, I'll tell you all when the case is over."

There were several other witnesses, but their evidence was comparatively unimportant, saving that of Signor Ivan, who deposed having handed to Mazzucata a bouquet of white flowers, with a dark one in the centre.

When all the evidence for the prosecution was ended, Tancred walked over to Gilbert, and had a short conversation with him, the upshot of which was, that the prisoner reserved his defence.

The speech of the Magistrate was dead against Gilbert, as indeed was the weight of public opinion, and he was duly committed for trial at the next Bailey sessions. After this, he was removed in custody, bail being refused, though several of his friends, myself included, offered security. The court gradually emptied of its throng, all discussing the case eagerly, and the reporters, who had been taking notes, hurried off to their different offices. I went with Tancred to see my poor friend, but only the lawyer was admitted and I was left to cool my heels outside, which treatment I resented very much, indeed.

As it was I had plenty to think about, and had just come to the conclusion that things looked very black for Gilbert, when Tancred came out again with a cheerful smile on his face. I must say that the smile rather disgusted me, considering the position of our friend, but lawyers have no hearts, and would hang their own fathers for six and eight pence. Perhaps this is a strong expression, but I have some money in Chancery which I cannot get out, so that will doubtless explain why I am so severe on the brethren of the long robe.

"Well," said I to Tancred, in an annoyed tone, "what are you rubbing your hands together for?"

"Because I see a gleam of light," he answered, gayly, as we took our seats in a hansom.

"It's more than I do."

"What, did you not hear the evidence of Ilma Celinski?"

"Yes, but that seemed to me to be bad for Tressinger."

"Not a bit of it," answered Tancred quickly; "why, it is the best thing that could have happened. I can see through their little game."

"Whose little game?"

"Mademoiselle Celinski's and her friend."

"And her friend?" I echoed, in surprise. "Who is her friend?"

"That is exactly what I want to find out," he said, dryly, "all that evidence she gave was not her own invention, but that of a man of whose name at present I am ignorant."

"And this man is the assassin?"

"Yes, I believe he is."

"What does Tressinger say?"

"He says nothing, because he is quite bewildered by the lies of the little viper."

"I don't wonder at that," said I, sourly, "he thought she loved him."

"Bah!" cried Tancred, with derision "she doesn't love him a bit—but she does the other man."

"You have no idea who the other man can be?"

"No, but I'll know to-morrow after I have seen my client again."

"Tancred," I remarked, after a pause, "I think I can tell you the name of the other man."

"The deuce you can?"

"Dallas. Lawrence Dallas."

Tancred whistled thoughtfully, but made no reply.

Colored Snowstorms.

Colored snowstorms were recorded as long ago as the sixth century, and a shower of red hail is said by Humboldt to have once occurred in Palermo. In Tuscany on March 14, 1813, were red hail of an orange color. In 1808 red snow fell to a depth of over five feet in Carniola, Austria. The storm of colored snow was followed by one of the regulation color, and the effect produced by the separate layers of red and white, which were perfectly distinct, was very peculiar. A portion of the scarlet snow was melted in a vessel and the water evaporated, when a fine, rose colored earthy sediment was found at the bottom. Snow of a brick red hue fell in Italy in 1816 and in the Tyrol in 1842. In the first volume of Kane's "Arctic Exploration" it is stated that when the ship passed the "Crimson Cliffs of Sir John Ross" the patches of red snow, from which they derived their name, could be seen at a distance of fully ten miles.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON XII. March 25, 1917

Jesus, the Way, the Truth and the Life—Review.—John 14: 1-11.

(A reading lesson only.)

SUMMARY.—Lesson I. Topic: God revealed to humanity. Place: Christ was born in Bethlehem. John's opening statement is that Jesus, the Word, was in the beginning with God and that he created all things. John the Baptist came to prepare the way for Christ's coming. Jesus came as the Light of the world, but most of the Jews, to whom he came, rejected him. However, some believed on him and became the sons of God. The Word came in the form of man. Jesus came clothed in the garments of flesh, and was subject to death.

II. Topic: Witness-bearing. Place, Bethabara, on the east bank of the Jordan. While John the Baptist was preaching and baptizing in the wilderness, the Jews sent priests and Levites from Jerusalem to him that they might learn who he was. He declared that he was the voice crying in the wilderness to prepare the way for the Messiah. He was not the Christ. Jesus came where he was and he told the people to "behold the Lamb of God."

III. Topic: Finding the Christ. Place: Bethabara. John the Baptist said to two of his disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God!" One of the two was Andrew and the other was probably John. They became Christ's first disciples. Andrew brought his brother Peter to Jesus, and probably John brought his brother James. The next day Jesus started for Galilee. He called Philip to be his disciple and he followed Jesus. Philip found Nathaniel and brought him to Jesus. He also became his disciple. He had been a true Israelite and he became a faithful follower of Jesus of Nazareth.

IV. Topic: Christ's defence. Place: Jerusalem. A few months after Jesus began his public ministry, he attended the feast of the Passover in Jerusalem. He saw the traders in the temple and drove them out, for it was wrong to make the house of God a house of merchandise. The Jews asked for a sign of his authority. He said: "Destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up." He referred to the temple of his body, prophesying his death and resurrection.

V. Topic: The great teacher. Place: Jerusalem. A prominent Jew, Nicodemus, came to Jesus, to talk with him. Jesus told him that one must be born again in order to enter the kingdom of heaven. He could not grasp the thought, and Jesus illustrated the birth by the Spirit by the wind. He told Nicodemus that the Son of man must be lifted up for the salvation of the world. All who believe in Jesus will have everlasting life. The truth that was mysterious to Nicodemus still endures and has been the comfort of untold thousands.

VI. Topic: A spiritual awakening. Place: Jacob's well, near Sychar. Jesus was passing from Judea to Galilee and passed through Samaria. He rested by Jacob's well while his disciples went to buy food. A woman of Samaria came for water and Jesus preached to her about the water of life. She wondered that a Jew should talk with her, but He said that salvation was of the Jews. He told her about her past life. She believed He was the Messiah and many of her people heard His words and believed.

VII. Topic: Living faith. Place: Cana. As Jesus came into Galilee, the people received Him. While He was in Cana, a high official came to Him from Capernaum, asking Him to go to his home to heal his son, who was at the point of death. Jesus answered his earnest request by saying, "Go thy way; thy son liveth." The nobleman believed Jesus and went home. On the way he met his servants, who told him that the boy became better at the exact time that Jesus spoke the words to the father.

VIII. Topic: A miracle of mercy. Place: Jerusalem. Some time after the healing of the nobleman's son, Jesus was at Jerusalem to attend a feast. He went to the pool of Bethesda, where there were many sick people waiting to go into the water to be cured, for there was curative power in the water at times. Jesus saw a man who had been sick for thirty-eight years and He healed him. It was the Sabbath. Jesus told him to take up his bed. The Jews found fault with Him for carrying his bed on the Sabbath. They looked upon this as a flagrant violation of the fourth commandment.

IX. Topic: Food in the desert. Place—Bethsaida, on the northeast shore of the Sea of Galilee. Jesus and His disciples went across the sea for a period of retirement, but the multitude knew where He was and followed Him. He fed five thousand men besides women and children by multiplying five loaves and two fishes. Twelve baskets of fragments were taken up after all were satisfied. Jesus retired for prayer. In the night He walked on the sea in a storm to where His disciples were in great fear, and stilled the tempest.

X. Topic: Imperishable food. Place, Capernaum. After the feeding of the multitudes, crowds of people followed Jesus, and in Capernaum he spoke to them, saying that they were following him for the loaves and fishes. He told them he was the Bread of Life. The Jews asked for a sign, but he told them that if they would partake of the bread of life, they would never hunger. The Lord would turn none away who came to him. Jesus brought himself within the reach of all who would receive him. He would become the life and salvation of the world, and no one would be lost.

XI. Topic: Redemption proclaimed. Place: Jerusalem. Jesus was at the feast of Tabernacles. He told the Jews that he was the Light of the world. He showed them that though they were the children of Abraham, they could be saved only through the Son of God. They could be made perfectly free through him. There is deliverance through him from every evil habit. The drunkard can be set free from the bondage of drink.

PRACTICAL SURVEY

Topic.—The world's Redeemer.
I. His presentation by John.
II. His claim as the Messiah.
III. His teaching and miracles.

I. His presentation by John. God's great prophet, John the Baptist, is known to the world only as the herald of Jesus Christ. His one great mission was to "prepare the way of the Lord." His one great message was to declare the fulfilment of prophecy in the coming of Jesus as the Messiah. He was faithful in pointing his disciples to the One greater than himself, in whom they might find redemption from sin. The consciousness of his divine commission made him earnest in his work. His clear insight into the corrupt condition of the people made him fearless in calling them to repentance. His full belief in Jesus, as the promised Messiah, made him confident in persuading his hearers to follow him and accept his teachings. In so doing he was the connecting link between the two dispensations. All that was foretold, all that was typified in the old dispensation relating to the Messiah, he declared to be embodied in Christ and his work for mankind. Clear, unmistakable words prevented any attachment to himself. Forceful, commanding words directed attention to Jesus as the "Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." His work was completed in making Christ known.

II. His claim as the Messiah. In matters of religious life the Jewish nation was so corrupt that the interpretation of their scriptures had been warped through the hypocrisy of its leaders and their beliefs were distorted by the traditions of men. It was therefore indispensable that Jesus should declare His divine mission and His equality with God His Father. In order to lead men to trust in Him as their Saviour from sin, He must first convince them of His divinity and so enlighten them as to prove that He was indeed the Messiah whom their scriptures had declared should come. He had to bring them to see that God was making Himself known to them by sending His Son in the flesh, and through His atonement for sin they might find reconciliation. To lead the nation to a right understanding of their scriptures, and to their acceptance of Him as the Deliverer, first promised after the fall of man, Jesus constantly declared His unity with the Father and the fulfilment of His will through His mission to earth.

III. His teaching and miracles. From the calling of His first disciples to the end of His ministry Jesus did everything openly. His first invitation, "Come and see," was characteristic of all His dealings with the people. That He came as the Saviour of the whole world, He made clear in His first interview with one of the nation's leaders, when Nicodemus sought a personal interview to investigate the claims of Jesus, both to convince the people of His Messianic authority and to prove their absolute lack of piety and reverence in worship and adherence to the divine law. He openly rebuked the defiling of the temple where secular business had been established in that consecrated building. His authority was obeyed and acknowledged though the hearts of the offenders yielded no reverence nor acknowledged any sin. That all nations were to find in Him a Saviour and that salvation must be obtained by individuals, Jesus indicated in His conversation with the Samaritan woman. The hardness of the Jewish nation was frequently contrasted with believing faith among the heathen. That Jesus cherished and strengthened what He taught to be the essential in man's salvation was evident in His dealing with the nobleman who sought the healing of his son. Contrasted with the prevailing desire of the multitudes to see signs and wonders, it was indeed a great joy to discover a weak, though sincere faith. Openly He proved its genuineness and its possibility of perfection, and its influence in leading to eternal and household faith in Jesus as the Redeemer. The indifference of the Jews to the real works of mercy and their strict tenacity to legal, although mistaken, observance of the law was publicly brought against them in healing a man on the Sabbath day and afterward saving his soul from sin as he met his Restorer in the temple. Ambition in temporal matters with spiritual blindness showed how little the people were able to see that Jesus was the Bread of life. Jesus saw them as bondmen to sin, depending upon their relationship with Abraham. In His straightforward effort to set them right in matters of personal salvation He met their avowed rejection of Him.—T. R. A.

PRACTICAL APPLICATIONS.

Jesus the way. The Via Dolorosa of life are many and are filled with darkness and danger. The world's stairs that lead up through the darkness to God are broken and disconnected outside of Jesus Christ. Plato said, "The Father of the world is hard to discover, and when discovered can not be communicated." But Jesus Christ is the way to God and he that hath seen the Christ hath seen the Father and knows him. The word "way" may mean the road along which you must go to reach a certain place or the thing that must be done to attain a certain end. Christ is both; but he is the way to God and he has done all that is necessary to make it possible for us to get there. A great ship is foundering in the sea. Land is in sight. What must the sailors do to be saved? Take the lifeboat and try to reach the shore. The ship is already breaking up. It is the only way. They take it and safely make the land. So Christ is the only way out of the storm and danger of sin. He is the lifeboat. In him is security.

Jesus the truth. The world is in darkness through sin. "Having the understanding darkened, being alienated from the life of God through the ignorance that is in them, because of the blindness of their heart" (Eph. 4. 18). The first temptation was a lie, and sin has been deception ever since. There are many minor truths that we accept but which do not bring peace to the soul. There is mathematical truth, but when a sinner cries for pardon we do not say to him, that two and two make four; it is truth, but it is not the truth he needs. He needs the truth "as it is in Jesus," saving truth. In Christ we have the truth about ourselves; the truth about sin, the truth about God; and the truth about heaven; the truth that in Christ we have pardon and peace. It is this truth that makes free.

Jesus the life. Life abounds. Heaven is full of it; the earth is full of it. It is the great mystery. Science stands baffled before it. Materialism has tried to find a solution for the existence of life until many of her speculations are positively absurd. Jesus Christ is the Prince of Life (Acts 3: 15); "in him was life; and the life was the light of men" (John 1: 4). Life alone can bring life. Christ was so intensely possessed of life that he broke up every funeral he came in contact with, and made such a gap in the domain of death that light, life and immortality have been shining through ever since. "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly" (John 10. 10).

A symposium. Augustine said, "I am the way, leading to the truth; I am the truth, promising life; I am the life, which I give." St. Bernard said, "The way in which we walk by charity, the truth, to which we cling by faith; the life, to which we aspire by hope. The way in his example, the truth in his promise, the life is his reward." Leigh said, "Truth lies between way and life, as if the way to life was through truth." Thomas A'Kempis said, "Without the way there is no going; without the truth there is no knowing; without the life there is no living. I am the way which thou oughtest to follow; the truth which thou oughtest to trust; the life which thou oughtest to hope for. If thou remain in my way, thou shalt know the truth and the truth shall make thee free and thou shalt lay hold on eternal life."—G. W. G.

METEOROLOGY IS IMPERFECT

Science of Weather Forecasting is Very Uncertain.

Many Causes Unite to Make Things Go Wrong.

The most imperfect science is meteorology. The margin of error in its calculations is somewhat enormous—sufficient to completely reverse a prediction.

The weather bureau is a useful institution, based upon an incomplete system of correlated facts of observation, which are scientific as far as they go. But there are elements concerned in the production of weather about which the methods of meteorology give no information.

There are birds, insects and four-footed animals who have an incomparably greater foreknowledge of weather changes than the entire scientific corps of the Agricultural Department possesses.

When the predictors of the weather bureau give warnings of an approaching storm they act on very much the same principle as that which a railroad time table is based. A train having been announced by telegraph as started on a given line will arrive in regular succession at certain points along that line, and a station agent at any given point can, if no accident intervenes, foretell the moment of the train's arrival at his station.

Storm centres, or cyclones, moving across the country are in some ways comparable to trains following a time schedule. But unfortunately they do not run on rails, but they are driven by an invariable force, they are subject to interruptions and obstacles of many kinds, and instead of always keeping the track and following the course, they frequently wander vaguely about or take an unexpected turn or else fade away like exhausted whirls in water.

In fact, the weather bureau predictors are in the same quandary in which train despatchers would find themselves if railroad trains were shifting lines, continually drifting this way and that, getting crossed and entangled or sinking into suddenly formed quagmires and thus disappearing for good.

The one only great fact on which it bases its whole system of prediction is the general tendency of cyclonic disturbances in this country to travel eastward with a northerly trend, while storms originating around the Gulf of Mexico and the Caribbean Sea usually come up the coast.

But the official weather prognosticators are as much in the dark as the ordinary citizen concerning what is going to happen in the atmosphere next week, and they really know nothing about any storm until after it has begun its career, and then all that they know is the course that it will take in case it doesn't happen to change its mind.

A slight variation in the intensity, or quality, of the radiation received from the sun might account for sudden changes or abnormal weather, and recent investigations show that such variations occur, but what is needed is more accurate knowledge about them and their effects. Heat and light are only two of an infinite number of forms of vibration sent to us from the sun. Everybody knows that when the weather records show that two days are precisely alike in temperature, in humidity, etc., human nerves prove that they are vastly unlike in some unnamed peculiarity which affects the springs of life.

The spider busily and confidently spinning her webs in preparation for a spell of fine weather which some unerring mechanism of foreknowledge within her enables her to detect is a surer guide than a barometer. She responds to vibrations as yet only guessed at by science, and so perhaps do the super-sensitive nerves of many human creatures.—Garrett P. Serviss in New York Journal.

SUNDAY AT HOME

HELPING HANDS.

A strong and kind hand to help the weak
And ease his load of care;
A gentle hand to soothe the pain,
It is so hard to bear.

A guiding hand to lead us safe
O'er pathway rough and steep;
A cautious hand to lead us safe
From precipice too deep.

A clasping hand to cheer him on
Who's lagging in the race;
A friendly grip if he has failed
To win the longed-for place.

The soft, sweet, baby hand that thrills
The heart at every touch,
The child's confiding hand in ours,
That always means so much.

These be the loving hands and true,
That serve and soothe and cheer,
The helping hand we give or take,
And bless it with a tear.

ALL THY WORKS PRAISE THEE.

Bless the Lord, O my soul; and all that is within me, bless his holy name. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not all his benefits.—I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth.—Every day will I bless thee, and I will praise thy name for ever and ever.

Because thy loving kindness is better than life, my lips shall praise thee. Thus will I bless thee while I live; I will lift up my hands in thy name. My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness and my mouth shall praise thee with joyful lips.

My soul doth magnify the Lord, and my spirit hath rejoiced in God my Saviour.

Thou art worthy, O Lord, to receive glory and honor and power; for thou hast created all things, and for thy pleasure they are and were created.

THE OLDEST REPORTER.

The oldest reporter in the universe was ever busy with note book and pencil seeking an interview. He did not write shorthand, but long hand. His note books are numerous, well preserved, and available to the chosen. What is marvellous, he lived in a land where they do not die.

The whole study of this active servant would be tedious; we only glance at an angle of his busy career. We take the evening hour, where notices are not numerous. In the dim and distant past we notice his interview with the Grand Porter. "Beginning to be merry, don't you hear the music and the dancing?" After long years he is at the same door again. "They began to be merry." Once he made a remark, "They are always beginning." Ages piled on ages. Again he returns to his gladsome duty, and again he writes down "They began to be merry." They never finish. They always begin, each day, each hour there is a new beginning. Century after century cycle after cycle.

In the spirit universe it is always morning. In this world morning comes only once a day. These are all sins of the morning. When the clock strikes six God never puts the hands back to half-past five. It is over on and on. Always beginning, beginning to be merry! What they have they hold; no back water in this stream, no undertone to neutralize the progress. The great spirit universe travels through no retarding medium,

"Swifter than torrent, tempest, light,
I fly to my serene abode;
And on the last and holiest height,
Find rest and joy in God.

THE NEW MODEL SPRING COATS

One of Them Pretends to Be a Frock.

Most of Them Along Straight Lines.

Cold though it be, it will, nevertheless, soon be time for spring wraps, and already the question begins to concern fashionables.

Many of the new spring coats are in three quarter and seven eighth lengths, but quite a number, especially motor wraps, cover the entire dress. Among the full length models is the coat that pretends to be a frock, and this model is expected to meet with high favor.

Most of the new spring coats are along straight lines, having less flare than those worn during the fall and winter. Not a few models have sashes and belts, and the high, normal and low waistlines apparently share equal approval.

Some charming and youthful models show the Directoire influence, having fitted, double breasted lines in the upper section, with the fullness gathered on at a high waistline. Moyen Age lines are again suggested and characterize some very beautiful models.

Most of the sports models are of three quarter length, some slightly shorter. Lines vary, the coats sometimes hanging loose from the shoulder or from a narrow yoke, or in other styles being broadly belted. Fancy pockets are a noticeable feature. The collars are round or sailor in effect, large, and may be worn open or closed. Sports materials this year are wide in range, many 1917 novelties being shown, including wool velours in plain and fancy weaves; wool jersey, in plain colors and stripes; English and Scotch mixtures, checks, hopsackings and tussahs, in plain color, polka dots and stripes.

TEMPERANCE BEER

Report by the Chief Analyst to Inland Revenue Dep't.

An order in Council of Feb. [illegible], 1911, and published as Circular G. 917, defines malt liquors and malt beverages as follows:

1. Malt liquor is a beverage made by the alcoholic fermentation of an infusion in potable water, of barley malt and hops.

2. Ale or beer is a beverage produced by top fermentation of an infusion, in potable water, of barley malt and hops, with or without other starchy and saccharine matters, and contains in one hundred cubic centimetres not less than two and seventy-five one hundredths grammes of alcohol (equivalent to six per cent. by volume of proof spirits), not less than three and one half grammes of extract, and not less than eleven one-hundredths gramme of ash, chiefly potassium phosphate.

3. Porter and stout are varieties of ale and beer made in part from highly roasted malt or barley, and agree in other respects with the requirements for ale and beer.

4. Lager beer is beer produced by bottom fermentation, which contains, in one hundred cubic centimetres, not less than three and one-half grammes of extractive matter and seven one-hundredths gramme of ash, chiefly potassium phosphate, and not less than two and fifty-hundredths grammes of alcohol, equivalent to five and five-tenths per cent. by volume of proof spirits.

5. Light beer is a beer containing in one hundred cubic centimetres at 20 degrees C. less than two grammes of alcohol (equivalent to less than four and four-tenths per cent. by volume of proof spirits).

It will be observed that beer (ale), lager beer and light beer are defined. The last named may contain up to 4.4 per cent. of proof spirits.

The article known and extensively sold as temperance beer, or non-alcoholic beer, has appeared on our markets since the enactment of the above-quoted standards, and is undoubtedly intended to meet the requirements of the anti-liquor laws recently passed by several of the Provincial Legislatures.

All the above-named types of beer defined by G. 917 are spirituous liquors, and as such are debarred from sale wherever the anti-liquor laws are in force. Brewers have quite naturally sought to meet the popular demand

I tried diffe kinds of medicine, and all seemed to fail. I was one day to a friend's house, there they advised me to use B. B. for an article resembling beer, and possessing some of the properties of beer, by placing on the market a malt product which should contain so little alcohol as to permit its sale as a non-alcoholic beverage.

In defining fruit juices and other non-alcoholic drinks it was found necessary to recognize the fact that as most of these beverages contain fermentable material (sugars), small quantities of alcohol must naturally be present, due to unintentional fermentation in manufacture or in storage. The actual amount of such accidental alcohol might be very small; but practical conditions of bottling, transportation and storage make it possible for the alcohol to increase in amount, after leaving the factory, and it was necessary to ascertain, by actual analysis, the facts of the case.

So called "temperance beer" is intended to be a non-alcoholic beverage only in the sense of containing no more alcohol than 2.5 per cent., while the manufacturer endeavors to work as close to this limit number as possible. It has even been urged that an occasional excess of spirit above 2.5 per cent. should not be held to constitute adulteration, since the fact that, as a rule, this class of beer contains no more than 2.5 per cent. of spirit proves the brewer's intention not to exceed this limit. Occasional excess is therefore clearly accidental and should be so regarded.

If temperance beer is given recognition at present it has no the above contention may be regarded as reasonable.

The report now placed in hands concerns 120 samples of temperance beer. Of this number contain not more than 2.5 per of proof spirit; and if the ter the order-in-Council of Feb. may be construed as applying to article in question, these samples be regarded as non-alcoholic beverages under the Federal act.

Several of the Provincial acts fi per cent. of proof spirit as the l for temperance beers. Eighty these samples meet provincial re ments.

Since temperance beers, under which these articles were sold, recognized legally, it is question whether or not they can be judged adulterated under the act. All if we recognize this term as a non-alcoholic beverage, traverse the order in Council of 1911, and are adulterated.

It is further to be observed that under ordinary conditions of work there is a limit to accuracy at present obtainable. Very extended work in these laboratories leads me to conclude that the fourth decimal of the number expressing the gravity of a highly diluted may, even in careful hands, vary to the extent of one unit. This corresponds to an amount of proof represented by approximately tenths of one per cent., and I think it is reasonable to allow a variation of this amount in interpretation. In other words, a beverage shown to per cent. of proof spirit, at the time of analysis, should not be held to exceed the legal limit of 2.5 per cent. by an amount which could justify a penalty.

FARM AND GARDEN

TRAINING THE COLT.

Time was once when the colt breaking day was pretty much an institution in many counties. The wild young animals were left to follow their own sweet wills until almost ready for the harness. Then some fine fall day men and boys gathered to do the "breaking." It was fine for the boys, but hard on the horses.

A new day has brought new ideas. We believe now that the colt should be trained. He learns to obey while young and takes up his work when old enough without fright or distress. Training has all the strong points of breaking, with none of its disadvantages.

Especially on the small farm where only a colt or two is being raised each year the training is easy. The youngsters shouldn't be coddled or spoiled with mistaken kindness. But he should be taught that he's a horse and handled like one. Make him acquainted with the halter and teach him to lead. If the small boy wants to train him for the school fair, all the better. It will help each youngster—one will be a better horseman.

In case the colt hasn't been handled and is wild the following method, as described in a contemporary, may be used successfully to catch him.

"If the colt is in a paddock or box stall, preferably the latter, take a fairly long rope and place a slip knot in one end and place a large loop in it. Spread this loop on the straw in the well-bedded stall, and stand back at the opposite side of the stall. The colt's curiosity will be aroused and he will move up to the loop, and after a little manoeuvring will place one front foot unsuspectingly in the loop. Pull the rope and tighten the loop on the fetlock of the colt. Now open the door and drive the colt out into a well-bedded or deeply-manured barnyard. One man can hold him easily. He will jump and flounder for a time. Pull the leg gently but firmly out to the side from under the body. Let him jump and fight. He will soon lame down and stand while he is haltered.

Leave the rope on his leg, and have an attendant take the halter shank and walk in front while the man with the rope walks behind. If the colt gets wild a gentle pull on the rope will soon quieten him, and in a short time he will lead quietly."

FEED'S EFFECT ON MILK.

Feed has very little, if any, effect upon the quality of milk. By quality we refer to the per cent. or amount of total solid matter in the milk. It is a well-recognized fact that some feeds affect the flavor of milk, and possibly to a slight extent its color. Feeds rich in protein have a tendency to slightly increase the percentage of fat in case of some cows; the same can be said of feeds rich in fat. This increase is probably only temporary, however, the milk gradually coming back to its normal composition. Animals very thin in flesh and sufficiently fed, if brought into proper condition by proper feed will probably yield milk of rather better quality. The improvement in quality will not, as a rule be very marked. The milk producing function is to a large extent under the control of the nervous system. Any influence that disturbs the quiet or normal condition of the animal, be it rough usage, extremes of temperature, exposure to rain, etc., will have its effect upon the quality of the milk. On the other hand, plenty of good feed increases the quantity of the milk until the animal reaches her maximum production. What has been said with regard to the influence of feed upon the quality of milk is equally true, relative to the amount of butter that can be made from a given quantity of milk. No method of feeding has as yet been discovered that so improves the quality of the milk as to make a given quantity of milk produce more butter at one time than at another. The quality of milk varies during the different stages of lactation, but this is entirely independent of the influence of feed. The above statements are based on the teachings of carefully-conducted experiments. They are contrary to the general belief that the better the animal is fed the better the quality of the milk produced.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

If the facts were known, doubtless it would be found that most of the contamination that causes bad odors in milk and poor flavor in butter could be traced to the handling of milk before it was cooled. Warm milk is food for bacteria, and so long as the milk is exposed and warm it will likely be contaminated. As soon as the milk is drawn from the cow it should be cooled. Even while the milking is being done the can should be covered and the milk pail, so that as little of the milk is exposed as possible. Much will always depend upon the temperature of the milk. When the temperature is lowered, danger of growth of these bacteria is reduced. When ice is available, the milk may be quickly cooled, but where there is no ice more difficulties may be expected. Of course, the vessels must be kept clean and the milk put where it will not absorb bad odors. But it must be cooled before it can be expected to be anything like free from contaminating bacteria.

Sheep have always been close-grazing animals. Even in the days of extensive pastures, men kept sheep to utilize their pastures and rough land. But why not raise sheep on rich, productive land? The fact that rough land with short grass may be grazed with sheep does not mean that rich land with fine grass would not be better and highly profitable.

Prof. Blake, of the New Jersey experiment station, says that nitrogen is more marked in its effect upon peaches than phosphoric acid and potash, as commonly applied to the orchard. In an experiment in Vineland, last year, an application of nitrate of soda increased the yield from 40 to 50 per cent. over trees receiving no nitrogen. Starved and stunted trees mean poor crops and small peaches. Trees which make a poor growth suffer most from unfavorable weather at blooming time. Trees should receive enough plant food to maintain an annual growth of at least twelve inches at the tips of leading branches.

We have had some degree of success in controlling the radish maggot by scattering tobacco dust in the row made for the seed. Land plaster liberally distributed in the row at the same time will give the radishes a brighter color, and some folks thinks it improves their quality.

If your horses get sore backs and shoulders, it is your own fault. There is a thought in this connection that is worth while, and worth calling attention to. It is about those back straps that go down to the tugs. Do not try to regulate the draft by tightening the back-straps to the point where they will pull the tugs out of line. If they are even snug when hitched to the plow, they will pull down hard on the back when hitched to a harrow. The work is hard enough on the team without the added burden of lifting the plow as well as pulling it. This weight comes directly over the loins, where the back has no support from the ribs.

There's a lot of information coming from the would-be agricultural experts that is just as available for practical farm use as is the potash in powdered feldspar.

Many farmers believe that oats and peas make one of the very best hay crops, and have planted largely of this mixed crop. And they are men whose opinions are worth while.

Farmers in the richest limestone sections find it profitable to apply lime to their soils. This being true, it is especially necessary that lime be used liberally on soils that are not of limestone formation.

The Two Claimants

(By Louise B. Cummings.)

Howard Prower and Ralph Cunningham, two young Englishmen, met in the gold country of Colorado and became fast friends.

These young men, having compared notes, learned that they came from eminent British families. Prower was a younger son of a nobleman, and Cunningham claimed to be a graduate of Oxford. Besides the fact of their being fellow countrymen, there was a strong resemblance between them. They were nearly the same height and build and both light complexioned. There was one difference between them, though it was scarcely noticeable. Prower's right eye was of a slightly different shade of blue from his left eye.

But there was a great difference in the character of the two men. Howard Prower was a kind-hearted, noble man; Cunningham was a devil. They prospected together for a time, agreeing that if one struck paying dirt he would share it with the other. Finally Cunningham dug a hole in the ground for which he was offered a hundred thousand dollars. He had no intention of sharing it with Prower, and was deliberating how he could beat him out of his portion when a letter came addressed to Howard Prower, Earl of Brokefield.

Prower was away on a prospecting tour when the letter came. Both men had been away from England for ten years. If Prower were out of the way Cunningham might return, pass himself off for the new Earl, and thus appropriate the title and estates. While he was deliberating on this plan word was received that Prower had been attacked by claim jumpers and murdered.

Cunningham went to the place where the fight had occurred and tried to find his friend's body. He was told that a number of persons had been killed in the fight and they had all been buried side by side. He was shown the graves, but saw no reason why he should exhume his friends body. Returning to his cabin, he opened the letters that had been received and learned that Prower's father and two older brothers had been taken ill and all had died within a period of a few weeks.

A month from that time Cunningham appeared in England and claimed to be Howard Prower, now Earl of Brokefield. There was no one of the family to receive him except a sister of the late earl, who did not doubt that he was her nephew.

No one disputed the identity of the claimant except Lady Gladys Pembroke, the daughter of a neighboring nobleman who would have been Howard Prower's wife except for his poverty. She had not married and when the heir returned expected a happy meeting. To play the part of her lover was more than Cunningham could accomplish, and she at once pronounced him an imposter.

But notwithstanding this assertion, which was not very largely accepted, Cunningham established himself as the Earl of Brokefield. He had played the part of a peer for four months, when who should appear but the real Earl. Prower had been left for dead by those who had attacked him and those who had joined in his defence. Before they had returned to bury the dead he had crawled away. When he had recovered he looked for his chum, but did not find him. Later he had heard of his father's and brothers' death, and at once started for England.

When one day Howard Prower walked into his home and met his old friend face to face the latter turned pale. There was one of two courses which he might choose—step down and out or claim that the newcomer was an impostor. He chose the latter course. He ignored his visitor, saying that he had come to personate the real Howard Prower, but that he would be unable to substantiate his claim.

Prower, aghast at such treatment, withdrew and entered suit against the man who had usurped his title and his property. His aunt unfortunately adhered to the opinion that Cunningham was her nephew. This left Lady Gladys Pembroke the only witness in Prower's favor, and her evidence was not counted so valuable as that of a member of the claimant's family. Nevertheless, Lady Gladys warmly espoused Howard's cause, and the relations of lovers that had existed before he left for America were resumed.

One witness was found in an old woman who had nursed Howard when he was a baby. But she had never seen him since that time, and her evidence was not considered of much value, especially since in her old age she had lost her eyesight. However, at the trial she was called to the witness stand and testified as follows:

"I have not seen Howard Prower since he was a baby, when I used to give him his bath and wheel him in his perambulator, but if I could see plainly now as then I would know him, for I noticed on him a defect I have never seen in any one else. His eyes were of a different shade of blue."

The two claimants were at once examined carefully. Nearly all the examiners pronounced that the blue of Howard's right eye was slightly lighter than that of his left.

This settled the case definitely, and he was adjudged to be the Earl of Brokefield. Cunningham was sent to prison for a term of years for making false pretensions.

DOING COLONIZATION WORK

Western Canada is not the land of the romancer, but "happily ending stories" frequently owe origin to the west. For example, here is what Albert V. Laidlaw, of North Dakota, at the Royal Alexandra Hotel told a newspaper representative the other day.

"I am on my way as a home-visitor to my former home. I have ended my work for the season in harvesting grain. I have seen the last of it threshed, drawn, loaded and shipped for sale.

"I have worked early and late through the entire season with the idea of 'making good' on the season and assuring myself a holiday. I have been successful. Everything is snug at my farm buildings. There is nothing for the hired man to do but to feed the stock. I am away on a three months' leave, and I am going back to my former home and tell the folks about Western Canada."

Canadian Pacific Railway officials assert that a superior class of settlers from the United States arrived in Western Canada last year. The settlers have made good, it was asserted. Many of the settlers are now home-visitors to their former homes.

Officials asserted that in addition to the pleasures to the home-visitors in taking a holiday and the revenue to railways in the west, the home visitors are doing a great colonization work for Canada. The holidays of the home visitors invariably lead to new settlers and the breaking of new soil, which means increased crops and additional prosperity to the west, passenger officials assert.

The Diamond.

The diamond is pure carbon or charcoal, but the secret processes by which nature rearranges the atoms of the black, lustreless charcoal in the flashing diamond is a mystery that the chemists, stimulated by the certainty of great gains provided they were successful in finding the solution, have never been able to discover. Nor is it certainly known from what department nature takes the diamond-making material. It is supposed to be furnished by vegetable charcoal, which undergoes a peculiar process of decomposition and crystallization, but it has also been conjectured that the carbonic acid shut up from remote periods in the calcareous rocks may have solidified in this peculiar form.

CONSTIPATED CHILDREN

Constipation is one of the most common ailments of childhood and the child suffering from it cannot thrive. To keep the little one well the bowels must be kept regular and the stomach sweet. To do this nothing can equal Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning them Mrs. Romaine Poirier, Miron-ette, N. B., says:—"My baby suffered from constipation, but thanks to Baby's Own Tablets he is perfectly well again." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

30 YEARS OF TROLLEY.

First Successful Line Was Operated in Richmond, Va.

It is now little short of thirty years since the first successful trolley line was put in operation in Richmond, Va. An earlier experiment had taken place at Baltimore, but it was not until the Richmond enterprise was started that the trolley was placed on a commercial basis. It had been predicted before this that electrically propelled vehicles would be found impractical when used on city streets. How completely the pessimists have been suppressed no one need now be informed. Frank J. Sprague, who installed the successful system at Richmond, is still living and in practice in this city as a civil engineer. Nor is he yet an old man, having been born in 1857. A writer in "Bradstreet's" makes a few comments on the subject, apropos of a recent address made by Mr. Sprague at a convention in Atlantic City:

"The industry has prospered to such an extent that there are in terms of money, some $6,000,000,000 invested in the enterprise, and the gross earnings of he industry approximate $600,000,000 per annum. Yet this is the industry in which interest was wholly academic at the time the association was organized, and, in fact, for a few years thereafter.

"Indeed, these street railway men know much about horses; very little, however, did they know about the powerful force that was destined to supplant horses. It is related that a man who later came to be manager of one of the large electric railways of the country thus described the motor used in the Bentley-Knight experiments in Cleveland. "It revolved rapidly, 1,200 revolutions a minute, and I asked what sort of volcano it would make if it parted under the car, and was told pieces would travel two or three miles. It was a sort of nitro-glycerin magazine." A rush to adopt electricity followed the Richmond installation, and gave the country in the four years following 1888, 900 miles, and in the fourteen years to 1912 more than 16,000 miles of electric railways."—"Literary Digest."

It's one thing to call a man down, but quite another matter to keep him there.

Poultry World

HATCH CHICKENS EARLY.

Nature requires her subjects to take an annual vacation, and moulting season, that begins in late summer, is the holiday time for hens. The hens stop laying and change their old feather dress for a new one, requiring three or four months in the operation. When the hens take this vacation new laid eggs are scarce and remain scarce until the pullets hatched during three or four months in the operation. When the hens take this vacation new laid eggs are scarce and remain scarce until the pullets hatched during the preceding spring began to lay.

The remedy is very simple, and is under the control of the poultry man. The first step is to have chickens hatched early, so that the pullets begin to lay when the hens begin to moult. This is not difficult. Pullets of the American breeds begin laying at about seven months of age. Leghorn pullets begin laying about six months old. North of the Ohio River this means that all hatching must be over by May 1 at the latest. The best plan is to have the chickens coming at intervals during March and April. The earliest hatched pullets will, of course, begin to lay first. If any of them begin to moult their places will be taken by the later ones and a steady supply of eggs will be more certain.

The difficulty in the way of the practical application of this matter is that so many poultry keepers are dependent on hens for hatching. As long as we have late hatched chickens we will have late sitters. The poultry keeper who wants to change from the late hatching to early hatching must therefore either get broody hens from someone else or use an incubator. After he has "changed the dates" on his flock he will have no trouble, especially with the American breeds.

HENS PAY.

A good hen can be raised for about $1, she can be kept for one year after beginning to lay for about $1.25, her eggs for a year, estimating twelve dozen at 25 cents a dozen, will be worth $3, and the hen will be worth 50 cents when through laying at the end of her pullet year.

This is a return of $1.25 on an investment of $2.25, which is an increase of about 55 per cent., not counting labor or depreciation of plant.

If we count 25 cents as the cost of caring for a hen one year and 10 per cent. for depreciation of plant there still remains over 20 per cent. net profit on the investment.

These facts were brought out in a Missouri experiment where fifty-five White Leghorn pullets were kept for a year's laying, all the feed that was fed to the hens being weighed and the eggs being sold at market prices. The fifty-five hens produced twelve dozen eggs each, which were sold for $157.17. The cost of keeping the fifty-five hens one year was $66.27, reckoning feed prices at about average market rate in 1915. The hens were fed a well balanced ration and had the run of a yard 100 feet square. The price of eggs for the year averaged approximately 25 cents a dozen.

From the foregoing figures it will be seen that where one has good hens to start with and handles them properly a net profit of considerably over $1 a year each can be counted on from a flock of that size.

But the know how is just as important in handling hens for profitable returns as is the case with any other kind of complicated business.—Farm and Fireside.

NOTES.

Clean and disinfect the chicken house frequently, never allow accumulations; change the bedding on the floor and material in the nests frequently.

Never make a quick move about horses, cows or other animals, and this applies also to chickens. Move carefully among the birds so as not to frighten them.

A pint of crude carbolic acid mixed with a gallon of kerosene makes an excellent spray for poultry houses.

A mash made of bran, corn meal and middlings should be fed at noon. Moisten with warm water or skim milk. Keep warm until it is fed.

Gather the eggs daily. Frozen eggs are likely to cause the egg eating habit.

Feed cut clover and cabbage, carrots and mangels if they are to be had. Sprouted oats should also be fed.

The laying of unusually large eggs denotes that the hens are in an over-fat condition.

BELGIAN RELIEF WORK

The American members of the Commission for Relief in Belgium have been asked by the Germans to remain at their posts and the work in Belgium is therefore proceeding under exactly the same guarantees as hitherto.

The fact that the Commission for Relief in Belgium continues to receive large sums from the Allied Governments is in itself enough to prove that they, who are most interested, have no reason to believe that Germans are directly benefiting. Furthermore, the commission have effected an arrangement with the British Government on one side and the German Government on the other by which an acceptable lane for Belgian relief ships between North American ports and Rotterdam has been fixed so as to ensure the continuity of supplies.

The Commission for Relief in Belgium is facing to-day a monthly deficit of $3,000,000. Hence it is more than ever in need of the full hearted support of the public.

DON'T GET ANGRY

Value of Being Tough Minded About Snubs and Hurts.

Faults of temper are often a serious handicap, and the girl who is constantly "getting mad" is going to end by getting left when it comes to the settlement of success.

In the first place, anger has been proved to be a real poison. It exhausts you, and a violent fit of rage can make you really ill. "Sick with anger" is not a mere phrase—it is the truth.

But aside from its effects on yourself there is the effect on others. If you are constantly standing on your dignity and taking offense over trifles that were not meant to annoy you, you will soon be disliked in the office, and you are pretty sure to get mad at the wrong time some day and find yourself fired by some one tired out by your constant flareups.

It is certainly true that you find what you look for, and if you are looking for slights and insults you'll find plenty.

Suppose you do get a short answer once in awhile? Make allowances for other people's nerves as well as for your own. Don't think that the rest of the office is in league against you because some of them are laughing over a joke you have not heard. I know a girl who can't see two people whispering together without imagining they are discussing her and criticising her. This is a form of conceit that is particularly weak and silly and capable in time of developing into monomania.

The touchy, irritable and suspicious girl is laying out a hard road for herself. If you have tendencies in these directions set to work to cure yourself. If you don't you will be pretty sure to fail in your work and even more certain to fail in your life.

Miss Clara Gowanlock visited at the home of Miss Jessie Inglis on Saturday last.

Mr. B. McNaughton has been cutting wood with Bob Wilson this week.

Mr. Con Voelsing moved to his new home in Hanover last Thursday. We are sorry to lose our good neighbors, but our loss is others gain.

Mr. and Mrs. John Burrell and son Richard, spent Sunday at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Harnock.

HANOVER

The Chesley Enterprise went to considerable trouble to ascertain the population of the different municipalities in Grey and Bruce counties both in 1911 and 1910 and the assessment of each. The figures show a decided falling off in population in the county. Owen Sound lost 618, Meaford lost 10, Thornbury 79, Shallow Lake 67. Every township lost from 90 to 600 in population but the other municipalities increased from 17 as was the case with Chatsworth, to 579, which was the increase in Hanover. The total population for the county of Grey for the five years was 4,219. The drop in population may be attributed to the extensive enlistments from the county and the movement of many families to the West.

MILDMAY

Dr. Coates of Toronto and Mrs. Mayberry, teacher of Art in Stratford Normal School, attended the funeral of their father, Mr. John Coates whose death was announced last week. Rev. Lemon of Clifford conducted the funeral service in the residence on Thursday afternoon. The body was taken on the Friday morning train to Mitchell for interment.

Mr. Alex Wagner of London Ont. who is well known to many people hereabout spent a few days renewing acquaintances this week.

Miss Stella Duffy of the town line is learning the millinery business at the "Elite Millinery Parlours".

The sideroads of the township at the present time are in very bad shape. It is safe for neither cutter nor buggy. In some places there is still nearly one and a half feet of snow.

Mrs. J. A. Johnston and Miss Alma Schneider made a short visit to Toronto on Thursday and Friday of last week.

Liesemer and Kalbfleisch disposed of another 1917 touring car last week. Henry Koenig of the 12th being the purchaser.

We have seen a boy barefoot this week which we take to be a certain sign that Spring is here and also that he has health that mocks the doctor's rules or appears to have.

Mr. Thomas Hickling of the 12th concession had charge of the service in the Methodist Church on Sunday morning. There was no service in the evening.

The skating rink is past its usefulness for another year.

A large number of Ford owners are having their cars overhauled as they expect the roads to be in motoring shape soon.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Frank and daughter visited friends in Walkerton over Sunday.

This is the time of year when the axe and the carpet beater is heard in the land.

VESTA

Mr. Peter Wehenkel left for the West recently.

A number from this burg attended the presentation held in honour of W. G. Walk of the 2nd Concession Eld. who has enlisted for overseas service as a veterinary surgeon.

JOHNSTON'S CORNERS

Mr. Angus Campbell had a few of his neighbors last Thursday and Friday helping him to haul some square timber which he bought from Mr. Louis Bester, west of Cargill, as Angus is building another addition to his barn this summer he sure will have lots of work. Never mind he will soon get through with that job, for he's a manager.

Miss C. Long and Miss F. Riley are working in the "Elite Millinery Parlor" as there is a big rush on for Easter Bonnets.

Mr. Andrew Zettler delivered 6 hogs to the station which netted him almost two hundred dollars. An odd half dozen like that now and again come in handy.

The weather being so spring-like the last few days some of our farmers went to W. W. Lattimer's auction sale of Farm Stock and Implements, also household effects, at Enniskillen last Wednesday. Bidding was lively, which was largely due to auctioneer Wes Abell's splendid work.

Mr. Frank Sutter who has been working with "Pat Murrays" gang all winter in Cargill's shanty, spent over Sunday with his sister, Mrs. A. Zettler. Frank liked the job fine but the thaw got the best of them last week and all returned to their homes.

A lot of our farmers are busy making syrup and sugar. Wonder if there is any chance of a taffy pull if so, let us know in time.

GLAMIS

Miss Tessie Patterson is able to be out and around again after her recent illness.

A number from here attended a Baptist Conference in Paisley on Wednesday.

Miss Minnie McNally is home for a few holidays from Lapeer, Mich.

Mr. James McLeod has returned home from Niagara Falls, where he spent the past few months.

Mr. Alex McSween's Auction sale on Saturday afternoon was a good success. Good prices were realized.

Mr. and Mrs. Norman McLeod of Niagara Falls has been visiting relatives here.

Mr. Kenneth McLean, returned home from Toronto, on Saturday.

Dont forget the Red Cross Tea on Thursday afternoon.

Pte. Earl Percy, who enlisted with the C. A. M. Corps at Calgary, Alberta, a few weeks ago spent a day with his parents and brother here last week, returning to Halifax on Thusday morning to join his Draft for overseas. All were pleased to see Earl looking as hale and hearty. He gave up his homestead duties in Peace River District, to do "his bit" for King and Country. All hope for Earl's safe return.

On Thursday last the Red Cross Workers here made another shipment of the following goods: 78 pairs of socks, 31 Comfort Bags, 21 suits of pyjamas, 20 towels and 1 pillows.

Miss Mary A. McKinnon has been on the sick list.

Mr. James Gilchrist left this week to commence duties at Mr. McKenzie, Durham Rd. Kincardine.

On Thursday night Capt. Minifie a returned soldier gave a very interesting lecture here illustrated by Lime Light Views. The proceeds were in aid of the Belgium Relief Fund. Amount raised was about $100.00.

Miss M. O'Connell visited in Walkerton on Saturday.

Mrs. Wm. Allonsell and babe who have been visiting in Tavistock returned home on Saturday night.

Mr. G. F. Saunders spent a few days of last week in Galt and Toronto.

Mrs. C. Hamilton and Miss Alicia visited in Walkerton on Monday.

Mr. F. Phillips, G. T. R. agent Pinkerton, was in the burg on Saturday night.

Mr. Wm. Knox who has been in the employ of A. J. Hanmore for some months resigned his position as livery man and started to work with the Dominion Well Supply Co. on Tuesday. Mr. Walter Hunziger is the new employee at the livery.

Mrs. James Fowlie of Orillia, who has been visiting at the home of Mr. R. A. Fowlie here left for Toronto on Thursday.

Miss Clara Stauuel of Eden Grove is visiting her sister Mrs. Geo. Welsford here.

On Thursday of last week the members of the Women's Patriotic league held a quilting in the Presbyterian church. Seven quilts which were donated by Mrs. Wm. Mathews were quilted. On Tuesday a shipment was made consisting of 72 pr. sox, 7 quilts, 14 Hospital shirts, 12 pr. pajamas. Since New Years 132 pair of socks have been shipped, besides this 1 pair a month has been sent to each of our soldier boys.

Mrs. John Logie of Paisley and Mrs. Stewart of Sheron P. O. visited at the home of Mr. C. W. Keeling on Thursday.

The annual meeting of the Bowling Club will be held in the Royal Bank on Monday night, April 2nd.

CHEPSTOW

Mr. Jos. Fritz who for the past ten years has been a successful homestead er near Eyebrow Sask. is on a visit to relatives and friends in the vicinity. Besides being a successful Agriculturist, 'Sundown' has gained considerable prominence in the literary world and has been a regular contributor to this journal, for some time past.

Miss B. Wingefelder of Walkerton has been the guest of her friend, I. McNab at the King Ed. during the past week.

Mrs. Ed. Diemert of Kitchener accompanied by her family, is on a visit to her parents, Mr. and Mrs. C. Mullin. Mr. Ed. Diemert, who is again travelling for a grocery house, spent the week-end here also.

Mr. Jos. A. Massel spent the latter half of last week in London.

We understand Mr. Geo. Anstett who recently returned from Kitchener, has taken over the farm of his brother William, for a cash consideration in the neighborhood of $6500, while the latter has in turn purchased the farm of his brother-in-law, Geo. Bester. It is reported that Mr. Jas. Meagher is also contemplating a move if he can obtain a suitable location.

A number of cars of turnips were loaded at the local depot last week, the price prevailing being 40c. per 50 lbs. At this figure the sale of a few tons of this product, which has evidently become a delicacy in certain quarters would keep materially in a substantial increase of the owner's bank account.

Mr. Jas. Fowler who is planning the erection of a new house is busy hauling material and will commence building as soon as the weather permits.

The centre of attraction these days is the woods, where the welling juices of the maple are being gathered in and transformed into toothsome syrup and sugar.

News About Town

Raised $140

A Patriotic musicale was given at the home of Mr. J. A. Rowland on Friday in aid of the local branch of the Bruce Prep. League. Nearly $140 was realized.

Ladies Acknowledged Donations

The Brant Ladies-Hospital Aid are deeply grateful to the following—a donation of $1.00 from Mrs. Hutton, two friends $1.00 each, the Brant Council $30.00 and the the Brant Preparedness League Box Social held at Baird's school $30.50.

Detained At Quebec

It is learned that Pte. Nutting will not be home for another two weeks, being detained in the military Hospital at Quebec. The injury to his shoulder, which had been doing nicely, was somewhat aggravated by the trip across the Atlantic, which accounts for his being held at Quebec.

Johnston—Stewart

A young Brant couple, Miss Sarah Stewart and Mr. Donald Johnston, were united in marriage at the Manse, on Tuesday afternoon, April 3rd, by Rev. Thos. Wilson. Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are leaving this week for the West to live on Mr. Johnston's farm near Watrous, Sask.

A Big Horse

George Craig, the Paisley horse-buyer, shipped three carloads of horses from that town last week. The lot included a five year old, bought from Richard Webb of Saugeen, which weighed 2240 lbs. This is the heaviest horse Mr. Craig ever shipped and is a magnificent specimen. The price paid was $350.

Stop living the wrong way.

Band Still At Bramshott

Bandsman W. B. Thompson, who resigned the Public Librarianship here to enlist in the 160th Batt'n, writes a friend in town under date of March 11th:—"Our band are still at Bramshott, having only come out of quarantine a few days ago. We expect orders very shortly to join our Battalion which is now at Wittley."

Saw Walkerton Boys

Mr. R. K. Sutton had a letter from his son, Pte. Chas. K. Sutton last week stating that he had seen quite a number of Walkerton boys at the Front lately, including Ed. Eidt, Chester Cunningham, Sergt. Jack Burke, Corp. Everett Truax, Sergt. T. Wilhelm Roy Obere, Wilf. McKay. Charlie reported that he was feeling fine and fit.

Sap Running Well

Sap has been running well the last two days and it looks as if this season will yet run a good average for syrup. Mr. James A. Garland of Cargill who has over eleven hundred trees tapped, had boiled 120 gallons the beginning of the week. Mr. Garland leads in quality as well as quantity of his product and is preparing to carry off some more prizes in the Dominion Sugar-makers Competition.

160TH BATT'N HONORED

Named as First Battalion in New Division—Fine Spirit of Bruce Boys Referred to in Snapping Letter from Junior Officer

The following paragraphs are taken from a letter from one of the junior officers of the 160th Batt. to friends here:—

We are now comfortably settled in Wittley and this camp has it on Bramshott forty different ways. We had a peach of a day for our full-pack march over. No matter what the ground conditions may be in the open country here, the roads are always in the best of shape. They have every reason to be. I never saw such roads in my life. They are practically pavement and once your feet fall into the habit of pounding them without becoming sore, a route march is just one grand sweet song. We did the eight miles in about 2½ hours including two five-minute rests and about 15 minutes for lunch. We had the lunch at Devil's Elbow. That's one of the prettiest pieces of scenery I have seen since coming to this country and that is saying a lot. There is a big valley runs up between the hills and stops short. The road runs in a big semi-circle around the head and you can see for miles, the country being very low.

You would be surprised at the spirit shown by the men over here. We have seen drafts of men go out every week and sometimes two and three times a week. They always leave with bands playing, the fellows shouting and heaps of excitement. After the first couple of weeks it ceased to be a novelty and we lost interest, taking it as a matter of course. The fact that some of these fellows had made the supreme sacrifice and were beneath the sod less than fourteen days after we last saw them, does not seem to bring any realization of what is before us to our minds at all.

The general impression is that we will not leave here before April the 15th and when we do go we will be a unit in the 13th Brigade, 5th Division, meaning a fighting unit with a reserve of at least one battalion behind us training to be ready to reinforce us to cover casualties.

The 160th Bruce has had honour handed to it alright. After a general inspection of a week ago we have been handed the distinction of being first Battalion in our division which is fair considering that the second Battalion has been in training here since away last summer. You have "gotta" hand it to us and Major A. McLean Moffat. In about two months you will be reading in the papers the casualties of the battalion. Also if you are lucky enough to know where we happen to be sent, how to account for the gain at that point. Everyone is on his toes, hoping, trusting, waiting for an open field without Queensbury rules against a Fritz. Ye Gods! Let it be soon!

Good Position For All

Graduates of Stratford Business College get good positions and are meeting with success. The Spring term commences April 10.

Half Holiday Proposed

There is talk of circulating a petition among the merchants this week to observe a weekly half holiday during July and August. Many neighboring towns take a half holiday and more towns are talking of taking a holiday earlier this year to help speed up production in back yards and vacant lots.

Landed At Victoria

Mr. James Warren had a telegram yesterday morning from his daughter, Miss Winnifred, who is homeward bound from China on furlough, saying that she had safely landed at Victoria, B. C. Miss Warren is expected home in about a week's time, as her only delay will be a short stop-over at Toronto on missionary business.

Enlisted At Galt

Mr. Ed. Bauman, who has enlisted with the 122nd Batt'n at Galt, was here on last leave this week visiting his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Brisbin. The Battalion is leaving for Overseas in a very short time. On Saturday night Ed. was presented by the Local Preparedness League with a five dollar gold piece. Ed's old friends here wish him godspeed and a safe return.

Taken Into Partnership

A change is taking place in Walkerton's oldest business establishment this week. Mr. C. A. Fox, who has conducted a jewelry business in the town for 45 years, is taking his son, Mr. Norman Fox, into partnership, the firm to be known hereafter as C. A. Fox & Son. Mr. Fox jr. has been associated with his father in business for over twenty years and is well and favorably known to patrons throughout Bruce County and beyond in connection with the optical department which has come to be an important feature of the business. Under the new firm the public may be assured of the same high-class service which has always characterized this store during the past forty-five years.

Bowling Club Meeting

The annual meeting of the Walkerton Bowling Club will be held in the Council Chamber on Monday evening at 8 o'clock. A full attendance of the members is requested.

Domestic Wanted

Inspector Died Suddenly

N. W. Campbell, B. A. for thirty-one years Inspector of Schools in South Grey, died very suddenly at his home in Durham while getting ready for church. Death was due to hardening of the arteries. He was sixty years of age. He was prominent in educational affairs in the Province, as well as taking an active part in all movements of Public importance. He is survived by his wife, two sons and one daughter. One son William, is at present on the sea having gone Overseas as a member of the Aviation Corps.

Will Take Higher Studies

Rev. J. M. Warner, a former popular pastor of Walkerton Baptist Church, has resigned the pastorate of the First Baptist Church, Woodstock, in order to pursue post-graduate studies at the Theological Seminary in Rochester, N. Y. He also will have pastoral oversight of a church near the seminary. Mr. Warner was ordained in 1907 in Walkerton, and was unanimously called from here to the First Baptist Church in Woodstock in October 1910. Mr. Warner was for a time an officer of the 168th Battalion, but was compelled to resign his appointment through illness.

Death of Joseph Young

Mr. Joseph Young, a well-known former resident of Walkerton, died at Wingham Hospital on Monday in his 70th year. Mr. Young had been ailing for a number of years with stomach trouble and had been confined to the hospital the greater part of last year. Forty years ago or more Mr. Young kept a bookstore on the present site of Sieveright's drug store. Until the death of his sister, Mrs. (Rev) Tyndall a few years ago he made his home here. Mr Young was a bachelor and his niece, Mrs. Garnett Hoes of Windsor, his only surviving relative, brought the remains here from Wingham on Wednesday for interment in Walkerton Cemetery. Funeral service was conducted at the grave by Rev C. W. Cosens.

Young Women's Pluck

If there is a gamer family anywhere than Reeve Robt. Russell's we would like to hear about it? The last of the five Russell boys left on Monday morning for Toronto to sign up for service at the Front. This left the Reeve in a tight corner and he was forced to advertise his business for sale owing to lack of help. Fortunately his daughter, Mrs. Jean Vogan, showed that she possesses some of the pluck that her brothers have been exhibiting in France, by volunteering to "do her bit" on the milk wagon. She started driving a rig Monday morning and is getting along famously. A few women doing men's work, and plenty of our best women are plucky enough to do it if necessary, should prove a good daily reminder to some men folks that there is a war on.

How Town Folks Can Help

Fifty prominent men of Bruce struggled with the problem of how to secure more help on the farms of this County for over an hour on Friday and practically had to confess themselves "stumped". As a matter of fact there is very little help to be got that is not already lined up. With the prices of everything he grows soaring sky high the average farmer does not need much encouragement to protect his own interests in the matter of help. There are few idle workmen in the towns and the retired farmers who can work are counting on helping the younger members of the family back on the farm at seeding and harvest time. Many citizens would be glad to give an occasional day or half day to help on the farm but from what we have been able to gather from talking with farmers, this kind of help is not counted of much value. The most effective help that towns like Walkerton can give to help increase production is for every family to make an effort to grow their own vegetables. An enormous amount of garden truck might be grown on the vacant lots in this town which are at present producing nothing more valuable than thistles and ox-eye daisies. If owners of vacant lots who are willing to allow them to be cultivated would let the local Preparedness Committee or the Horticultural Society know about it, these gentlemen would no doubt be glad to see what could be done. If a start is to be made, it should be done at once if anything is to be accomplished. Later—Since the above paragraph was put in type, a well-known citizen has notified Sec. James Tolton of the Horticultural Society that he has a 1½ acre vacant lot which he will furnish free to any person who will undertake to cultivate it. This is certainly a good start. Who will be next?

Money From Old Papers

The High School Students have realized the sum of $120 from the sale of old newspapers shipped recently. They have donated $95 to eight different patriotic organizations and will continue to raise money for patriotic purposes. The students have arranged to have a photograph of Lieut. Leslie Young, who was Killed in Action nicely framed and hung in the School, and it is their purpose to do the same for any other ex-students who may sacrifice their lives in France.

Accepts Call To Barrie

Rev. W. J. Watt, who has been pastor of Burgoyne and Dunblane Presbyterian churches for the past six years, announced from his pulpit Sunday that he would sever his connection with the people. He has accepted a pastorate at Allandale and preaches his farewell at Burgoyne on Sunday, April 15th. The Port Elgin Times says that the announcement was received with general regret, as Mr. Watt is universally liked as a pastor and a man. The membership of the new call is 175 and the salary offered $1300.

Nurses To Go Overseas

Miss Thirsk, Supt. of the Bruce County Hospital, and Miss Gallagher, head nurse, were recommended last week for appointment as nurses to go Overseas and both have sent in their acceptance. Both young ladies came to Walkerton three years ago to take their present positions and both have made very many warm friends in the town, who will wish them godspeed and a safe return. Miss Thirsk resigned her position as Supt. some weeks ago but has kindly stayed on until a new Supt. could be secured. Her successor has not yet been named but her appointment to go Overseas may precipitate matters as she may receive orders from Ottawa to report for duty at any moment.

Public Meeting For Prayer

The Town Council has fallen in line with a number of other towns in calling a public meeting for prayer and thanksgiving. It is fitting at this time of momentous import to the Empire that our people recognize their dependence upon a Superior Being and in the spirit of prayer supplicate the Divine Aid for Britain and her Allies. The meeting will be held at the Town Hall Friday night at 8 o'clock. It will be under the direction of the Ministerial Association of the Town. It is to be hoped that the citizens will respond freely to this call to public prayer. At the close of the prayer meeting we are informed that a public reception will be held for two Walkerton soldiers who have recently returned from the Front.

Nurse Accepted for Overseas

Miss Ethel Cryderman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Cryderman, who has been practising as a trained nurse at Toronto, has been accepted as a Nursing Sister, for the A. M. C. and is leaving in a few days for England. While she was home on leave this week, she was presented by the Bruce Preparedness League with the five dollar gold piece which is being given to every Walkertonian who goes to the Front. Miss Cryderman is the second member of the family to join the Army Medical Corps, her brother Sergeant Wilbur Cryderman being on the staff of the Toronto University Hospital at Salonika. As there is talk of this Hospital Staff, which has seen hard service the past two years being moved back to England, it is quite possible that brother and sister may meet across the Big Pond.

Death of Greenock Pioneer

There passed away at his residence, Durham St. West, on Sunday, April 1st, Mr. John Waechter, an early settler of Greenock and one of the three original Waechter brothers, whose sons are now among the most prosperous farmers of Brant and Greenock. Mr. Waechter, who was in his 78th year, had been in poor health the past four years. Two weeks ago he sustained a paralytic stroke which proved too much for his weakened forces and early Sunday morning he passed peacefully away. The late Mr. Waechter was born at New Germany, Ont. In his twenty-fourth year he came up to Greenock Tp. and bought a bush lot which he cleared by his own efforts and in time had one of the finest two hundred acre farms in the township. Mr. Waechter was a born handy-man and prided himself on his well-kept farm. Although quiet and reserved he was well thought of in the Community and was at one time a member of the Greenock Township Council. Thirteen years ago he came to Walkerton to enjoy a well-earned rest from his labours. Besides his widow, who was formerly Miss Mary Zettel daughter of the late Andrew Zettel, one of the earliest pioneers of Culross, he leaves the following family:—(Lanah), Mrs. Dietner, Formosa, Andrew of Brant, Henry of Detroit, Alex on the homestead, Miss Mary at home, (Jennie) Mrs Ford of New York. The funeral service was held on Monday at Walkerton R. C. Church, being largely attended. Six nephews of the deceased, acted as pall-bearers: —John, George, Alex, Albert, Raphael and Benj, all but the last named being sons of the late Jacob Waechter.

IT'S A STICKER ALRIGHT!

Bruce Farmers Can't Figure How They Are Going to Get Help to Produce Bigger War Crops—Preparedness League Backs New Recruiting Movement — Some Hot Talk.

The problem of getting more help for the farmers of Bruce County to enable them to speed up production is a pretty hard nut to crack. When representative men from all parts of the County assembled here last Friday at the call of Ex-Warden McNab, Secretary of the Bruce Preparedness League, there wasn't one who wouldn't admit that the proposition had him stumped. As a matter of fact, there are few available men to be had. School boy help is already arranged for; there are virtually no unemployed, whatever retired farmers there are, who are still supple enough to handle sheaves or pitch hay, should have their services requisitioned to help the boy back on the homestead.

It came to the notice of the meeting that the Agricultural Dept. is starting an enquiry system through the local Agricultural representatives to put those wanting work in touch with those wanting workers. The League decided by resolution to endorse this effort and co-operate with the Bruce County representative of the Dept. Mr. N. C. McKay, in making the scheme effective.

Among those present at the meeting from out of town were:—Senator Donnelly, Albert Pinkerton and D. Pinkerton of Pinkerton; Reeve Gilbert Christie of Saugeen; Warden Izzard and E. Roy Sayles of Port Elgin; Reeve "Black Dan" McDonald of Kinloss; Reeve Felsinger and Mr. Robt. Thompson of Carrick; John Coumans of Chepstow; John Clancy, M. L. Ziegler of Cargill; F. Rennie, W. J. McNally, G. McCallum, of Brant and others.

The Secretary, Ex-Warden McNab, stated that the meeting was called in response to an appeal by telegram from Dr Abbott, sec. of the Organization of Resources Committee of Ontario calling upon the people to organize in an effort to procure help for the farmers from retired farmers and others; also a request from Major Hay, senior officer of the 32nd Battalion, asking the co-operation of the League in a recruiting campaign to raise drafts to reinforce the 160th Bruce Batt'n.

Senator Donnelly moved, seconded by Reeve Felsinger that in the absence of the President, Judge Klein, that Warden Izzard be chairman of the meeting.

Food Famine Threatened

Senator J. J. Donnelly referred to the blight that was endangering the wheat crop of the Argentine, and the possibility of a food famine throughout the world. Doing rather than talking was what was needed. He was anxious to hear from some of the retired farmers as to the prospect of getting help.

Mr. James Cameron, who was dubbed King of Bruce's Retired farmers, by Senator Donnelly, showed by his presence that he was in sympathy with the movement but could not be prevailed upon to make a speech.

Mr. N. C. McKay said he had been notified by the Dept. that cards and literature were being forwarded to him in connection with a scheme to put farmers in touch with helpers and vice versa but he had not yet received it. The situation was serious in this county. The High School Boys were being lined up but whether their assistance would be anything like sufficient in numbers and quality of help he could not say.

Reeve "Black Dan" McDonald knew where he could place 30 men but had no idea where to look for help.

Warden Izzard said what was wanted was to get the men in the County to work and see to it that every individual who was able should do his part.

John A. Rowland said he had figured that there were 23 young men of the town who could be released from their present employment in the town and replaced by girls. There were also 43 retired farmers. He would give his services one day a week for farm work the coming summer. He favored organizing every polling sub-division for the purpose of getting farmers and workers in touch with one another. So far as recruiting is concerned in this County, it was played out. What was wanted was Conscription.

Mr. John Clancy pointed out the need of organization in order that farmers would know what kind of men they were getting. The kind of men that straggle along looking for a job are very often no good, which the farmer has to find out at his own expense.

Mr. Jno Klein suggested that a committee be named to co-operate with Mr. N. C. McKay in connection with the sub-station of the Bureau of Labor which was to be opened here by the Dept.

Mr. E. Roy Sayles of Port Elgin said he had questioned about 60 farmers in his district and found that they

A PUZZLING CASE

CHAPTER VI.

The next day, according to my promise, I went with Tancred to see Tressinger, in order to talk over the position of affairs, which did not look flourishing for our poor friend. A very black aspect had been put on his conduct, owing to the extraordinary evidence of Ilma Celinski, who, for some reason best known to herself, had turned traitress. In truth, her conduct was most peculiar, savouring greatly of caprice, as having first attempted to save—if not his life — at least his liberty by warning him to fly, she had gone to the other extreme and done her best to convict him of the crime. I call it caprice, but it was, doubtless, more than that, as no woman would play such a dangerous game without some strong motive. I suspected that the motive was a man, and that the man was Dallas, but waited to hear Tressinger's opinion, before committing himself wholly to this view of the case.

Tancred was deeply interested in the affair, the more so on account of its difficulty, as there was nothing he liked better than to unravel one of those enigmas so frequently offered to the world by the criminal classes. Talk about the difficulty of putting together a Chinese puzzle: it is a nothing compared with the task of [illegible] the rope out of his own action [illegible] encircle the neck of a criminal. As a stone at the source may determine the direction of a mighty stream, so the slightest step in the wrong direction on the part of a detective may lead him farther away from the solution of the problem, and it is only by patient observation, deep thought and the inspiration of the moment, that a definite conclusion can be reached. A criminal case is made up of little actions, as a mosaic is formed of tiny stones; but the latter makes a picture, the former builds a gallows.

"I have been mixed up with one or two queer cases," said Tancred, as we drove to the prison, "but this is the strangest which has come within my experience. If it were the plot of a novel, the omnipotent detective, who only exists in fiction, would find out about it without the slightest difficulty; but as it is an episode of real life, we lack the assistance of the omnipotent Lecoq, and must do our best to solve the mystery alone."

"Do you think we shall succeed?" I asked, doubtfully, for things looked anything but promising.

"I cannot say," replied Tancred, shrugging his shoulders, "at present, we are entirely in the dark, and the only gleam of light I can see is the lying evidence of that woman."

"Lying evidence"

"My dear sir, you surely didn't think she was speaking the truth? Why, the whole story was most carefully prepared to blacken our friend's character, and had I cross-examined the witness, I could have shown the falsity of several statements."

"Well, and why did you not do so?"

"Because I was not quite sure of my ground. Now I know the line taken by the prosecution I will go to work and set up a defence. As I told you yesterday, I believe there is a man behind this girl, who put the story into her mouth. A man who hates Tressinger."

"Dallas hates him like poison."

"The deuce he does. Yes, I remember your suggestion, and there may be something in it. After we have seen Tressinger, we might call on this Mr. Dallas in a friendly way and see what position he takes up in reference to our friend."

"But Dallas is out of town."

"Out of town," repeated Tancred, thoughtfully. "I don't like that."

"What you mean?"

"Simply this, that if Dallas is, as you suspect, the man behind this Ilma Celinski, he would have stayed in town to direct operations. His going away at such a critical time argues that he has not much interest in the case."

"I'll never believe that, never!" I said, emphatically. "He loved the dead woman too much, not to be deeply interested in the tragedy of her fate."

"Well," said Tancred, philosophically, as the cab stopped at the prison door, "we will discuss the matter with Tressinger, and, after hearing his opinion, may find ourselves in a better position regarding how to proceed."

Gilbert was much relieved to see us, as judging from his haggard face, the poor lad had been suffering terribly since his arrest. The death of Mazzucata had been a terrible blow, but as misfortunes never come singly hardly had he realized that the woman he loved was dead, when to add to his misery he was arrested on the charge of being her assassin. While yet suffering from the effects of this second blow, a third had fallen on him in the shape of Ilma Celinski's evidence, which took him completely by surprise. Up to the time of Mazzucata's death he was unaware he possessed enemies, but after these three blows which had fallen in regular succession, he could not but see that he had some powerful and unrelenting enemies who were determined to destroy him. They had deprived him of his beloved, they had deprived him of his liberty, and now it seemed as though they were determined to crown their iniquity by depriving him of his life.

Ever since his arrest, Gilbert had been vainly racking his brains in the attempt to find out the meaning of these terrible misfortunes, which were crushing him to the earth. He was quite sure he had never injured any person, yet these unknown persons whose machinations have hitherto been successful, evidently harbored some grudge against him. Convinced of his innocence, he could not believe that his life was in peril, yet after the damning evidence of Ilma Celinski, he saw plainly that he was in a dangerous position. Innocent men have suffered for less, and at the present juncture of affairs, it seemed as though nothing could save him from the gallows.

Thus environed on all sides by doubts, difficulties and dangers, he greatly felt the want of some one with whom to discuss the matter, and was therefore much relieved in his mind when we came to help him in his hour of need. Indeed, he was so overcome that he could not utter a word, but warmly clasped our hands, while we, in order to give him time to recover himself, took our seats silently in his cell and waited for him to speak.

"I am very glad to see you, major," he murmured, at length, "and you also, Mr. Tancred. I have been thinking—"

"Precisely, and it is your thoughts we wish to know," interrupted Tancred, cheerfully. "You have, I presume, some suspicions as to the person or persons to whom you owe your present position?"

Tressinger made a gesture of despair.

"I have no suspicions," he cried, bitterly. "I do not know what it all means. I am completely in the dark."

"So are we all," I observed, slowly; "still, both Tancred and myself have certain ideas."

"Pardon," said Tancred, lifting his hand, "do not say anything at present, Major Granby. I wish to ask Sir Gilbert some questions if he will answer them." He accompanied this speech with such a significant glance, that Gilbert was taken by surprise.

"Of course I will answer them," he said, in an astonished tone; "I have no reason to keep back anything."

"Humph!" said Tancred, apparently only half convinced. "Well, we shall see. Now, tell me, Sir Gilbert, what is your opinion of Mademoiselle Celinski's evidence?"

"My opinion is that it is a pack of lies," retorted Tressinger, with an angry frown. "I don't understand the reason of such falsehoods."

"Then her evidence is not true?"

"Not one word of it."

"Good, I thought as much, and would now like to hear your version of the story."

"That is simple enough. Mazzucata certainly met Dallas in Italy, and he asked to marry her, but she point-blank refused to have anything to do with him. There was no question of the matter remaining in abeyance until he returned from the East. As to my having quarrelled with her, that is distinctly false—we never had a single disagreement."

"And yet you were forbidden the house—or rather the hotel."

"That also is false, and I can explain it all. As you know, I came to England with Mazzucata, and two days after we arrived she received the token of the black carnation. It came from Paris."

"From Paris?" we both exclaimed, in astonishment.

"Yes, it had apparently been pressed between the leaves of a book and was afterwards sent to England in an envelope. That envelope had a French stamp and the Paris postmark."

"Worse and worse," muttered Tancred, thoughtfully, "this foreign element is coming in now. We may manage to find the murderer in England, but if we have to search the Continent, I'm afraid it will be difficult."

"But supposing the person who sent the black carnation is in England," I suggested, pointedly.

"You are thinking of Dallas"

"Yes, he was in Paris for some time before he came to England, and [illegible] for the night of the tragedy."

"What has Dallas got to do with [illegible]" asked Gilbert, curiously.

"I will tell you later on," replied Tancred, quickly, before I could speak; "meanwhile, please continue your story."

"There is not much to tell. When Mazzucata received the flower, she was in a terrible state of mind, and asked me to go to Paris in order to find out, if possible, who posted the letter."

"An impossibility."

"So I found. However, I did my best and failed. I only got back to town in time for Mazzucata's debut, so that is the reason I was not at the Hotel Europa for a few days. Ilma says I was forbidden to call—I say, I was in Paris, and can prove it by the evidence of my valet."

"Good," said Tancred, in a satisfied tone, "that disposes of a certain portion of the evidence. And as to your putting the black carnation in the bouquet?"

"That also is false. I went up to Mazzucata's rooms, and found Ilma there, but when she told me her mistress had gone to the theatre I left at once. While I was there I never saw the black carnation."

"Did you lay down the bouquet while you were there?"

"For a few moments, yes. There was some coffee in the room, and I drank a cup."

"Was Ilma in the room when you laid down the bouquet and drank the coffee?"

"Yes, why do you ask?"

"Because she might have changed the bouquet when your back was turned. You brought to the hotel an innocent bunch of flowers with a black rose, you left it with an infernal machine concealed in a bouquet, [illegible] a black carnation."

"Impossible!"

"I think so too," I said, gravely, "Gilbert would have noticed the substitution of a black carnation for a black rose."

"By no means. He was preoccupied, and would pay but little attention to the flower."

"That is true," said Gilbert, quickly, "I never even glanced at the flowers—at least not closely."

"Well, then—black rose—black carnation—it was easy to make a mistake. Yes, believe me, Sir Gilbert, my supposition is correct—those flowers were changed by Ilma Celinski, when your back was turned."

"But why should Ilma have done this? Why should she want to kill [illegible] kind mistress and ruin me?"

"That's what we have to find out," said Tancred, cheerfully, "my own impression is, that she was the tool of [illegible]."

"Dallas?"

"Possibly; we are not certain as yet."

"I don't follow you at all," cried Gilbert, in perplexity. "Why should Dallas wish to kill Mazzucata?"

"Because she loved you and he loved her."

"I myself heard him say he would [illegible] her if she married anyone but you," I explained at this moment.

"Then that supplies the motive. Dallas came back from the East more in love than ever, and while in Paris, heard that Tressinger was to be married to Mazzucata. Knowing her superstition, he sent the Black Carnation in order to work on her fears. As that did no good he determined to kill her, and, therefore, determined to do so by means of that devilish bouquet, which Ilma substituted for your own."

"My dear Tancred," said Gilbert, in a tone of raillery, "you have built up an excellent case all out of nothing. Let us grant, for the sake of argument, that Dallas intended to kill my poor darling—that he sent the Black Carnation from Paris, but then he did not arrive from Paris till the night of her debut, so how could he have known that I intended to throw a bouquet of flowers—how could he know that such a bouquet would consist of white flowers with a black rose in the centre—how could he know I would call on Mazzucata before the performance with such a bouquet, and lastly, how could he have induced Ilma to change the flowers, and for what reason?"

"Your objections are very just—on the face of them," replied Tancred, good humouredly; "but I think I can answer them. In the first place, I do not believe the story of Dallas as to his only arriving in London on the night of the debut. He was in London [illegible] days."

"In that case, how could he have sent the Black Carnation from Paris?"

"Well, if you had time to go to Paris before Mazzucata's debut in search of the sender, he certainly had time to come to London and find out all about your movements."

"Well, granted that he did come to London as you suggest, what about the rest of my objections?"

"On the flowers. Well, you doubtless sent Mazzucata every day?"

"Yes. Women are fond of such attentions."

"Exactly, and Dallas knew that women are fond of such attentions. You, doubtless, always ordered those flowers at the same florists?"

"Phillis & Co., Jermyn street. Yes."

"Dallas would not have much difficulty in finding that out, either. Well, on the day of the debut he discovered that a bouquet of white flowers, with a dark centre, was being prepared by your order for Mazzucata. He, therefore, ordered a duplicate."

"But for what reason?"

"Because he wanted to kill two birds with one stone—in plain English, he wished to murder Mazzucata and then hang you for the murder."

"Well, go on."

"When he got his bouquet, he took it home and inserted the dynamite cartridge, and also removing the black rose placed therein a Black Carnation."

"So far so good; but all supposition."

"Never mind, it's all feasible, at all events. Now, the next thing he had to do was to deliver this bouquet to Mazzucata, and for that purpose went to her hotel. He did not mean to kill her at the theatre, but at her rooms. When he arrived there, he found Mazzucata had left for the theatre, and only Ilma was present. While talking to her they heard your voice, and Dallas concealed himself."

"Do you mean to say Dallas was in the room at the same time as myself?" cried Gilbert, disbelievingly.

"I say that he was in the next room. He saw you lay down the bouquet and turn your back to it, in order to drink the coffee. Then the idea occurred to him of changing the bouquets, a little task which Ilma performed at his bidding; so at the theatre you threw the bouquet of Dallas and he threw yours."

"But why should Ilma do this?"

"Why do women do many things?" asked Tancred, ironically; "because she loved him."

"Loved Dallas! oh, nonsense."

"I don't see why you should say that. Dallas is not a bad looking fellow, and doubtless promised to marry Ilma if she did as he wished."

"All this is supposition, but supposing it to be true, why should Ilma come and warn me to fly?"

"Because she felt compunction at the idea of condemning an innocent man to the gallows. As you refused to take her hint, however, she let you go on blindly to your fate. All those lies in the witness-box were not hers, but invented by Dallas."

"I cannot—I will not believe it," cried Gilbert, walking excitedly up and down.

"Well, we will try to prove it to you," said Tancred, rising to his feet. "Major, can you find out anything about the movements of your friend, Mr. Dallas?"

"Don't call him my friend," said I, angrily, "as to finding out about Dallas, yes. My man Pointer knows his valet, so I have no doubt, if I tell Pointer what I wish to know, he will find out all about it."

"Good, do that and I am sure you will find that I am right."

"There is one thing you overlooked," said Gilbert, after a pause, "where did Dallas obtain the black carnation?"

"Ah! that is the question. However, I have no doubt we will find that out also."

"In what way?"

"By means of the flower itself. If it had been a red carnation or a yellow one, I would have been in despair, but a black carnation—to use an Irishism—is a rara avis. The gardener who has been lucky enough to have discovered how to grow a black flower is a celebrated person in horticultural circles, so all I have to do is to make inquiries—say at the shop of Phillis & Co., in order to find out where this man lives. Then I will go to him and ask to see his famous plant—find out if he has sold any buds, or slips for setting—if so, discover to whom he sold them, and, then, once the purchaser is discovered, the murderer won't be far off."

Some One to Care.

Coming home on the train last night I saw a pleasing scene from the car window. A little girl stood at the railroad station with an umbrella. It was raining hard. When the train stopped she looked eagerly up and down and then ran to meet a young woman. The child lifted the umbrella protectingly over the woman and looked admiringly in her face.

It set me to thinking. After all, the main thing that we need in life is some one to care. As long as there is some one awaiting our homecoming, eager to welcome us and make us comfortable, we can keep up courage.

It is our duty to ourselves to gather around us a family of friends. Those who care are staffs to lean on, magnets to draw us away from temptation, balsams to heal our wounds and buoys to keep us from sinking.

We need all the friends we can make and hold.—Shirley in Farm Life.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON II. April 8, 1917

Jesus raises Lazarus from the dead—Easter Lesson—John 11. 17-44.

COMMENTARY.—I. Mourning over the death of Lazarus (vs. 17-19). 17. When Jesus came—Jesus had been at Bethabara, in Perea, the place where John the Baptist had preached and baptized. He went there from Jerusalem where the Jews had tried to arrest him (John 10:39, 40). He did not enter into Bethany, but came into the vicinity. Four days—It was told Jesus that Lazarus had lain in the grave four days, though he knew it without being told. Lazarus must have died on the day that messengers told Jesus he was sick. Jesus tarried two days and occupied one day in journeying to Bethany, making four in all. It is the custom in that country to bury the dead on the day that death takes place, for decomposition speedily follows. 18. Bethany—The name means "house of dates," probably from the abundance of date palms formerly growing there. It is on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives. It is now a wretched Moslem village. The Arabic name is El-Azariyeh, or The Lazarus. Fifteen furlongs—One and seven-eighths miles. 19. Came to Martha and Mary—The family must have been prominent in the community and well thought of by the Jews, even though they were in close friendship with Jesus. To comfort them concerning their brother—It was part of the Jewish ceremonial of mourning that many, ten at least, should come and console (Gen. 37: 35; 2 Sam. 12. 17; Job 2: 11). It is said that the usual period of mourning was thirty days: three of weeping, seven of lamentation, twenty of sorrow. But the instances in scripture vary.—Cam. Bib.

II. Resurrection Power in Jesus (vs. 20-32). 20. Martha—went and met him—Jesus halted outside the village, and as soon as Martha heard of his coming she went to meet him. "Her position here, it may be said, is obviously that of the elder sister, the head and manager of the household,"—Smith. It is natural that she should be the first to go forth to meet the Master. Mary still sat in the house (R. V.)—The same characteristics of Martha and Mary, respectively, are seen here in the incident described in Luke 10: 38-42. The sitting posture was usually assumed by those who were mourning. 21. Lord—Master. If thou hadst been here, my brother had not died—Martha does not reproach Jesus for not having come, but regrets that he was not present to heal him while he was sick. There was not time for Jesus to reach him after word was sent to him that Lazarus was ill. She expressed her confidence in his healing power, but supposed that he must be present in person to do the work. 22. Whatsoever thou wilt ask of God—Her words indicate that she believed Jesus could ask the Father to raise the brother from the dead and his prayer would be answered. She had probably heard of the raising to life of the son of the widow of Nain and of the daughter of Jairus. She must have known of the Old Testament miracles of resurrection from the dead. Her declaration of faith must have been pleasing to him. 23. Thy brother shall rise again—Although Martha understood these words to refer to the final resurrection of the dead, she must have been comforted; yet it is evident that Jesus was giving her the promise of raising Lazarus to life. 24. I know that he shall rise again—Martha did not belong to the Sadducean sect of the Jews, for she believed in the resurrection of the dead. She was assured that Lazarus would be raised "in the resurrection at the last day." That did not satisfy her present desire. She longed for his restoration to life at once.

25. Jesus said unto her—He recognized the deep agitation of her soul and spoke the word that must have touched her deepest moral and spiritual nature, as it has moved hearts all down the ages. I am the resurrection and the life—Note the use of the definite article in connection with the words resurrection and life. Jesus is the only source of life. He is the giver of life and the restorer of it. Jesus employs the present tense, saying, "I am," not, "I will be." He gave Martha to know that He had, at that very instant, power to restore Lazarus to life. He that believeth in Me—To believe in Jesus then was to accept Him as the Messiah, to acknowledge His divine power and to receive Him as Saviour and Lord. To believe in Jesus now means the same. The believer submits fully to the divine will and becomes a new creature in Christ Jesus. Though he were dead—Though he die—R. V. Jesus did not assure men that they would not die physically. Yet shall he live—Believers in Jesus did not assure men that they would not die physically. Yet shall he live. Believers in Jesus are not immune from physical death, but they are not subject to eternal death. They are spiritually alive and He who is the source of all life dwells in them. 26. Whosoever liveth—Physically. Shall never die—Believers in Christ shall never die eternally. Believest thou this—Jesus had given utterance to most profound truths, applicable to individuals, and He asked Martha, to whom he was speaking, if she believed what He had said. The importance and efficacy of faith can not be overestimated. 27. Yea, Lord—The question Jesus put to Martha was direct and pointed, and the reply she gave was no less so. The blessing that comes to the soul that thus implicitly believes in Jesus is inexpressibly great. It is only when one becomes thoroughly submissive and trustful that this heart cry, "Yea, Lord," is uttered. Thou art the Christ—Whether or not Martha had fully grasped the sublime truths which her Lord had spoken, she grasped the thought of His Messiahship and declared her faith in Him. 28-32. Martha's interview with Jesus was deeply comforting to her. From it she returned to her sister and told her that the Master was calling for her. She went quickly to meet Him and when she saw Him, she made the same statement that Martha had made before her, "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died." Jesus was soon to disclose to her and Martha and to all the world His power over death. Such a manifestation of His power would confirm the faith of His disciples in His Messiahship and would declare His divinity to all the ages.

III. Lazarus raised to life (vs. 33-44). 33-42. Jesus saw Mary weeping, and the Jews who came with her were also weeping in sympathy for her. He was deeply moved, and we have an exhibition of his sympathy for the sorrowing. "Jesus wept," and the Jews were convinced of his love for Lazarus. They asked among themselves if he who had given sight to the blind could not have kept Lazarus from dying. Upon his arrival at the cave which formed the tomb of Lazarus, he ordered that the stone which closed the entrance should be taken away. Martha's objection that the body had already become decomposed was met by the words of Jesus "Said I not unto thee that, if thou wouldest believe, thou shouldest see the glory of God?" When the stone was removed, Jesus offered a prayer of thanksgiving to the Father for hearing him. 43. When he had thus spoken—With the Father. He cried with a loud voice—It was unusual for Jesus to speak in loud tones, but he spoke thus on this occasion that all the people assembled might hear. Lazarus, come forth—The voice of Jesus reached the ears of the living about the tomb and it reached also into the abode of the dead. It was a commanding, authoritative voice. The call was for Lazarus to come forth from the state of death into life—from the tomb to the realm of the living. 44. He came forth—He who utter the command, "come forth," imparted the life that enabled the dead to obey. Bound [illegible] with graveclothes—His hands and feet were probably wound separately with strips of cloth, holding the spices in place. Face was bound about with a napkin—The cloth was placed under the chin and fastened over the head. Loose him—Jesus gave directions to have the grave clothes removed from the living Lazarus, for they were no longer needed.

Questions.—Where was the home of Lazarus? Where was Jesus when word came to him that Lazarus was sick? Why did not Jesus go at once to him? Relate the conversation between Jesus and Martha. What did Mary say to Jesus? Why did the Jews conclude that Jesus loved Lazarus? Describe the raising of Lazarus to life. What effect did it have upon the enemies of Jesus?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—A sympathizing Saviour.

I. Sounded the depths of human woe.

II. Established faith in Himself.

I. Sounded the depths of human woe. As soon as Martha and Mary apprehended danger, they sent for Jesus. Two sharply contrasted types of natural character are exhibited in these two sisters. Martha's creed was sound, but not complete. She thought clearly, professed her faith with boldness, with no hesitation or qualification. Jesus did not minister to Mary by discourse as he did to Martha. He dealt with her according to her nature and temperament. Martha had fully grasped what Jesus was in relation to God, but not what he was in himself, the Source and Giver of life. Her faith had not risen to the divinity of His Person and mission. Her love was stronger than her faith. She did not see the connection between Christ's love and the need of all concerned. Jesus did not try to annihilate Martha's grief, but to infuse it with another [illegible]. The death of Lazarus had spread a dark shadow over the hearts of many. Jesus beheld death in all its dread significance as the wages which sin had wrought. Humanity in all its sin and misery was portrayed in that gathering at the grave of Lazarus. Jesus knew how much the darkness and sorrow of death were intensified and aggravated to the state of ignorance and unbelief in which the world lay. His grief was connected with man's misery. While in his divine thought and sorrow Jesus penetrated to the root and source of all evil, the mighty attendant suffering awoke in him the truest and deepest compassion and tenderness toward all men. His tears were human, but his compassion and sympathy were divine. By his example he gave sanction and limit to sorrow, the limits in which sorrow is sacred and hallowed, and beyond which it is harmful and weakening. The heart which found expression for the woe in tears found expression for its sympathy and pity in the reaching out a hand to help.

II. Established faith in Himself. As it regarded the manifestation of the glory of God, the arrival of Jesus was neither too early nor too late. By His delay Jesus tried the character of all who knew the case. The restoration of Lazarus from death was more beneficial to faith than His preservation from it would have been. The growth and confirmation of their faith involved their greatest good. This alone could bring them into closer union with Christ and with the Father and open to them the door of the spiritual kingdom and fully present to their view the grand and real visions of Jesus as their King in all [illegible]. Martha, ever a practical [illegible] Jesus' words. She set His promise in the remote future and made it impersonal, placing Lazarus with all the other dead. That which lifted her beyond the atmosphere of doubt was Jesus' exposition of the things concerning Himself. His first purpose was to get their minds away from death. His next purpose was to get them to identify Himself with the resurrection. Jesus set before Martha a specific fact and challenged her faith on definite teaching about Himself. He called upon her to believe in His personal, present power and the union of His people with Himself. Jesus connected the seeing of God's glory with the exercise of faith. The words of Jesus at the grave expressed His recognition of God as His Father, His consciousness of the Father's regard and His consideration of the people, in His devotion. By a natural, filial instinct his heart rose out of its depression into confident communion with His Father. His solemn thanksgiving expressed gratitude for the assurance of power to accomplish the miracle, confidence that as the Son He always stood within the Father's favor, care for the multitude that they might be prepared to believe when they beheld the stupendous miracle. The Sun of Righteousness shone in full splendor when He exerted His power over the grave and burst asunder the bands of death. Following the manifestation of Jesus' humanity was the manifestation of His divinity. On His humanity weeping. At the grave, in His divinity, He called the dead to life, a royal command befitting the majesty of God. It was just for that reason the Jews were hostile and charged Him with blasphemy. T.R.A.

Plenty of Time for Action.

The police magistrates so often advise women complainants to come back and report any further wrong doing on the part of husbands, who have been released that these judges fall into the habit of repeating the admonition on every occasion in which a man and wife are concerned.

The other day a woman told one of the magistrates that her husband had threatened to kill her.

"Very well, madam," said the magistrate, mechanically, "very well; if he does, you come back and tell me, and I will punish him."—Care and Comfort.

The Kaiser's Baptism.

A copy of the Illustrated London News dated Saturday, March [illegible], 1859, contains a full page picture of the christening of the Infant Prince Frederick William Victor Albert at Berlin on the 5th of that month. The following account is also given of the Kaiser's baptism. In view of the record William is making for himself at present, the felicitations at the ceremony make queer reading. The report says:

On the morning of Saturday, the 5th inst., as recorded in this journal, the baptism of the Infant Prince, born Jan. 27, son of their Royal Highnesses the Prince and Princess Frederick William of Prussia, was performed at the Palace chapel, Berlin, by the Ober-Hof Prediger, Wirklicher Ober-Consistorial-Rath, Rev. Dr. Strauss, assisted by the other cathedral and court preachers. The young Prince received the name Frederick William Victor Albert.

The witnesses present were: His Royal Highness the Regent, Prince of Prussia, and Her Royal Highness the Princess of Prussia; their Royal Highnesses Prince and Princess Charles and Prince and Princess Frederick Charles of Prussia, Prince Albrecht and Prince Frederick Albrect of Prussia; Princes Alexander, George and Adalbert of Prussia, His Royal Highness the Grand Duke of Saxe-Weimar, their Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the Hereditary Grand Duke and Duchess of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the Prince of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen.

The witnesses absent (we are informed by the official notice) were their Majesties the King and Queen, Her Majesty the Queen of Great Britain and His Royal Highness the Prince Consort, His Majesty the Emperor of Russia and Her Majesty the Empress Dowager of Russia, their Majesties the Kings of Hanover and Belgium, His Royal Highness the Prince of Wales, their Royal Highnesses the Grand Duke and Duchess of Baden, Her Imperial Highness the Grand Duchess Dowager of Saxe-Weimar, their Royal Highnesses the Grand Duchess of Mecklenburg-Schwerin and the Grand Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz; their Royal Highnesses Princess Alexandrine of Prussia, Prince Frederick of Prussia, the Duchess of Kent, the Duke of Cambridge, the Duchess of Cambridge, the Prince and Princess Frederick of the Netherlands, their Highnesses the Duchess of Saxe-Coburg-Gotha, the Princess of Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen, and her Serene Highness the Princess of Liegnitz.

The royal and princely personages, and the guests invited or commanded to attend the baptismal [illegible], assembled about 1 o'clock at the palace of His Royal Highness Prince Frederick William. A little later the princes and princesses repaired to the chapel, and arranged themselves in a semicircle around the altar, the rest of the assembly filling the remaining space. The illustrious infant was then brought to the door of the chapel by the mistress of the ceremonies, Countess Perponcher, preceded by the Deputy Court Marshal, Chamberlain, and Privy Councillor of Legation, Count Perponcher. Immediately behind the countess appeared the Countesses Mary Zu Lynar and Wally von Hohenthal, maids of honor to Her Royal Highness Princess Frederick William of Prussia, Princess Royal of Great Britain, bearing the train of the illustrious Infant Prince. At the entrance of the chapel Countess Perponcher surrendered the most illustrious Infant Prince to his Royal Highness the Regent, Prince of Prussia.

In the meantime the royal mother had repaired to a room adjoining the chapel, commanding a view of its interior.

Holy baptism was then administered by Rev. Dr. Strauss, assisted by the other cathedral and court preachers.

On the conclusion of the ceremony the illustrious Infant Prince was delivered by Countess Perponcher into the arms of his royal mother, while Dr. Strauss solemnly pronounced the closing benediction over both.

After this Her Royal Highness Princess Frederick William entered the adjacent salons, and received the congratulations of the various royal and princely personages there assembled. The other guests invited then passed the chair of Her Royal Highness, and retired into another apartment.

After this [illegible] visitors partook of a dejeuner dinatoire. The ladies invited appeared without trains; the gentlemen in gala with knightly scarfs, the military gentlemen without [illegible] scarfs, and the Knights of the Black Eagle with a chain. The Countesses von Perponcher, Zu Lynar and von Hohenthal wore trains.

The streets were dressed with flags and [illegible], and at night the entire city was illuminated. Some of the streets presented a magnificent appearance. Among the public edifices remarkable for the splendor of the illuminations was the Hotel de Ville, which was lighted up by more than 3,000 jets of gas. At all the theatres a gala representation was given.

Prince and Princess Frederick William have addressed the following letter of thanks to the people:

"The birth of our son has been hailed in all parts of the country with a sympathetic feeling which will remain as deeply engraven upon our hearts as the reception given to us at the time of our marriage exactly a year ago. We are not able, we think, to choose a better day than that of the baptism of our child for addressing to the whole country our warmest thanks for the joy it has displayed, and for the cordial congratulations to which it has given so touching an expression. May we, with the help of God, raise up our son for the honor and happiness of our dear country.

Frederick William, Prince of Prussia,
Victoria, Princess Frederick William of Prussia, Princess Royal of Great Britain and Ireland.
Berlin, March 7, 1859."

SUNDAY AT HOME

A NEW LEAF.

Lord God, Thou lettest the green things start
A new life every year;
Out of their sunken selves they rise
Erect and sweet and clear;
Behold the lily's pure white leaves
Unfolding by each mere

Out of my own self let me rise
For God—if it can be,
A new and noble growth may spring
From you decaying tree.
Surely a strong, pure life may mount
Out of this life for me.

HE SHALL DIRECT THY PATHS.

My times are in thy hand. He shall choose our inheritance for us.

Lead me, O Lord, in thy righteousness, make thy way straight before my face.

Commit thy way unto the Lord; trust also in Him, and He shall bring it to pass. In all thy ways acknowledge Him, and He shall direct thy paths. Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it, when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; He leadeth me beside the still waters. Like as a father pitieth his children, so the Lord pitieth them that fear Him. For He knoweth our frame; He remembereth that we are dust. Your heavenly father knoweth that ye have need of all these things. Casting all your care upon Him; for He careth for you.

PUMPING.

Who can tell the name of the inventor of the pump? The name is one and obscure; it is probably from the Italian, "bom bare," to drink. A thirsty creature surely; the town pump stood in our old market place; there was a stone trough for horses, a lower trough for dogs, on the top of the spout there was a small hole; you put your hand to stop the flow and the water would spin up so that you could get a drink.

The pump was a thirsty creature, and yet gave all the drink away, an emblem of unselfish beneficence. When ships are built they are fitted with pumps and gear, so that in case of leakage they may be kept from sinking. Who can tell the last dying speech of the pump, when in mid ocean the crew, worn out, hands and armpits raw as beef, the cruel waters engulfed the ship and crew and left no tongue to tell the tale?

The pump raises and transfers the fluid, sometimes by hollow cylinder of [illegible], exhausting and filling the [illegible] by means of external valves. The heart of man is a pump. It works without your aid or your will, when it stops you die. The modern preacher gives out the text: "My son, give me thy heart!" The ancient preacher expressed the same sentiment by saying, "Give me thy liver," for the liver was considered as the source of the vital fluid, whereas the heart is now considered as the most exquisite machine to do the pumping. This was not always known. Harvey discovered the circulation of the blood, but only the young men believed him; for it is on record, not one medical man over forty years of age accepted the theory, so slow and stubborn is the heart of man.

There is no ship sent to sea without a full outfit for pumping; no ship could be insured without this necessary provision, and yet, strange to say, the greatest ship that was ever built had no pumps. An eminent Christian once said to the writer: "Did the ark of Noah contain a pump?" I replied, No, for she was never intended to sink; she had no masts or sails, no rudder, and yet she made a good voyage and arrived!"

Is she not a standing type of the ark of Salvation? Does not every ship contain a perfect symbol of the way of life? Where is the parent who never bought a Noah's ark for his child, the inside full of wooden pigs and horses and cows?

Any pump on board the Gospel ship? No. Is the commander ever absent from the quarter deck or the bridge? Does He keep watch night and day? Yes. Is the navigating power safely, absolutely, in His hands? To ask these questions is to answer them. The Gospel ship was never intended to sink, to be delayed on a [illegible], to be injured, stranded or lost. The beaches near other ports are often strewn with fragments of wreckage, owing to the [illegible] of the pilot.

But the Gospel ship sails in safe waters under a safe pilot. We have an absolute guarantee of present and everlasting safety. We have more, we have comfort, [illegible] and glory.

STAMMERING AND STUTTERING.

Stammering and stuttering are not absolutely the same thing, though they are very generally confused. Stammering proper consists in an inability to pronounce certain words or syllables, resulting in complete arrest of speech, whilst stuttering causes a repetition of the same word or syllable in a spasm which may last for a considerable time. Stuttering is the less common of the affections, and it is also less amenable to treatment.

Stammering is partly due to a real spasm of the articulatory muscles, and partly to their irregular action—their imperfect coordination—as it would be called technically. This means that their actions do not interlock properly, one set perhaps acting more slowly or irregularly than another, so that the results which would normally be produced are either not produced or produced only partially, exactly as a machine might act if part of it were slightly out of gear. There are several sets of nerves and muscles which govern the various processes necessary for speech, and a hitch may take place in any of them. It is probably for this reason that stammering and stuttering are so difficult to cure, and so apt to recur even when improvement has taken place.

In order to treat stammering effectively it must first be ascertained at what point in the act of speech the processes become disturbed. It is almost always found that there are certain letters or sounds at fault in each individual, and that these do no vary, but belong to a group all the members of which are produced by the same part of the mouth. Thus if consonants B, P and M are formed by closure of the lips, T, D and T are formed by the pressure of the tip of the tongue against the front of the roof of the mouth, whilst some of the others, such as K, the hard G, and others are made by pressure of various parts of the tongue on parts of the surface at back of the palate. The sound of a letter is made by the release of air which has been arrested in its outward journey by any one of these closing movements of the mouth. A few moments of personal experiment in the production of these simple sounds will show the method of sound production better than a long explanation. It is clear that where the muscular movements are not accompanied by the necessary expulsion of air no sound will be produced, whilst it is also clear, that the same result will follow if the muscular and respiratory movements do not take place at the same time. And it is to this that nearly all cases of stammering are referable. Either there is a spasm of the glottis, which prevents the exit of air at the right moment, or there is not perfect coordination between the will of air and the muscular movements.

Now vowel sounds differ from consonants in that the former are made within the throat and not the mouth, they are varied in sound by variation in the shape of the larynx and in the volume and rapidity of the air-current. Stammerers do not realize that the consonant only modifies the vowel sound which carries it, and they are apt to go on trying to form the consonant alone without the vowel sound which should follow it and is really part of it. In other words, the stammerer tries to say the consonant—which is really only the shape of the sound—without the sound itself. This is clearly shown by a simple experiment. Take a long breath and slowly say the vowel sound Ah. Continue this sound, modifying it by muscular movements of the tongue and mouth, and you will find that consonants have been produced merely by changing what one might call the shape of the original vowel sound Ah. It is along this line that efficient treatment of stammering lies.

In the great majority of cases the fault is with the respiratory part of the sound production, and the patient should, therefore, first be taught how to breathe properly, quietly and deeply. He must be taught also to control the exit of his breath, its volume and rapidity, and then how to combine it with the production of the simple vowel sounds. Here the most important part of the treatment begins, for here he must be taught that it is not necessary to stop the production of the voice in order to put in a consonant. The vowels should be intoned and the consonants introduced while the voice continues, as in the experiment recommended above. For instance, in uttering the sound O, it should be changed from O to Mo, then to DO, and so on. The patient learns in this way that the utterance of the vowel sound gives him help in pronouncing the consonants over which he has most difficulty.

One of the real difficulties with which stammerers have to contend is the tendency to confine their systematic production of words to their lessons in sound production only, and to make very little effort to practice the same principles in ordinary life. It cannot be too clearly understood that no progress can possibly be made in this way, as the bad muscular habit can only be corrected by substituting a good habit for it, and this can only be done by constant repetition and practice.

FOOD POISONING.

Apart from extraneous bodies of a poisonous nature introduced into food, many foods themselves possess under certain circumstances, and for certain individuals, poisonous qualities. Many forms of shell fish, especially mussels often give rise to severe irritation of the alimentary canal. Diarrhoea, vomiting and abdominal pain are the more obvious and immediate symptoms. In all these cases medical assistance should invariably be obtained. Usually the best first aid treatment consists in giving an emetic followed by a good dose of castor oil.

Had Weak and Dizzy Spell WAS CURED BY
MILBURN'S HEART AND NERVE PILLS

Mrs. J. S. Nicholls, Listowel, writes: "I was weak and ran down, my heart would palpitate, and I would take weak and dizzy spells. A friend advised me to take your Heart and Nerve Pills, so I started at once, and found I felt much stronger, and my heart was ever so much better in a short time. I cannot praise your medicine too high for it has done me a world of good. My husband has also been bothered with heart trouble ever since childhood and finds quick relief by using your valuable pills."

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills have been on the market for the past twenty-five years, and are universally known as the very best remedy for all troubles arising from the heart or nerves.

Milburn's Heart and Nerve Pills are 50c. per box, 3 boxes for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Sick Headache and Biliousness
CURED BY MILBURN'S
LAXA-LIVER PILLS.

Mrs. Willard Tower, Hillsboro, N.B., writes: "I have suffered something awful with sick headache. At times I would become bilious, and would have severe pains in my stomach after eating, and have a bad taste in my mouth every morning. I told some of my friends about it and I was advised to use Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills. This I did and and they cured me."

When the liver becomes sluggish and inactive, the bowels become constipated, the tongue becomes coated, the stomach foul and sick and bilious headache occur.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills clean the foul coated tongue and stomach and banish the disagreeable headache.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. per vial, 5 vials for $1.00, at all dealers or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

FARM AND GARDEN

IMPROVING THE DAIRY HERD.

The wise farmer is constantly on the alert to improve his dairy conditions. Much of this improvement can be made (and in the least time and with the least cost) by the use of a pure bred sire. But it is not only important that he should be a pure bred animal, but that he should represent a strain of good milkers. There should be a history back of that sire. It is foolish to go back five or six generations for this history. The important point is, what is the reputation of his immediate ancestors? Are they, or have they been heavy producers? Did his dam, and his granddam on his sire's side, produce milk, or butterfat, or both in large quantities?

If the immediate family history is first class in every way, the question of pedigree is largely settled. It is immediate ancestry that counts.

REQUIREMENTS OF THE BULL.

Professor Trueman, of Storrs Experiment Station, in referring to the sire, says:

The bull chosen should be a good individual as well as have a good pedigree. It is not wise to use a poor animal simply because his ancestors have been good, for he will be one of the ancestors of the succeeding generations.

The bull should be vigorous as shown by a bright eye, a wide awake, active disposition, a full crest, broad chest, fine silky hair and soft hide. He should have a large deep body, with well sprung ribs, indicating feeding capacity. He should not be coarse and beefy. The hind quarters should not be peaked, but should be comparatively light. The thighs should not be overloaded with fat, and he should be well cut up in the twist. He should have a fine, straight-away walking gait, not cross-legged. When you find one just right, buy him, and do not be too particular about the price.

This bull should be used on the best cows that can be selected from those available. They need not be pure-breds. In fact many men will get better results to stick to grades. It does not require as much skill to breed good grades as it does to breed good pure-breds. The pure-bred bull will be prepotent over the grade cows, and the calves will be more than half-blood in actual characteristics. The strong blood of the pure-bred bull impresses the offspring much more than does the weaker blood of the grade, so that the bull becomes more than half the grade herd. On the other hand, in breeding pure-breds together, great judgment is required to get the two currents of strong blood to mix well; otherwise the results may be, been tested. That means that bulls are not ready for general or extensive use until they are three or four years old. Instead of keeping them until fully mature, the common custom is to use them freely as yearlings and 2-year-olds, and then get rid of them because they may get cross. We can hardly blame the bull for getting Good breeding will not make well-developed heifers unless they are well fed. It is absolute folly to expect that heifer calves will develop into first-class cows if they are stunted when they are young. It is perfectly legitimate to get a good ration at a low cost as possible, but nothing but failure can come from trying to save money by feeding a poor or insufficient ration.

The blood of the good bull may be more strongly impressed upon the grades by closer inbreeding than is advisable when raising pure-breds. A strong bull bred to grade cows gets strong heifers, and he may be bred again to his own with a strong likelihood of getting good results. This method gives 75 per cent. of the blood of the sire in the heifers of the second generation. It is not wise to inbreed too much when raising pure breds, but it may be practised with excellent results in the case of grades.

The average daily ration fed 2-year-old heifers in the Storrs College barn during the winter of 1909 was as follows: Hay, 8 pounds; silage, 20 pounds; grain, 1½ pounds. The grain mixture was made up of 300 pounds of bran, 100 pounds of cornmeal and 100 pounds of linseed meal.

The ration fed milking cows was made up as follows:

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

Notice the fruit trees carefully. See which tree bears heavily, ripens on time and matures a high grade of fruit. Notice the trees that are shy bearers, the tender trees susceptible to disease and insect injury. It is highly desirable that the fruit-grower become thoroughly familiar with the tendencies of the various trees, so he will know how to treat them. Trees are much like animals. A person can always get better results with animals if he understands their peculiarities. Furthermore, one always wants to know the good trees and the poor trees. The poor will need be replaced as soon as practical. The desirable trees bearing large crops of highly-desirable fruits may be reproduced. Propagation should be from the best.

Those who have had any experience in handling sheep will know how difficult it is to get them into a barn or shed after dark. The interior is dark and they are afraid to enter. Of course, it is possible to catch one or two and carry them inside, but even then the rest will not follow. A lantern placed where the sheep can see it frightens them away instead of enticing them inside. But a lantern placed just inside the door and to one side, illuminates the interior of the barn and does not frighten the sheep. The sheep will readily and quietly enter a barn lit up in this way.

Coal ashes are of far less value as a fertilizer than wood ashes are, yet they have a value especially on a soil inclined to clay. They change the soil, making it lighter and more easily handled, and besides this it becomes more productive, because of the mechanical change made to the soil. There also is a slight element of fertility in these ashes.

That horses have their peculiar tastes in selecting the most palatable feeds is shown by recent investigations at the Ohio Experiment Station, in which some hays were eaten with great relish, while others were only partly consumed. Mixed clover and timothy seemed to satisfy their appetites best, and brome grass was also to their liking. Timothy hay stood third. None of the horses were fond of tall oat grass, while bluegrass and redtop were also near the bottom of the list of palatable grasses.

The first thing to do with scoured calves is to remove the cause and then give them lime water in the milk. Two tablespoonsful twice a day for a calf 2 months old, and for larger calves half a cupful. Make the lime water by putting a hand full lime into a gall of water. When it has slacked and settled, pour off the clear portion and bottle it for future use.

It seems strange that there are so many farms where fruits are not grown. Most people like fruits, and there are very few localities and farms where some kind of fruits cannot be grown. Let every manager consider the value of a good orchard and then start one on his farm the first opportunity.

Quite Different.

A tenant of Lord Halkeston, a judge of the Scotch court of sessions, once waited on him with a woeful countenance and said: "My lord, I am come to inform your lordship of a sad misfortune. My cow has gored one of your lordship's cows, and I fear it cannot live." "Well, then, of course, you must pay for it." "Indeed, my lord, it was not my fault, and you know I am but a very poor man." "I can't help that. The law says you must pay for it. I am not to lose my cow, am I?" "Well, my lord, if it must be so I cannot say more. But I forgot what I was saying. It was my mistake entirely. I should have said it was your lordship's cow that gored mine." "Oh, is that it? That's quite a different affair. Go along and don't trouble me just now. I am very busy. Be off! I say!"—American Law Review.

Scared by the Elephant.

Tradition has it that Caesar brought elephants with him to Britain and that they contributed to his conquest of the island. Having unsuccessfully attempted to cross the Thames, Caesar built a large turret on an elephant and, manning it with bowmen and slingers, ordered them to pass the stream, whereupon the Britons, terrified at the sight of the unknown monster, fled in confusion.—London Chronicle.

CHILDHOOD CHIMES.

Oh, happy were the days we spent
Aroon our mither's knee,
No one beneath the firmament,
Was half sae kind as she;
She petted us, and took great pains
To please our roving e'e;
When we were puir wee toddling weans
Aroon our mither's knee.

Refrain:
A mither's friendship is sincere,
A mither's love's divine;
Our mither dear, we'll aye revere
For Auld Lang Syne.

When we were puir wee toddling weans,
Free sin and sorrow free,
Misfortune's mystic icy chains,
On life's weird sombre sea;
Did never press us hard and sair
And knock us a' aglee,
Every day was bright and fair,
Aroon our mither's knee.

Thae bonnie days are past and gane,
And braw and big are we;
A crookit road we may hae ta'en,
And wild, and wayward be;
But ah, we ken tho' folly reigns,
Our hearts were pure and free,
When we were puir wee toddling weans
Aroon our mither's knee.

Orang Utan.

The large anthropoids of Borneo and Sumatra are usually called orang outangs. This form, it seems, is not correct. Orang signifies man and outang, or utang, debt, something owing, so that orang outang would simply mean a man in debt. The correct Malay name is orang utan, or outan. This signifies the forest man in distinction to orang dusum, or village (civilised) man.

Bird Bathers.

An ornithologist, swimming in the blue sea, said: "Birds enjoy baths as much as we do. Take, for instance, wild ducks. Wild ducks adore a fresh water bath. Though they feed over salt water, they will bathe only in fresh. They'll fly thirty or forty miles inland for their weekly fresh water dip.

"Sparrows go in for a wet bath and a dry one—a wet bath of clean water and a dry one of clean dust.

"The partridge takes a loam bath. He loosens up a square foot of the chocolate colored loam and bathes his plumes in it for half an hour at a stretch.

"All birds love a bath of ashes. Wherever, in the prairies, you see an ash heap, the sign of a forest fire, a flock of birds will rise up from it if you go too near—birds that have been polishing their feathers in the silvery ashes as a servant polishes knives."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

SUBMARINE HAS EARS.

Microphones Direct This Ship When Submerged.

Although the submarine is blind after it dives it can be made to hear with the aid of microphones or electric ears. Edward F. Chandler, an inventor who has made a close study of submarine problems, has worked out a method of utilizing microphones whereby a submerged craft may direct its course accurately toward a hostile ship. He gives an interesting explanation of this method in the Popular Science Monthly.

"In the modern telephone," says Mr. Chandler, "the transmitter is essentially a microphone, the pressure of the sound waves being communicated to the conductors by means of a diaphragm. The submarine equipped for battle under the sea is provided with microphones on its port and starboard bows. Telephone ear-pieces enable the submarine commander to listen to the sounds gathered by the microphones. If the submarine is not pointed head on toward the ship to be destroyed the microphone on the off-side will hear less than the other, and the difference in the volume of sound received by the two microphone detectors will be noted at once in the telephone receivers. The commander changes his course until he hears equally well with both ear-pieces.

"While it is perfectly feasible to direct a submarine by telephone it is much more effective to convert the microphone vibrations into visual signals. As a result the commander of a submarine has only to watch a finger move over a dial in order to know what course he should steer. In a sense he sees the sound which the microphone detectors hear.

"While a visual steering indicator is primarily depended upon to guide the submarine on its deadly errand, telephones are connected with the microphones, to be used when the occasion arises. With their aid the commander can distinguish one under-water sound from another and interpret it correctly. A tramp steamer can be microphonically distinguished from a Mauretania, a torpedo boat from a super-dreadnought, and above all a sub-surface craft from a surface craft. Thus the character of an unseen ship miles away can be ascertained.

"But apart from listening to passing ships, the telephones will be required to receive messages from an admiral on a battleship five miles away. Both warships and merchantmen are equipped with submarine signalling devices—devices which send forth either bell sounds or rhythmic vibrations. It is easy to see how useful they can be made to telegraph orders to a submarine under water five miles or more away."

FOLK TALES.

Ethical Wisdom Always Taught by Them.

At the bottom of the folk tale there was nearly always a basis of folk-wisdom—the perception that right-thinking and doing could bring people through all worldly, and even personal, limitations and obstacles. The stories were told by the common folks, who had to contend with every kind of material disadvantage, says the Christian Science Monitor. But they managed to grasp the essentials of existence in that hard schooling, and the greatest, simplest and most universal of folk tales, the parables, were told to them.

In the folk tales of the world, according to the standing of the nation's ethical barometer, we find certain lessons taught perpetually. Kindness is always repaid in some unexpected form or other, even when the kindly act has passed from the doer's memory; and the humblest person or creature may prove the most powerful friend in time of need. The old woman by the roadside with her burden, the old man with his stick, the traveler, the ill-treated dog or cat, even the insect in difficulties, the tired horse—all are agencies of untold good to those who befriend them, while those who pass with closed hand and heart find fortune strangely, adamantly adverse.

Again, the others with money, the eldest sons and heirs, who sit in confident pride, depending on, or puffed up by their material possessions, are the losers in the supreme quest, where the younger sons, often plain, sometimes dull or slow, but always kind hearted and always poor, are assured of triumph; and, in the story's course, plain wits develop and simple common sense and tried are shown to be of greater value in predicaments than the learning of schools. Indeed, a most delicate distinction is made between intellect and intelligence. Book learning, coupled with pride and scorn, is shown to be worthless, while good cheer, a sense of humor and a kind heart invariably solve the knottiest problem presented.

SICKLY BABIES

Sickly babies—little ones who are troubled with their stomach and bowels; whose teething is painful, digestion bad and who cannot sleep well—can be made healthy and happy with Baby's Own Tablets. Concerning the Tablets Mrs. Wilfrid Damour, Val Brilliant, Que., writes: "Please send me a box of Baby's Own Tablets, as I would not care to be without them. I have used them for constipation, and vomiting and am well pleased with the result." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Poultry World

SPRING POULTRY WORK.

The poultry raiser who wishes to produce fall and winter eggs with a by-produce of spring "fryers" should begin now to plan for the early setting of eggs. With settings timed the chicks will hatch in ample time to allow their maturity before cold weather. The pullets from these broods should lay during the late fall or early winter when eggs are scarcest.

The young chicks will be developed to the point where they may be turned out on the ground by the time vegetation is out, and so may augment their feed with green stuff. The smaller broods of chickens can be hatched later than those which are larger and slower to develop.

INCUBATION.

One difficulty in setting eggs in spring at selected dates if the natural system of incubation is followed is in finding broody hens at the proper times. If natural incubation is depended upon exclusively it probably will be best for the poultry raiser to disregard dates and make settings whenever broody hens are available. A good nest for setting is made of wood, 15 inches square and about 16 inches high, with a top. The front is open except for a board 6 inches high. Three or four inches of damp earth should be placed in such a nest, and on this straw, hay or chaff should be firmly packed. The hen should be dusted thoroughly with insect powder. It is a good plan, also, to sprinkle a little of the powder in the nests.

USING AN INCUBATOR.

The machine should be operated in a warm room, preferably a cellar, as a protection against outside temperature changes. It should be disinfected thoroughly before being used, with a solution of reliable coal tar disinfectant. Instead of using such a solution a small receptacle containing one-half ounce of permanganate of potash on which one-half ounce of formalin has been poured may be shut up in the incubator. The resulting gas will thoroughly disinfect the machine. After disinfection the incubator should be run empty for several days to get it into good operating condition. After the eggs are in place the temperature should be held at from 101½ deg. to 102 deg. F. the first week 102 deg. to 103 deg. the second week and at 103 deg. the third week.

The eggs usually are turned for the first time at the end of the second day and twice daily through the eighteenth or nineteenth day. The eggs are cooled outside the hatching chamber once daily after the seventh and up to the nineteenth day. Moisture should be furnished in artificial incubation in high altitudes and when the incubator room is dry. This may be done by sprinkling the eggs with warm water or by placing a wet sponge or pan of water under the egg tray.

During the hatching period carefully fill the lamp and trim the wick each day. It is best to trim the wick by scraping off the burnt portion rather than by cutting the wick. The lamp should not be filled entirely. After the lamp is filled it should be closely observed for a time to make sure that the flame does not get too high.

NOTES.

Plan ahead. While shade is not needed now, soon the hot days of summer will be here, and the wise poultry keeper will order in time trees, such as peach, pear, plum or apple, that in a few years a good shade can be had in the poultry runs. Meanwhile artificial shade should be provided, but natural shade gives the best results.

Reduce the corn in the ration for fowls to be used as breeding. Fertility will be better when the poultry from which the hatching eggs are wanted are not forced to eat the regular laying mash, which is more or less forcing. A few eggs less a week will prove of greater benefit in the extra fertility and strength of the chicks hatched.

No poultry expert ever expects 90 to 100 per cent. fertility nor do they hatch from the fertile eggs in the incubator 90 per cent. Even with the chicks hatched there is a death rate of over five or 10 per cent.

Beginners expect too much, as a rule, in poultry results. Do not expect every egg to be fertile, or every fertile egg to hatch, either under the hen or in the incubator. When hatched, not all will live and reach maturity. They do not under the expert care of the practical poultry keeper, and could not with the attention of those just starting.

The scarcity of pullets has kept egg prices up in a good manner during the winter now passing. Pullets are the ones that the poultry keeper must depend on for winter eggs. The good old hen may be a heavy layer of strong, fertile eggs to hatch from in the early spring, but the strong, husky pullet is the heavy egg producer when hen fruit is highest.

COLT DISTEMPER

You can prevent this loathsome disease from running through your stable and cure all the colts suffering with it when you begin the treatment. No matter how young, SPOHN'S is safe to use on any colt. It is wonderful how it prevents all distempers, no matter how colts or horses at any age are "exposed." All good druggists and turf goods houses sell SPOHN'S.

SPOHN MEDICAL CO.
Chemists and Bacteriologists Goshen, Ind., U.S.A.

The poultry equipment that the present-day beginner can start with makes success in poultry more sure than in the past. The new brooder stoves have eliminated the large death rate that was common in years past, due to faulty brooder construction, which did not give ample ventilation or even a good heat during all kinds of weather. To-day the leading stoves work as regularly as a good incubator in holding an even temperature.

Unanimous Consent.

There was a wedding in a certain church the other day, and as usual, the minister in the course of the ceremony said: "If any one has aught to say why this couple should not be joined in the holy bonds of wedlock, let him now speak or forever hold his peace." During the silence that followed a man who was accustomed to serving as a chairman of meetings arose and, rapping the top of the pew sharply with his knuckles, said, "There being no objection the motion is carried."

"Oh, come! Stop borrowing trouble." "Borrowing! Gee whiz, man; trouble isn't like money. When I borrow money I can forget about it right away."—Boston Transcript.

HERE WOMEN RULE.

In Divers' Colony in Japan Men Are Nobodies.

Japan is far from being the land of the suffragists, yet in at least one little Japanese colony woman rules, and dominates the entire situation. This colony is on the Bay of Shima, on the Pacific coast of Japan, and has existed for at least a thousand years, and the women are known as the nymphs. They have earned this title fully, for they are almost mermaids in their devotion to the water, and their life is amphibious.

The gown women pass about ten hours The grown women pass about ten hours which are found at considerable depths. They use no diving apparatus, but have so trained themselves that they remain under water for two or three minutes at a time.

They are robust and splendidly formed, or they could not stand the strain. During the warm season ten hours in the water is the rule, and even in the coldest winter days three or four hours are spent in diving for pearls.

The men are almost a negligible quantity in this little colony, which consists of a single village of a few hundred inhabitants. They lie around and do just as much or as little as their capable women tell them to do. When a girl child is born there is a great rejoicing, but the birth of a boy is the occasion of mourning, for he will never be a producer, according to the prevalent ideas in this town.

When less than four years of age the daughters are taken into the ocean and taught to swim and dive. At 12 or 13 they are real nymphs, and think nothing of staying in the water ten hours a day.

As soon as they are admitted into the regular rank of the workers they begin to prepare for their wedding, saving all they can for the trousseau. [illegible]

HERE'S NOVELTY.

It's a three-in-one hat.

At first glance it looks like any other broad-brimmed sports hat.

But look again and you'll discover that the crown unclasps and comes off.

The crown and narrow brim under the wide straw brim are of glistening satin.

Use the small hat for traveling, carry the brim flat in your trunk or suitcase, and wear the combination when you arrive at your destination and dress up.

It seems as though the one opportunity that is ever present is the opportunity to do the wrong thing.

HIS RISE TO FAME.

(Buffalo Express.)

"Pa, what do you suppose became of the boy who stood on the burning deck?"

"I fancy my son," said Pa, "that he grew up and made himself even more famous by wearing a high silk hat while walking past a school just as it let out when the snow was good packin'."

Gillie—Yes. He has one of those office systems where you can find just what you want when you don't want it by looking where it wouldn't be if you did want it.

POETIC.

(Boston Transcript.)

Hub—I hear that that young poet who boards next door has been refused credit by the tailor.

Wife—Why was that?

Hub—Oh, I suppose Mr. Shears thinks him an idyle fellow and stands verse to going ode by him.

MARRIAGE SETTLEMENTS.

(Puck.)

The Suitor—What will your father settle on the man who marries you?

The Girl—All the rest of the family, I suppose.

THE DIFFERENCE.

(Life.)

"The trouble with you, sir, is—if you will pardon me for saying so—that you think nobody is good enough for your daughter."

"Yes, sir, and that is where we differ so radically. You appear to think nobody is."

DOING HIS PART.

(Baltimore American.)

"Are you doing your part toward fighting the high cost of living?"

"Sure; I'm visiting all my relations."

FORGING AHEAD.

(Washington Star.)

"How's your boy Josh getting on at school?"

"I dunno," replied Farmer Corntossel, "but if he is really as smart as his conversation sounds, he's makin' some o' those professors hustle to keep up with him."

THE MAIN THING.

Youngpop—Yesterday was my little boy's birthday. Flubdub—Did he get many presents?

Youngpop—Did he! Why he's got some of them yet.

OLD-FASHIONED MABEL.

(Buffalo Express.)

"Mabel's rather pretty; I wonder why she's never been engaged?"

"She's so old-fashioned that she thinks she'd have to marry a man she became engaged to."

A DOUBLE WARNING.

ENJOYING GRAND OPERA.

(Washington Star.)

"Do you enjoy grand opera?"

"I might," replied Mr. Cumrox, "if in talking about it I weren't obliged to use words that I can't pronounce and don't understand."

A Venetian Fashion.

Fashions were no less eccentric four centuries ago than they are to-day. "Before the streets of Venice were paved (in the thirteenth century)," says Sir William Beulting in "Woman in Italy," "ladies went through the mud and filth on pattens. The custom was retained, and in spite of sumptuary laws the patten became lengthened until women of rank stood on false feet half a yard high in the sixteenth century. They were unable to walk without the support of one or two gentlemen or servants."

A curiosity in banquets is mentioned by the same writer. It was a wedding feast at Milan and consisted of fifteen courses, "each being introduced by living specimens of the animals that composed it."

AN AMENDMENT to the prohibition bill provides that licensed standard hotels shall be exempt in respect to business assessment during 1917, 1918 and 1919 providing they hold a license. Another amendment to the act has for its object a more rigid enforcement of the law instituting the "Indian list," while in another the "blind piggers" are given passing attention.

ROY SAYLES of Port Elgin said at the Bruce Preparedness meeting the other day that he marvelled at the forbearance of farmers who have to read the talk in the city papers about intellectual uplift for the farmers and linking up the rural sections with outside thought. Right you are, Brother Sayles. It would be a liberal education for some of those city penny-a-liners to come up here and learn something from the farmers in this 'Neck of the woods". It is our opinion that a great deal of the best thinking of the present day is being done on the back concessions.

THE place to take the true measure of a man is not the market place or the amen corner, not the forum or the field, but at his own fireside. There he lays aside his mask and you may learn whether he is imp or angel, king or cur, hero or humbug. We care not what the world says of him—whether it crown him with jewels or pelt him with bad eggs, we care never a copper what his reputation may be. If his babies dread his coming home and better half swallows her heart every time she asks him for a five dollar bill, he's a fraud of the first water, even though he prays night and morn till he is black in the face and howls hallelujah till he shakes the eternal hills.—Exchange

A. McKIM LIMITED ADVERTISING AGENCY NEW EXECUTIVE

The new Executive of A. McKim, Limited, Advertising Agency of Montreal Toronto, Winnipeg and London, Eng., has been announced. During the last few years, the late Mr. Anson McKim had gathered around him an executive staff capable of relieving him of all but a general oversight of the rapidly growing business of the advertising agency which he founded nearly thirty years ago, and which now comprises four offices in different cities and over 140 employees. Since his death, these experienced men have been carrying on the work in the same efficient way that has characterized "McKim's" for so many years. The personnel of the executive as now organized is J. N. McKim, Vice-President and Treasurer; Mrs. Anson McKim, Vice President; W. B. Somerset, General Manager; H. D. Stephenson, Secretary; C. T. Pearce, Manager at Toronto; Thos. Bell, Manager at Winnipeg; W. Keeble, Manager at London, Eng. The appreciation of the value of advertising space in local and home papers of modest circulation, always a strong feature of this Agency's policy, will be as marked as ever under the present management.

could get their spring work done alright and their seeding in. What they needed most was help for a few days during the busy harvest. The Agric. Dept. had the machinery to put the farmers in touch with those who were willing to help in letting the people know of what was being done.

Mr. C. W. Cryderman favoured completing the organization of the Bruce Preparedness League in each sub-division as the best solution. A great many people could help part of the time if they would. All should feel a personal responsibility. He had offered to go to the Front in the pharmaceutical dept, but had not been accepted. He was willing to arrange his work during the summer so as to help one or two days a week.

Ex-Warden McNab suggested a resolution backing up Mr. McKay's work and offering assistance in the towns and villages. A resolution committee was named to do this.

Mr. Thompson of Mildmay thought something might also be done in the towns and villages to increase production by factory hands cultivating vacant lots.

Reeve Filsinger of Carrick favored making the best use of the Dept. Organization.

Mr. W. J. McNally said that the farmers could put their present crop in but if production was to be increased, more help would be needed.

The following resolution, dealing with the labor question, was moved by C. W. Cryderman, seconded by F. Rennie and unanimously carried;—That this League approves of any measures that may be taken to increase the production of food in the Empire and offers its cooperation with the local Representatives of Agriculture in attaining this end and we hereby call upon the local branches of the League to take up this branch of the work and communicate to Mr. McKay any information they think will be of assistance to him and that copies of this resolution be forwarded to each branch of the League.

Major Hay Asks Help

The secretary read a letter from Major Hay of Paisley stating that the officers of the 32nd Batt'n had been asked by the Militia Dept. to establish a depot for the purpose of obtaining recruits to reinforce the 160th Batt'n, and he asked for the League's assistance in obtaining the necessary recruits.

Mr. Otto Klein, who was called upon to explain this matter further, stated that as the 160th the Batt'n was to go to France shortly as a fighting unit, there would soon be a call for reinforcements. He said the people of Bruce should be proud that the Batt'n had been Overseas overstrength, and had been chosen to go as a fighting unit. He did not agree with a previous speaker, that there were no more recruits to be got in Bruce County. Away back in the Peninsula, there were scores of available men who up to now had not been made to realize their responsibility in this war. The townships of Carrick, Culross, and others, which had not yet done their full share in the recruiting could also be looked to for a number of recruits.

Rowland Attacks Klein

Mr. John A. Rowland took issue with Mr. Klein and started a lively word-storm. The old score which is reported to have existed between the authorities of the 160th and the officers of the 32nd owing to the senior appointments of the Overseas Batt'n not being given to officers of the County Batt'n, was re-opened. Mr. Rowland said he meant what he said when he stated there weren't recruits to be had. If there were any they were out behind the barn. He had failed to see Major Hay, Mr. Klein and the others take part in recruiting for the 160th. Was there money in this for somebody? It would be money wasted. He had no use for Church parade officers. Why didn't they come out and help the recruiting for the 160th? He had not seen Major Hay or Mr. Klein on any platform.

Mr. Klein—"No, Mr. Rowland was monopolizing all the platforms in the County." Mr. Klein went on to say that he would like to tell more than he could tell but as he was still an officer of the Militia, his lips were sealed regarding his reasons for not joining the 160th Batt'n. He was surprised that Mr. Rowland should lose his temper in this way and to hear people that had brought men all the way back from the Front to get them jobs here as officers, talk about "wasting money."

Mr. John Clancy asked why Capt. Bland, a man who was advertised as giving up big farming interests to go to the Front to fight, had not been taken across?

Mr. Klein replied that was a matter he knew nothing about.

E. Roy Sayles and Rev. R. Perdue moved that the letter of Major Hay be received and that the League put itself on record as being willing to give the officers the assistance required.

W. G. McCallum and John Clancy moved that the annual meeting be held at Chesley, Wednesday or Thursday, June 20th or 21st, at 4 p. m.—Carried.

Reeve Gilbert Christie moved, seconded by D. Robertson, that we regret the absence of our President, Judge Klein, through illness and that the secretary write him a letter expressing the wish of the members of the League for his speedy recovery.—Carried.

The meeting adjourned with the singing of the National Anthem.

Showing a Roof Covered with Brantford Slates in Solid Color.

There is Safety Under This Roof

Have you ever had a fine job of decorating spoiled by a leaking roof? If you have, you certainly are in a position to appreciate the value of a roof that is positively water-proof. Some of the troubles common to wooden shingles to-day are that they are apt to split, warp or blow off as well as leak, soon after they are put on. Years ago they were good, but the quality has since gradually depreciated as the available supply of suitable timber became exhausted.

Brantford Slates have none of the faults of wooden shingles. They cannot rust. They do not allow rain to be driven under them as do metal roofs. They do not require rigid supporting as do the common tile or slate roofs. On the other hand Brantford Slates afford the utmost protection with little weight. They are made on a long-fibred felt "base" which is thoroughly saturated under pressure with asphaltum or mineral pitch. Crushed quartz-like particles are then deeply embedded in the surface of this "base", making it water-tight and fireproof.

Brantford Roofing

Brantford Slates are made in the natural slate colors of green, red, black and grey. The colors never fade and the slates do not require painting nor repairing. These slates are pliable and fit readily around a bend and into the angles of any roof. This means a continuous roof without seams or joints. Sparks die on Brantford Slates. When you have the slates "on" you are done with the job. Remember they don't require painting or staining and may be selected to harmonize with almost any exterior color design, and the price is not beyond your reach. We would be pleased to send you samples and our Roofing Booklet.

GOLD DUST
digs deep after germs

Gold Dust not only cleans but sterilizes.

Soap merely washes over the surface, leaving a greasy film behind it.

Gold Dust "goes to the bottom," and insures absolute purity, and sanitary safety. Why not sanatize your home, as well as clean it?

Soap needs muscle help; Gold Dust does all the hard part of the task without your assistance.

Gold Dust is a good, honest, vegetable-oil soap, to which are added other purifying materials in just the right proportions to cleanse easily, vigorously, and without harm to fabric, utensils or hand.

Gold Dust is sold in 5c size and large packages. The large package means greater economy.

POETS' CORNER

WITH THE 160th AT BRAMSHOTT

(Written for the Telescope)

On the borderland of Surrey
Is a most delightful spot,
Where the pen of poets often, has
For inspiration sought.
Here, in a dell among the hills,
Oft famed in song and story,
Lies the sleepy town of Hazelmere
Quite hidden by Forests' Glory.
Here Tennyson's Lordly mansion
O'erlooks the valleys green
Where silvery brooks for centuries
Have reflected the moon's pale beam.
Here Hindhead rears its lofty crown.
With a gibbet cross erected,
In condemnation of a deed
By sailor lads enacted.
Far below in misty silence,
The "Devils Punchbowl" lies,
Described in prose by Dickens
Where not e'en the raven flies.
Northwards we find a wooded glade
Where "Waggoners' Wells" repose
Where Tennyson oft did linger
And his sweetest verse compose.
Near by a solitary hamlet
At the foot of Hindhead Hill,
Secluded by the forest green,
Is called by nations Shottermill.
Here George Eliot's cottage stately,
'Mid the hills and forests stand
Here she found the inspiration
For her famed' stories grand.
Farther on in County Hampshire
Upon an upland green,
Where for years the gorse and heather,
White and purple can be seen.
But alas! the trumpet sounded
And Bramshott's lovely plain,
Has been turned into a drill ground
For our boys from 'cross the main.
Here amid the mud they toil;
Men from Canadian lands,
Where instructors make them "fit"
To fight the German bands.
Here the boys of the Bruce have toiled',
All the long winter through
Thinking naught of hardship
If 'twill help their Country through.
In her fight against oppression
Of the fierce and hated Hun,
As "Bill" tries in vain to win
A place "Up in the Sun."
In the quiet village churchyard,
Sheltered with ivied oak and pine,
Where the church bell sweetly peals.
With ringing note and chime.
Lie four of our dear comrades
Who have passed to their reward,
As they tried to do their duty
To their dear Country's Flag.

—One of the 160th, Bramshott.

News About Town

Lance-Corp. A. D. McDiarmid of Lucknow died of wounds at the Front

It's about time to begin sandpapering the handles of your hoe and rake in preparation for the great production campaign of 1917.

Mr. Leo. O'Reilly of Eden Grove shipped a carload of turnips from the G. T. R. Station here on Saturday, consigned to New Orleans. Turnips bring a high price across the line this year, probably owing to the potato scarcity. The buyers are paying around 45 cents a bushel.

Mr. Jim Harkley arrived home last week from an interesting trip through the Eastern States. Mr. Harkley went on a visit to his sister, Miss Harkley in New Jersey, and while there he visited Philadelphia, Pittsburg, Washington, and George Washington's birth place at Mount Vernon. He returned by a different route visiting Toledo and Detroit.

At Orlando, Florida

Judge Klein is now at the Florida Sanitarium, Orlando, Florida. The Judge writes a friend here:—"Quite warm here. Many people going north."

Worse Than a Goat

A party of British officers at Salonika fell into a dispute. The question was which smelt the worst a Turk or a goat. One of the officers was duly constituted judge. A goat was led in, and the officer fainted. Then the Turk was brought in, and the goat fainted.

A Day's Work

"What constitutes a day's work? We figure it out that it depends altogether on your occupation. If you lay brick, eight hours; if you keep house, sixteen hours; if you preach the gospel, two hours; if you are a porter in a sleeping car, twenty hours; if you serve the Government, one hour; and if you are a newspaper man, twenty four hours."

The Kind That Count

Two recruits of the kind that count came into the headquarters of the No. 2 Forestry Draft yesterday and joined up. Both men are from Echo Bay, near Sault Ste. Marie. One of them is named George Washington Wilkinson, brother of Dr. J. N. Wilkinson, reeve of Huron Township. He is a farmer, and a married man with three children. He sold everything, his farm, his stock and all his belongings, and has come to serve his country. He did not come alone. He brought with him Robert Strachan also a married man with eight children, one of his sons being with the 227th Battalion. Both are experienced bushmen, just the kind the Forestry wants. Counting on such a good example to bring forth results, the two have been sent back to Echo Bay as recruiting sergeants.—Toronto Globe.

Marked Increase

A. H. McDONALD, Ethel, Ontario, says:

"Last Spring I purchased a quantity of Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer from J. K. Baker and from the results shown by its use on plots of corn and potatoes, I can confidently recommend its use on a much larger scale. This shows the value of intensive farming. If every acre available on an average farm were properly cultivated and Homestead fertilizer used judiciously I am sure the financial returns would show a marked increase."

Belongs To Good Farming

GEO. SCHROEDER, Dashwood, Ontario, says:

"I used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on oats last spring, leaving one drill width without, where you could see the difference of about one foot. I recommend it to any farmer who wishes to do good farming, as I think there is no better."

Growth Simply Wonderful

WILLIAM EVLAND, Sarnia, Ontario, says:

"I have used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer and am so greatly pleased I want to tell you of it. I had a piece of ground where nothing would grow, not even weeds, and I planted strawberries and put some fertilizer on them and the growth is simply wonderful. In fact, it beats anything around the neighborhood."

Comrades!
If you cannot carry a rifle, you can serve your country on the farm.

"The plow is our hope," declared Right Hon. David Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The tremendous significance of these words in the face of a world shortage of food must be a matter of concern to all. It points out the path of duty to men and boys unable to enlist in the army but capable of helping to increase production.

Help the farmer increase production

At this supreme hour when ample food production is one of the indispensable means of victory, the country faces a serious shortage of men and boys on the farms. The Department of Agriculture emphasizes the urgency of every man and boy taking to heart this splendid opportunity for patriotic service.

Boys Decide now to help in the war. If you are between the ages of 14 and 18, and have good term record, you can secure promotion at school by enlisting for farm service any time between April 20th and May 20th.

Parents are urged to encourage their boys to enlist for farm service. The physical and moral welfare of your boy will be advanced by a summer spent close to Nature; an interest will be awakened in an important industry of the country that will be a help to him in his whole future.

Men The Department appeals to retired farmers, to men following no occupation (retired), to business men who can spare at least a portion of their time, to all men who can arrange their affairs so as to help some farmer. Every man is invited to enlist for farm service.

Confer with your District Representative of the Department of Agriculture, or write or visit Ontario Government Employment Bureau, 15 Queen's Park, Toronto.

COMME

AMES KITCHENER.

report of the special commission, r the late Lord Cromer, on the allipoli adventure, does not make very pleasant reading for the public. The War Council, as a body, does not figure to much advantage. Winston Churchill is charged with first proposing an attack on the Dardanelles, and the attempt was made to rush them with the fleet alone. The investigation proves that the attempt was undertaken without sufficient consideration. The members of the Council deferred too much to one another. Lord Kitchener was the dominating influence, and he was generally given his own way. There is some doubt as to the attitude of Lord Fisher. He did not speak out when he should. Everything was left too much in Kitchener's hands, and he had too much to do. These revelations show that it was no wonder we were not winning the war, and that Lloyd George did not take hold of matters any too soon.

It may be noted that the commission has not one word of censure for Gen. Ian Hamilton, the commander of the Dardanelles expedition, although mention is made of one of the generals under him who has since been retired. Lord Kitchener is dead, and if he had been alive to give his version of the affair the report might have been different.

HE PASSING OF THE ROMANOFFS.

Nicholas II., the Emperor of All the Russias, styled Czar or Emperor and Autocrat, has abdicated his throne. He has refused the Regency on behalf of his son, and has chosen his brother instead. We now learn that his brother, the Grand Duke Nicholas Alexandrovitch, has also renounced all claim upon the throne, and thus the last of the Romanoffs pass away as the reigning House of Holy Russia. If the revolution has been completely successful, the Czar has made up his mind that he also would make a clean sweep of the Imperial dynasty. The proclamation issued by the Czar is of a lofty character, breathing good will to Russia, and an earnest desire for the victory of the country over her foes. One wonders, on reading this manifesto, why the Emperor did not see and heed the signs of the times long before this. If the liberties and happiness of the people were so dear to him, he might have shown it by introducing reforms and granting them political liberty. Our only answer to this is that the Czar was not a free agent. It required a revolution to break the bureaucratic gang that had fastened themselves upon the court at Petrograd. The Czar seems to have been helpless to save himself.

With a view to unite the people and all the forces for the realization of a speedy victory, and in accord with the wishes of the Duma, the Czar announced that he considered it desirable to abdicate the throne of Russia, and lay aside his supreme power. The Czar thus makes his exit with all the nobility that he can command, and whatever may be the thoughts and feelings of his people, outsiders may well accord him a certain amount of respect. The last of a long line of Romanoffs who ruled Russia with a more or less despotic sway, Nicholas II. more than once gave evidence of a liberality of mind that was a credit to him, and if he had been a more forceful character he might have shaken off the incubus that has at last proved his undoing.

One cannot forget that it was at his suggestion that The Hague Tribunal was established. That was a bid for universal peace that testified to his goodness of heart, and had his effort received proper support this war might never have occurred. He also instituted the Duma, with a view to give his people something in the shape of constitutional government, but here the reactionaries again interfered and from time to time its work was nullified by imperial interference. The latest act, that of closing it, sealed the doom of the Czar and the House of Romanoff.

While a stable form of Government is being organized, twelve members of the Duma with the President at its head will have charge of national affairs. A constitutional Assembly will be convened to decide on the nature of the future Government of the country. There is some talk of forming a Republic.

Later.—It is now announced by a semi-official Russian News Agency that the Czar's brother, Grand Duke Nicholas Alexandrovitch, has consented to ascend the throne on condition that it is the will of the people as shown by a plebiscite. The death of the Czar's young son, who was heir to the throne is also announced.

Not England Alone.

Ye who would reckon with England—
Ye who would sweep the seas
Of the flag that Rodney nailed aloft
And Nelson flung to the breeze—
Count well your ships and your men,
Count well your horses and your guns,
For they who reckon with England
Must reckon with England's sons.

Ye who would challenge England—
Ye who would break the might
Of the little isle in the foamy sea
And the lion part in the fight—
Count well your foes, and your friends
Weigh well your valor and guns
For they who ride against England
Must battle her million sons.

Ye who would roll in warfare
Your hordes of peasants and slaves
To crush the pride of an empire
And sink her fame in the waves—
Test well your blood, and your mettle,
Count well your troops and your guns;
For they who battle with England
Must war with a mother's sons.
—Theodore Roberts, [illegible], Barbadoes.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"He is—ahem—certainly one of the most interesting and—er—charming men I have ever met," says the rector, "and if ever—Signa had not been foolish enough to reject Sir Frederick for his sake, I should have liked him amazingly."

To-night, after the rector has drunk his one glass of port, and Hector has smoked his cigarette—which he is allowed to do under the veranda—he goes into the drawing room, and waiting until the couple are fast asleep, entices Signa into the open air.

"Well, sir," she says, nestling up to him as he draws the white, fleecy shawl round her, "what is it? Do you want to smoke or what?"

"I want to talk, but I can smoke as well, if I may," and he lights a cigar, a special privilege permitted by Signa, who is wise enough to know that a cigar is the one rival which a woman need never fear and who likes the scent of a fine Havana in the evening air, though, as a matter of truth, she would declare she liked the rankest of tobacco if her god happened to be partial to it.

"Signa," he says, putting his arm round her under pretense of drawing the shawl closer, "I have come to make a business proposal."

"I can't talk business with your arm around me, sir," she murmurs, naively. "You should hand me to a seat, and stand with your hands behind you."

He laughs.

"I can talk better like this Signa, we have been so hard at work on behalf of other people that we have had no time to think of ourselves lately. Let us do so to-night. How should you like to be married this day month?"

Signa starts, and draws a long breath, then she flushes a deep red, and tries to put him at arm's length.

"Not at all," she says, tremulously.

"No? Then say this day fortnight?"

"Oh, Hector! How foolish!"

"This day week, then?" he says, drawing her to him.

"This day—five years!" she says, with bowed head and flushed face. "Will not that do?"

"It certainly will not!" he says. "Listen, Signa, if—if you are quite sure—"

"Quite sure?" she echoes, softly, her violet eyes raised to his.

"Quite sure that you would not repent—that you love me well enough to trust me—marry me in a month from now. There, darling! I meant to break it to you, as all bad news should be broken, but it has slipped out. This day month!"

"Oh! Is it so soon. Why—why—cannot you wait longer?"

"No longer, darling! Even that seems ages off. I shall count every day until the day arrives! Why should you not, Signa? You don't repent, do you? You are still sure that you do not regret? Blythe Park——"

"Isn't it rather chilly. I think I will go in," she says.

"Forgive me, darling!" he murmurs, holding her tightly. "But it seems so much, all that you are giving up! Well, I won't touch on that subject again. I will accept it that you prefer the mendicant, Hector Warren to Sir Frederic Blythe, and that you will become the pauper's bride in a month."

"Must I—" she whispers. "I—I thought——"

"That, like Jacob, I was going to wait seven years, perhaps?" he says, laughing softly. "Why, do you know, I thought I was wonderfully considerate in giving you so long, but I remembered that ladies required at least a month to get their wedding finery."

Signa laughs.

"My wedding finery will be but a poor display."

"A clean cotton gown is all I stipulate for," he says, "on condition that I may dispense with the awful blue, shiny frock coat which is considered [illegible]—I beg pardon!—well don't refuse me! I have a special for the bride. Come, my darling, reason for asking you."

"If you wish it," she says, with another long breath. "But it is dreadfully short. What will Aunt Podswell say?"

"She will groan and sigh, and sniff—dear Aunt Podswell!" he says, smiling. "And the rector will cough and rub his chin!—poor Mr. Podswell. It is an awful disappointment for him! never mind; I am not to mention that odious subject, am I? Just thirty-one days, and you will be my own! It seems too sweet to be true!"—and he takes her face in his hands, and turns it so that he can look at it with passionate wistfulness.

"Is it so sweet?" she interposes, with lowered eyes.

He does not answer her, and his face grows pale, as if with some passing thought.

"Heaven! how women can trust!" he murmurs.

"Trust!" she says, with gentle wonder.

"Yes, yes," he says, almost to himself. "Are you not trusting all your future life in me—to me who am not worthy to touch the hem of your dress!—to me of whom you know nothing!"

She smiles.

"Know nothing? Why, it is, oh, ages since we met there down by the sea. Know nothing. It seems to me as if I had known you all my life. Why is that?"

"Don't ask me," he says, still pale and troubled. "Your pure and stainless love overawes me. There! there! you don't understand; but oh, my darling, if you knew how precious your love is to me!—how I treasured your sweet innocence and trustfulness! Ah, Signa, my own, own darling, if a lifelong devotion can prove my love for you, you shall learn what love is."

And in the intensity of his emotion he drops his arm and moves away from her.

Half frightened, Signa sinks into a chair; and he takes a turn or two on the terrace. Then he comes back to her, with the dark cloud dispersed from his brow, and bends over her.

"Signa," says he, "have you noticed that I have not made you a single present, not even the regulation engaged ring which the happy lover generally places upon his betrothed's finger?"

She looks up at him with a smile.

"Have you not? I never thought of it."

"Not even a ring!" he says. "And I will not give you one until I can give you a plain hoop of gold. But I must give you something, Signa."

"Give me your love," she says, looking up into his eyes, steadily.

"You have that already," he returns almost solemnly. "But see, here is something else," and he draws a long, blue envelope from his pocket and taps it with his finger. "It is not so pretty as a ring, is it?"

Signa smiles with amused surprise.

"What is it?" she asks.

"I cannot tell you just now," he says, waving the blue envelope up and down, gently. "But I want you to take it tonight as my wedding or betrothal gift. Will you do so?"

Signa holds out her hands and he gives her the packet.

"You are not to open it," he says, smiling thoughtfully, "until after we are married, or——" he pauses, then smiles again, lightly—"unless anything happens to me——"

"Happens to you!" with a sudden gravity.

He laughs.

"Yes; I mean in case I should—should—well, slip down the steps on my way home and break my neck——"

"Hector!"

He laughs.

"Of course I am joking, Signa," he says, apologetically. "But—this is business, you know—in case anything should happen to me before you are my very own, then you are to open this, you understand?"

Signa holds the big envelope at arm's length.

"I understand," she says. "But hadn't you better keep it?" and she laughs.

"No," he says, echoing her laugh; "it is yours, absolutely. It is very ugly, isn't it? Never mind, I will see if I can find enough money to buy an engagement ring——"

Signa laughs.

"Ah, you are making fun of me!" she says.

"No, I am quite serious," he says, but with a happy smile. "Put the ugly blue envelope in your pocket, if you have one."

"I haven't," she admits, piteously; "but I can hide it away. And I am not to open it——"

"Until after our marriage, darling," he says, "or—unless anything should happen to me."

Signa looks at it, pale and troubled; then she holds it out to him.

"I don't think I care for it," she says, with a little pout.

But he gently pushes her hand back. "Take it, my darling," he says. "It is ugly, but it is my wedding-gift!"

And slowly and reluctantly she disposes of it in some feminine hiding-place in her dress.

CHAPTER XXI.

It is the afternoon of the twenty-fourth, the eve of the important day toward which not only Northwell, but nearly all the district has been looking forward with feelings of intense curiosity and excitement. The mere fact of the Grange being reinstated as a habitation would have excited the interest of the county in which the name of Delamere still ranked high; but when added to that fact the story of how and why it came to be so reinstated got about, the curiosity was intensified. That the invitations should be issued in the joint names of Lady Rookwell and Laura Derwent caused much amazement and wonderment, and people did not hesitate to suggest that Laura Derwent had "caught the eccentric Lord Delamere somewhere on the Continent," and that their engagement would be formally announced on the evening of the ball. Not a few raised the voice of censure, and hinted that the whole thing was irregular and scarcely—well, proper; but no one refused the invitation on that account, and those who had not received tickets strove, almost madly, to procure one.

In all, about two hundred were invited—a larger number than Lady Rookwell quite approved of; but Laura Derwent had written to inquire the size of the ballroom and ante rooms, and had told Lady Rookwell to fill them. "They will want airing," she had said; "and as every one who doesn't get a card will be your and my mortal enemy, we had better make as few as possible." For days Lady Rookwell had been busy in the preparation of her list, and when it was completed it showed a catalogue of guests which contained the elite of an aristocratic district, with a sprinkling of the upper middle-class, such as the Jenks and the local professional men, with their wives. Altogether, Lady Rookwell was rather proud of her list.

"It will be a success, my dear," she said to Signa, to whom she confided all her ideas on the subject. "You see, I could have had a title, or something like it, with the whole two hundred, for everybody was anxious to come. Why, the dear old duchess — how I do hate that woman!—actually drove over to call on me the other day, and she hasn't been near me for a year! But, if we had kept it amongst the Olympians, it would have been cold and stiff; and Laura doesn't want that. You see it is a bit of fun!"

"Rather a stupendous bit of fun," said Signa, thinking of all the expense, and the days of hard work—especially of her beloved. And Lady Rookwell had shrugged her shoulders.

"I shan't say anything more about it, my dear," she said. "I gave in when that lover of yours gave in. Of course I think it an awful piece of tomfoolery, and a wicked waste of money—though, after all, the Grange wanted cleaning and doing up! There—I've said my say long ago, and having consented to join the band of lunatics, I must go through with my share of the madness."

As two hundred people cannot be expected to dance without something to eat and drink during the evening, Lady Rookwell had made arrangements with one of the London firms of contractors, and an elaborate preparation had been made in the kitchens, which were to result, so said the contractors, in as handsome a supper and as plentiful a supply of wines and ices as even Miss Laura Derwent could wish.

And now it is the eve of the great day, and Signa, as she sits in the drawing room of the villa—for Lady Rookwell has insisted upon their dining with her, "to talk things over and see if anything has been forgotten"—Signa, as she sits smilingly listening to the flow of sharp, cynical remarks which her ladyship pours out upon men and things, and the coming occasion in particular, is conscious of a strange feeling of suppressed excitement, which Lady Rookwell is sharing with her, if she would but own it.

"If anything goes wrong to-morrow," she says, nodding her head until the diamonds in her cap and ears glitter again, "Laura will never forgive me. The foolish, flighty girl has actually got the thing into the society papers. Look here! here it is in 'The Upper Ten' of the week. Read it, my dear."

And she throws the paper gently into Signa's lap.

"It is said," remarks the paragraph, "that the restoration of N——ll Grange, one of the seats of the Earl of D——e, which he has lent to Miss Laura Derwent for a county dance, has cost an immense sum of money, and that the little party—numbering not less than two hundred—will be one of the most brilliant gatherings of the year. There has been quite a scramble for cards——"

"Shameful! my dear, isn't it?"

"—and the disappointed ones are all tearing their hair. The curious feature of the affair is, that it is not yet known whether the noble owner will be present. If he should be, he would of course be there, in his own house, as a guest. The whole thing is romantic in the extreme, and society is in Miss Derwent's debt for a really substantial sensation. We may add that N——ll Grange is one of the finest specimens of the old fashioned county 'places' that still exist; and it has been long a source of regret in the county that so large and handsome a house should have been closed and neglected."

"Isn't it shameful?" exclaims her ladyship again. "What is the world coming to? You see, they don't dare to print Lord Delamere's name in full, or the house, but they don't hesitate to do so with Laura's name. That's what it is to be a professional beauty; and last week they even hinted in this paper that she and he were engaged."

"Perhaps they are," says Signa, with a smile.

"Of course not! My dear, it is impossible. She only saw the man for an hour or two. Oh, no; if they were engaged, or there was any likelihood, she wouldn't have gone in for this absurd business. Isn't your young man very late?" And she looks at the clock.

Signa colors faintly; she has looked at the clock a dozen times in the last two minutes.

[illegible] the Grange, and he was kept.

"Yes; but there was a great deal to perhaps."

"He has worked like a navvy," says Lady Rookwell. "If Laura does her duty, she will go down on her knees to him!"

"I don't think he'd care about that," laughed Signa.

"And your dress, how about that?" asks Lady Rookwell. "I declare we have none of us given a thought to that! And you, like the idiotic, unselfish child that you are, never mentioned it."

"Oh, my dress is all right," says Signa, leaning back and resting her shapely head in her hands. "I shall wear my Egyptian gauze—I haven't any other—and," quickly, for she sees something hovering on the old lady's lips, "I should prefer it to anything else."

"Well, you are right there, my dear," responds Lady Rookwell, concisely; "it is more distinguished and uncommon looking than anything you could get in London or Paris, either. Hem!"

She puts her hand to her lips, frowns, then leaves the room. When she comes back she has an oblong morocco case in her hand, and pushes it across to Signa with a matter of fact air.

"That's all for you, my dear," she says, as if she were passing her a newspaper or some such trifle. "Wear them to-morrow, and keep them in memory of a disagreeable old woman who was stupid enough to be fond of you."

Signa opens the case and utters a low exclamation, as she sees, reposing in the ruby velvet, a suit of magnificent diamonds and pearls.

"Oh, Lady Rookwell!" she says, with a tone of awe and dismay, but with the light which naturally comes into every girl's eyes at the sight of pretty things. "But—but——"

"Now don't be ungrateful," says the old lady, very brusquely; "for it would be ungrateful to refuse them. I should never forgive you, I shouldn't, indeed."

Signa gets up and crosses over to her and kisses her, which is a great thing for Signa to do, for she is not free with her kisses save to one favored individual.

"I was going to refuse them," she says in a low voice, "but I wish they weren't so—so very valuable, as I know they must be."

"Tush! What's the matter?" retorts her ladyship. "Valuable as they may be, they are of no use to me; I should never wear them; besides I've got too many baubles of the same sort; poor Rookwell was fond of decking me out like an Indian idol. I don't think he ever went to London without bringing me something of the kind. They used to love him at Howell & James' like a brother. I think they'll look nice on your gauze, dear. You can wear the flower spray in your hair. Let me put it—oh! here's one who will do it better," she breaks off, as Hector Warren enters.

Hollanders and Herrings.

Holland can claim the honor of having first established herring fisheries and taught its people the very great nutritious value of this fish. A Dutchman, Wilhelm Benkelszoon, discovered the secret of preserving herrings in the fourteenth century, and the salted herring made its appearance on the market in precisely the same manner as it now does, for the preserving process has undergone no marked change. Your Dutch fisherman is an expert at his job and can manage as many as 1,800 fish in an hour, working at top speed. He ties a short knife to the third and fourth fingers of his right hand by a string, which is attached to the handle of the knife. He thrusts it through the gill cavities and, with a sharp cut, brings away the gills, heart, gullet and pectoral fins of the unfortunate herring.

Women's Time Schedules

Few women speak of a train starting slightly off the even hour, as the 3.02 train for example, or the 3.12. "Three" will do. It bothers a man a heap to go hunting for a 3 o'clock train by feminine directions, when it is a 3.12 train. For some women "3" will do for the 2.54 train. It's near enough. Then the man following feminine directions, unless he is on his guard against these pitfalls, is lost.

Probably, if it were not for his business training, which teaches a man that 3.02 is not 3 and 3.01, not 3.01½, not 3.01¾, but 3.02, he'd be better natured about women's time schedules.—Exchange.

HOW M. C. LINDOS FOUND A CURE IN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

One of the Reasons Why Dodd's Kidney Pills Have Had a Phenomenal Growth of Popularity in the West.

Ellscott, Alta., March 29th.—(Special)—The growth of popularity of Dodd's Kidney Pills in this section of the Great West has been phenomenal. They cure kidney disease. That much has been proved again and again. One of the latest proofs comes from M. C. Lindos, well known and highly respected here.

"Thanking Dodd's Kidney Pills seems a small way of expressing my gratitude," M. C. Lindos states. "I suffered from headaches and dizziness and was unable to find anything that would do me any good. I tried several medicines that were advertised to cure my trouble, but they did not.

"Dodd's Kidney Pills were recommended to me by a friend and I sent for a box and gave them a trial. The result is that I am feeling fine now. I shall always keep a box of Dodd's Kidney Pills handy."

Dodd's Kidney Pills cured M. C. Lindos because the trouble came from the kidneys. Lumbago, rheumatism, dropsy, heart disease, diabetes and Bright's Disease are other troubles that come from sick kidneys. To cure them cure the kidneys with Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"Pray Before Being Married."

Here is a Russian proverb that might be made good use of. It certainly would dispel a multitude of sorrows, especially the last one, which would prevent many hasty marriages and relieve the courts of many divorce cases. It takes matrimony out of the pale of whims and makes a divine consideration of it. The proverb runs this way:

"If you go to war, pray, if you go on a sea journey, pray twice, but pray three times if you are going to be married."

Good advice, all of it. There is too much that is hysterical in the matrimonial venture, and a little praying will tend to relieve the mind.—Ohio State Journal.

Dublin Castle.

Dublin castle has a history of over seven centuries, for it was King John who in 1204 ordered it to be built, "well fortified with good fosses and thick walls strong enough to defend or control the city." Henry III., when about to visit Ireland in 1243, ordered the addition of a hall, "with sufficient windows and glass casements," and other improvements were made in succeeding reigns, particularly by the Duke of Clarence, son of Edward III., who as viceroy spent much money on the castle to make it [illegible] his father complained when called upon to pay! A CURIOUS CUSTOM.

How the Dusky Maidens of Western Africa Win Husbands.

The natives of Western Africa, and especially those on the coast, retain many quaint customs. When a girl has reached her eleventh or twelfth year she is considered quite old enough to enter on to the bonds of matrimony. She is taken to the bank of the nearest river and an offering to the particular deities that she and her tribe worship is made with all due solemnity beside the stream. The dusky maid is then publicly washed in the river; a bracelet of black and white beads and gold is placed around her waist, or, if her family are not rich enough to provide beads of gold, her waist is simply marked with white lines. She is then dressed in the best of the family wardrobe, and is escorted in a procession through the town to show to all beholders of her beauty that she has reached the marrying age. Her hair is fantastically plaited and she is perfumed with scents.

All this done, if she is lucky a number of eligible young bachelors come forward and make offers for her hand and heart, and the match is arranged on a strict cash basis. The preliminaries concluded, the marriage takes place. The bridegroom gives a feast, to which he and his family and the bride and her friends all come. On the day after the feast the bridegroom shows his appreciation of his wife by anointing her head and shoulders with [illegible], and once more there is a procession through the streets of the village.

MARCH WEATHER RHEUMATIC WEATHER

VICTIMS CAN CURE THEMSELVES WITH DR. WILLIAMS' PINK PILLS.

With the coming of March people who are afflicted with rheumatism begin to have unpleasant reminders of their trouble. The weather is changeable — balmy and springlike one day, raw, cold and piercing the next. It is such sudden changes of weather that sets the pangs and tortures of rheumatism, lumbago and sciatica going. But it must be borne in mind that although weather conditions start the pains, the trouble is deeply rooted in the blood, and can only be cured through the blood. All the lotions and liniments in the world can't cure rheumatism. Rubbing may seem to ease the pain while you are rubbing, but there its value ends. Only through the blood can you cure rheumatism. That's why Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have so many thousands of cures of this trouble to their credit. The new, rich blood which they actually make drives out the poisonous acid and rheumatism is vanquished. Among many sufferers from rheumatism who have been cured by this medicine is Mr. P. H. Miller, freight shed foreman for the G. T. R. at Peterboro, who says: "In the course of my work I am naturally exposed to all kinds of weather, with the result that about two years ago I contracted rheumatism which settled in my legs. At times I could scarcely walk, and often had to quit my day's work owing to the stiffness and the pain. I tried different remedies without getting any help until I began the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. I used six boxes of these and can say that I am about as well as ever I was. I still take the pills occasionally, and I hope that my experience may be of benefit to some other rheumatic sufferer."

If you suffer from rheumatism, or any other disease of the blood, begin to cure yourself today with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

Growth of a German Word.

Among the Hottentots (in German Hottentotten) many marsupials are found. The works on natural history do not reveal this fact, but the story is as good as if they did.

When the marsupials are caught they are put into a cage, there known as kotter, provided with a cover to keep out the rain (the cover is called in German lattengitter). The cage then becomes known as lattengitterwetterkotter and the marsupial, after his imprisonment in one of them is a lattengitterwetterkotterbeutelratte.

One day an assassin (in German attentater) was arrested for an attempt on the life of a Hottentot woman, the mother of two stuttering and stupid children, who was called, on this account, Hottentottenstrottertrottelmutter. The malefactor was confined in a marsupial's cage, whence he escaped. He was recaptured by a Hottentot, who put him in a safe place, and came to the chief of the nearest German South African station and said, with beaming eyes, for he thought he had mastered the German tongue:

"I have captured the beutelratte!"

"What beutelratte?" asked the chief. "We have several."

"The attentaterlattengitterwetterkotterbeutelratte."

"But of which attentater are you speaking?"

"Of the Hottentottenstrottertrottelmutterattentater."

"Ah! Then why do you not at once say the Hottentottenstrottertrottelmutterattentaterlattengitterwetterkotterbeutelratte?"

Whereupon and naturally the Hottentot fled in dismay.—Los Angeles Times.

Difference in Complexions.

The difference in the complexions of people is due to the varying amounts of pigment. Very dark people, those with dark eyes and dark hair, have a great deal of this coloring material in their cells. A great many people are neither light nor very dark. They have less than the dark-complexioned people and more than the light-complexioned people. When the hair turns gray it is because the pigment has disappeared. As this is due to the loss of this coloring material, dark complexioned people turn grey sooner than light-complexioned people. The structure of the skin showing how these cells are made in layers can be seen by examining the skin with a microscope.

The Bluebeard of Belgium

Von Bissing, Lying Desperately Ill, Believes Himself the Victim of a Woman's Curse.

Although only a brief paragraph has been permitted to appear in the British newspaper announcing that Von Bissing, the "Bluebeard of Belgium," is ill and unable to perform his official duties, secret sources of information enable me to inform my readers that the slave driver is in a very dangerous condition, and any moment may bring news that his ignominious life has drawn to a close.

He lies on a bed racked with pain, and occasionally tosses wildly in delirium as ghosts of his victims—old men who have dared to thwart his will; young women who have battled bitterly but ineffectually to preserve that priceless jewel, honor; pretty girls, who have to their unspeakable sorrow momentarily captivated his wayward, licentious fancy; babies he has butchered; and sweethearts he has torn asunder—rise in grim procession before him.

As I have already emphasized, Von Bissing's life from his youth upwards has been one long succession of drunken, cruel, and immoral acts, which have ruined a constitution which those of us who knew him in his early days thought was made of iron. Drugs have followed drink; and now, lying on what may prove to be his deathbed, the Bluebeard of Belgium has frequently to resort to the most hideous of all anodynes, cocaine, in order to shut out the terrifying visions which persistently rise to torture him.

How Von Bissing added to his already long list of vices by becoming a slave to cocaine is a story which throws an interesting sidelight on the terrible state of nerves prevailing during the last two years among the Kaiser's officers.

THE COILS OF COCAINE.

To be depraved was to be admired. Wild orgies of vice were of daily—or rather nightly—occurrence. A time arrived when on many an exhausted constitution drink failed to have any stimulating effect. Thus it came about that cocaine, the most demoralising of drugs, was introduced to be taken like snuff. There is no physique so exhausted that cocaine, taken in sufficient quantities, will not revitalise it. But the drug's effect on a man's character is appalling. It turns human beings into fiends.

General Von Falkenhayn, the man who is at present most prominent in the eyes of the Huns, who will probably succeed Hindenburg in the supreme command, and who aided and abetted Von Bissing in carrying out some of his most disgusting orgies, was one of the first highly placed officers of the Kaiser to become a victim of cocaine.

It was when Von Bissing, fourteen months after the occupation of Belgium, complained to Von Falkenhayn, his bosom friend, that the orgies in which he indulged, added to his own increased responsibilities, were undermining his health and sapping his vitality, that Falkenhayn suggested the use of the drug—in whose tight coils he himself was already grasped.

Always ready for a new sensation, Von Bissing listened eagerly to the praises which the man who is the Kaiser's right hand brain poured out about the effects of cocaine—its initial soothing influence, its power to transport one into realms of ecstasy, its ability to shut out for the moment all care and trouble, and its superiority as a potent drug over the opium which the slave-driver of Belgium had been in the habit of occasionally using.

Von Bissing could never take anything in moderation. He was a glutton in all things except virtue and straightforwardness, which he hated. And he took to the drug which Von Falkenhayn had recommended as a duck takes to water.

WHIPPED THE DOCTOR.

Strong man as he was, he could not leave off cocaine once it had got him in its toils. His passion for it grew to such an extent that on one occasion, when the eminent doctor who had been called in to attend him remonstrated on the limits to which he had carried the vice and refused to supply any more of the deadly white powder, Von Bissing sprang madly from his bed, seized a heavy riding whip, and frenziedly belabored the distinguished medico across the head, face and shoulders until, bathed in blood, he was allowed to stagger from the apartment on the direct understanding that he returned within ten minutes with a liberal supply of cocaine.

I met the doctor two or three minutes after he had left Von Bissing, and had the story from his own lips, so that I can vouch for its truth.

Von Bissing believes that a terrible curse called down upon him by a beautiful woman whom he sent to her death is being fulfilled. He believes that because of this curse, ruin, blindness and some terrible disease will overtake him before death supervenes.

The story of this curse, which is here related for the first time, is one of the most strange and dramatic tales even in the bloody history of Belgium.

HER FATAL BEAUTY.

The opening scene is laid in the early days of terror in Belgium, when Von Bissing, revelling in the newfound power and the opportunities for indulging to the full his vitiated tastes for licentiousness, cruelty and greed, seized every possible opportunity to ride in State through the streets of Antwerp, where he was then quartered.

On one occasion, a short time after I had had an audience with him, Von Bissing was riding, proud as the proverbial peacock, through the residential quarter of the city, received with the homage of a King. The business I had had to transact with him was of the most confidential and important nature and required some delicate negotiations on the part of both of us.

For this reason Von Bissing had during the previous three or four days, in the course of which I was constantly in his company, kept remarkably sober, and had, to the best of my belief, refrained from those orgies which subsequently made him a mental, moral and physical wreck. At that time the cocaine habit had not gripped him.

But when the business had been completed, and the necessary documents signed, Von Bissing felt that his virtuous period had lasted long enough, and decided that it was time a fresh victim fell into his toils.

Thus, on the occasion referred to he was "out to conquer." Riding slowly along, he saw through the window of a house a vision of loveliness putting the finishing touches to her toilet.

The gleam of a white [illegible] caught his eye, and for a fraction of time he gazed on a beautifully rounded arm coiling up tresses of silky black on to a small, shapely head.

Von Bissing gripped his reins tighter, as, in one quick, comprehensive glance, he took in the delicate rosebud lips, the dimple in the perfectly-formed cheek, and the aristocratic aquiline nose, which to him conveyed evidence of birth and breeding. I witnessed the whole of the incident. It occupied less than two minutes. Then the lady chanced to look down into the street (I should explain that the houses in this part of the city are very low built), and something between a blush of shame and a glance of terror covered her face. To lower the blind was the work of a second.

But the mischief had been done. Von Bissing had seen; seeing, he coveted and, coveting, he determined to possess.

A DIABOLICAL PLOT.

His position in Belgium as regards women at this time was unique. He might be likened to a Sultan ruling over a harem, except that the women from whom he could pick and choose by exercising his brutal authority could be numbered by the thousand against a Sultan's dozen.

In order to save any pain, I will simply call her Madame Theresa.

When I go further into the details of this terrible episode I am led to the conclusion that Madame Theresa, because she knew she was beautiful, because she knew Von Bissing's evil character, and because of the incident I have related, was terror-stricken, and for a short time afterwards kept to her house out of the Bluebeard's sight.

Powerful as he was, Von Bissing could find no excuse for visiting either the lady or her husband openly, even if such a method had suited his purpose. Nevertheless the desire to possess her increased with every hour.

Then in his mind there formed a plot as diabolical as anything of which he has ever been guilty. His cunning brain took a fiendish delight in working out the various details until they were perfect.

Sending for one of the many clever spies by whom he was always surrounded, Von Bissing handed the fellow a document he had prepared, with instructions to secure a situation as butler or footman in the employment of Madame Theresa's husband, and seize the first opportunity to secrete the document in a cabinet. The faked document purported to prove beyond any shadow of doubt that the prominent citizen was lending large sums of money to the Allies' cause. Under the existing military law of Belgium such an act was punishable by death.

VON BISSING'S BARGAIN.

It was quite an easy matter for the spy to secure the situation selected by Von Bissing, for at the time of which I speak servants were at a premium. Three days after the spy had been installed his wicked mission was accomplished and private word of his success was sent to Von Bissing.

The Bluebeard acted instantly. He ordered a search to be made by a party of soldiers. The incriminating document was found. A short secret trial was held, and Von Bissing ordered the accused man to be shot at dawn the following morning.

A few hours after the mockery of a trial had ended and the dread sentence had been passed a beautiful, anguished woman craved audience of Von Bissing. It was as he had anticipated. It was Madame Theresa.

Von Bissing drank in every word of Madame Thersa's plea for mercy, and then in the cold-blooded manner he could assume when the occasion suited he cruelly told her the only condition on which her husband's life could be spared at his hand.

She was to give herself wholly to Von Bissing.

And as part of his diabolical scheme the slave-driver gave Madame Theresa a period of two hours to think over his proposal, during which time she was to be permitted a last interview with her husband, who was in a room a short distance away.

Since he had seen her dressing at the window Von Bissing had not been idle concerning Madame Theresa's domestic affairs. On his behalf trusted spies discovered that the beautiful woman was passionately in love with her husband, that no breath of scandal had ever touched her name, and that the fact of their being childless seemed to have drawn the couple together in a bond of love remarkable in its strength and tenderness.

With this knowledge Von Bissing calculated to a certainty that at that last interview, when the life of the man she loved hung suspended by a hair, when heart was bared to heart and they stood, as it were, on the threshold of eternity, Madame Theresa's love would overcome her moral scruples, and that when time was up he would find her clasped in his arms.

THE WAY OF ESCAPE.

After the woman had left the room Von Bissing paced up and down in a fever of excitement. His unsteadied soul craved for nothing else in the world at the moment as it craved for this woman. The minutes seemed to drag by.

At length the two fateful hours elapsed. Von Bissing struck a bell on his writing table, and, his hands trembling a little in anticipation of the love feast he expected shortly to enjoy, he ordered the guard who appeared to acquaint Madame Theresa that her period of grace had expired.

The door of the room into which the interview had taken place was opened. A sort of cry fell from the lips of the guard. There was no reply.

Hearing the ensuing commotion, Von Bissing sprang swiftly forward, a cold fear clutching at his heart. He rushed into the room.

Clasped tightly in death on the floor of the apartment lay the man he had sought to kill and the woman he had sought to dishonor. On the table was an empty laudanum bottle. They had escaped from the toils of Von Bissing by taking their own lives. The monster's prey had slipped through his fingers at the eleventh hour!

On the other side of the table lay a letter written by the heroic wife. It was addressed to Von Bissing. Opening it, he found that prior to crossing that small borderland which divides life from death the unfortunate woman he had sent to her doom had, in the name of the women of Belgium, laid upon him a fearful curse.

Von Bissing handed the letter to one of the officers who was present.

"I won't repeat the words in that letter," said the officer to me afterwards, "but they sent a cold shiver up my spine. I am not a superstitious man, but I thanked my stars that I was not in Von Bissing's shoes."

"And how did Von Bissing take it?" I asked.

"For a moment his face turned grey under its tan. Then, folding up the paper, he walked into his own room, dipped the letter into the fire, and coolly used it to light a fresh cigar!"

But that was mere bravado. Von Bissing has never forgot that curse. And my word may be taken that it is the memory of it which is causing the Bluebeard of Belgium to toss in such awful torture on his sick bed. However long he lives, the curse of the beautiful heroine of Antwerp will haunt him to his dying day.

SUCCESS WITH THE FARM INCUBATOR

When and What to Buy--Points of Management Explained--Methods As Followed by Most Successful Poultrymen.

(By M. A. Jull, Macdonald College, Quebec.)

The use of incubators has steadily increased to a remarkable extent during the past decade. This fact is very plainly shown in the growth and multiplication of manufacturing concerns. It is doubtless true that the incubator is largely responsible for the rapid growth and development of our poultry industry. The incubator is one of the most popular farm appliances of to-day.

AN INCUBATOR OR NOT?

Where one hundred or less chicks are to be hatched, the natural method will be more economical as well as more satisfactory. Providing conditions are suitable and the sitting hens are properly managed, they will usually do better work than the incubator. As far as we know, hens will raise stronger chicks, and the fact that hen-hatched chicks are brooded in smaller numbers than where artificial methods are employed is an advantage.

On the other hand artificial incubation is a success. The Maine Experiment Station has been hatching and raising chicks by artificial methods only for the past 10 years, and Dr. Pearl feels convinced that the constitutional vigor of the successive generations has not been impaired.

Where one hundred or more chicks are to be hatched, the use of the incubator may prove a distinct advantage. The management of the incubator often entails less work than looking after a number of sitting hens, the work is more convenient and sanitary, and the incubator is one means of checking the spread of poultry lice.

Local conditions should determine whether hens or the incubator should be used in hatching the chicks. Chicks may be hatched in thousands by the natural or the artificial method. Take for instance, the method of hatching chicks at Petaluma, California, as compared with the method employed at Little Compton, Rhode Island. In the million-hen district of California, the largest poultry centre in the world, the chickens are hatched in incubators exclusively, while at Little Compton, famous as a poultry centre, the chicks are hatched almost entirely under hens.

More incubators are being used in Canada than ever before, and this is an evidence of the growth of the industry. More of our farmers are using incubators, which means that more farmers are keeping larger flocks.

As in natural incubation, so in the artificial hatching of chicks, heat is the prime factor. Given a hatchable egg, the continuous application of a proper degree of heat for a sufficient length of time will produce a chick. The normal temperature of fowls is about 106 degrees, and the usual temperature of eggs under hens is about 102 degrees. Where incubators are used, natural conditions must prevail as far as possible, or, in other words, success depends upon how closely conditions approximate those found under the sitting hen.

The problem in the operation of the incubator is to maintain a temperature of approximately 103 degrees, with other conditions to which an egg is subjected when incubated under a hen.

MUST CAREFULLY REGULATE.

Although many of the incubators on the market to-day are, practically speaking, duplications of standard makes, there are good and poor machines. It pays to buy a well made machine, and it is usually a poor investment to purchase a cheap incubator. The various makes of incubators are something like the strains in breeds; there are good and poor strains in the various breeds, and there are good and poor individuals in each strain. The higher grade machines give best satisfaction in the long run. Hot-air machines are commonly preferred to hot-water ones. The principle of heating the egg chamber is different, though the same results are accomplished.

It is generally advisable for the beginner to follow the directions furnished with the incubator. These instructions may not be exactly adapted to every locality, but until experience is gained they afford the best starting point. When knowledge is gained concerning the effect of local conditions in the operation of the incubator, the method should be adapted to suit those conditions.

The incubator should be located in a well ventilated cellar or room, which is free from draughts. The best incubator cellar I have worked in was in West Virginia, where the incubator room was built, half in the ground—four feet in the ground with a three-foot wall above ground. Windows were on all sides, providing plenty of light and ventilation. In a basement such as this the room temperature is quite constant and this is important. I do not know that a dry room is absolutely necessary, because I have observed good results in damp cellars. Fresh air seems to be the important factor.

All incubators, and particularly new ones, should be started a few days before filling with eggs. An even temperature of 103 degrees must be maintained, and to do this the heat regulator must be properly adjusted before incubation begins. When cold eggs are placed in the incubator the temperature will naturally fall, but when it rises to 103 degrees incubation starts.

It is advisable to thoroughly disinfect the incubator before and after each hatch. Use a ten per cent. solution of a standard commercial disinfectant and apply with a scrubbing brush or rag.

The lamp is filled once a day and this is best done in the morning after the eggs have been turned. Do not handle eggs when the hands are smeared with coal oil. The flame should always be smooth, with well-rounded corners. Remove the charred portions of the wick with the fingers, and be very sure that the ends of the flame do not flare up, as this often causes smoking and consequently an uneven temperature.

Turning the eggs usually begins on the third day and is continued until about the eighteenth day. The eggs are shuffled much the same way as the hen shuffles the eggs in her nest. It is found that turning twice a day is sufficient.

AIR AND TURN EGGS.

The airing or cooling of the eggs is accomplished when the eggs are turned. The time required in turning is sufficient time for airing during the first few days, but after that the eggs may be left out until almost cool to the touch. The warmer the weather the longer the eggs may be aired. Airing is discontinued at the same time as turning.

Testing is usually done for the first test on the seventh day, for the second test, on the fourteenth or fifteenth day. In large hatcheries the first test is sometimes made on the fourth or fifth day, particularly where white shelled eggs are being incubated.

To adjust the ventilation and moisture in the incubator chamber correctly is a task in itself. Much has been written concerning the factors of ventilation and moisture and yet much of the information is ambiguous and contradictory. The supply of carbon dioxide is closely associated with ventilation. The most authentic results seem to prove that carbon dioxide can be supplied excessively and that in large amounts it is injurious to the developing embryos. The same results go to show that a liberal amount of oxygen is necessary. The ventilators in the incubator should be opened wider as the hatch proceeds, being wide open during the later part of the hatch.

In regard to moisture little need be said as all that seems necessary is to provide the egg chamber with a certain amount of moisture for a greater part of the hatch. No definite rule can be laid down as to the exact amount of moisture needed, as local conditions exert considerable influence. I have seen incubators running in damp cellars where no moisture was supplied, and I have also seen moisture supplied to the egg chamber and water thrown upon the floor. Some incubators are supplied with moisture pans. Sometimes throwing water upon the floor daily is sufficient. The object in supplying moisture is to prevent too rapid evaporation of the watery content. The egg is from 60 to 65 per cent. water and it has a porous shell. When being incubated the water evaporates rapidly, hence more must be supplied. For all practical purposes it seems best to supply moisture throughout the hatch.

STARTING NEW INCUBATOR.

The incubator should not be disturbed on the day of the hatch. It is well to darken the chamber, so that the chicks will remain quietly and will not crowd to the front of the door. Personally I like to keep them on the tray until taken out. The temperature should be lowered gradually and when about 24 hours old the chicks and one-half balls of fluff can be removed to the brooder.

How to Use Cheap Cuts

It takes more knowledge of cookery to make the cheap cuts of meat palatable than it does for the dear cuts. One has to contend with toughness and lack of flavor. The toughness may be overcome by slow cooking, and vegetables and herbs will add the flavor. Meats may be cooked in a number of ways, without being allowed to reach the boiling point. One may cook them slowly on the back of the coal range or use the simmerer on the gas stove. Then there is the fireless cooker and the double boiler, both of which insure safe cooking without any danger of burning the food. And the casserole furnishes another splendid way.

The following directions are for using the toughest and least promising cuts of meat:

STEWED SHIN OF BEEF.

Four pounds of shin of beef, 1 medium-sized onion, 1 whole clove and a small bay leaf, 1 sprig of parsley, 1½ tablespoonfuls of flour, 1 small slice of carrot, ½ tablespoonful of salt, ⅛ teaspoonful of pepper, 2 quarts of boiling water, 1½ tablespoonfuls of butter or savory drippings.

Have the butcher cut the bone in several pieces. Put all the ingredients but the flour and butter into a stewpan and bring to a boil. Set the pan where the liquid will just simmer for six hours, or after boiling for five or ten minutes, put all into the fireless cooker for eight or nine hours. With the butter, flour and one half cupful of the clear soup from which the fat has been removed, make a brown sauce; to this add the meat and the marrow removed from the bone. Heat and serve. The remainder of the liquid in which the meat has been cooked may be used for soup.

BOILED BEEF WITH HORSERADISH SAUCE.

Plain boiled beef may also be served with horseradish sauce, and makes a palatable dish. A little chopped parsley sprinkled over the meat when served is considered an improvement by many persons. For the sake of variety the meat may be browned like pot roast before serving.

Horseradish sauce is made by adding grated horseradish and a little vinegar to a little whipped cream, or as follows: Thicken milk with cracker crumbs by heating them together in a double boiler, using three tablespoonfuls of cracker crumbs to one and a half cups of milk. Add one-third of a cupful of grated horseradish, three tablespoonfuls of butter and one-half teaspoonful of salt; or thicken with butter and flour some of the water in which the meat was boiled, add a generous quantity (1 or 2 tablespoonfuls) of grated horseradish, boil a short time, and serve. This recipe is the most used in German homes where the sauce is a favorite.

SCOTCH BROTH.

Three pounds of mutton, 2 tablespoonfuls of pearl barley, 2 tablespoonfuls of minced onion, 2 tablespoonfuls of minced carrot, 2 tablespoonfuls of minced celery, 2 teaspoonfuls of salt, 1 teaspoonful of pepper, 1 tablespoonful of minced parsley, 2 quarts of cold water.

Remove the bones and all the fat from the mutton, cut the meat into small pieces and put it into a stewpan with the water, chopped vegetables, barley and all the seasoning excepting the parsley. It will be found convenient to tie the bones in a piece of thin white cloth before adding them to the other ingredients. Bring the stew to a simmer for three hours, thicken with the flour, and add the chopped parsley.

A POPE'S LOVE AFFAIR

Before He Took Orders Letters Were Intercepted.

The appointment of Count de Salis as British Minister to the Vatican, in succession to Sir Henry Howard, recalls a love romance of a Pope. This Pontiff was Pius IX., and the lady, Miss Foster, daughter of Dr. Foster, Bishop of Kilmore, and sister of a Countess de Salis, third wife of the present Count's great-grandfather, Jerome Count de Salis.

Miss Foster and her sister were nieces of John Foster, last Speaker of the Irish House of Commons, who was created Lord Oriel, and is represented to-day by Lord Massereene and Ferrard.

Pius IX. has gone down to posterity as a liberal and enlightened occupant of the Papal throne, but few admirers—admirers of a great cleric who carried out his own liberal views—are aware that but for a love affair with which his family interfered and determinedly upset, he would never have entered the church.

A young Italian of good family, Count Giovanni Mastai Ferretti, as he was then, entered the Guardia Nobile, an naturally mixed in the most exclusive Italian society. Miss Foster, a lovely girl, went to Italy to stay with her sister, Countess de Salis, and there met the handsome young Italian officer, Count Giovanni Mastai Ferretti, the couple being mutually attracted. The Count—an honorable, chivalrous, generous, and disinterested man, as his whole life showed—proposed, was accepted, and the wedding day fixed.

But when the day arrived the Count was not at the church. The would-be bride waited for a long time, but he never arrived, and not for years afterwards did she learn the reason, and know that he had after all been faithful.

The explanation was simple. The Count came of a Jesuit family, who had estimated his value to the Church, and determined that it should possess him. Letters were intercepted, and being persuaded that the beautiful Irish girl had ceased to love him, he took orders, and was sent to the West Indies. His true worth soon told; he became a Bishop, an Archbishop, and Pope on the death of Gregory XVI. He learnt (how it is not stated) of his family's deceit, and on the day he ascended the Papal throne he revealed the fact that he was the Count Mastai Ferretti who had failed to keep his wedding-morn engagement with Miss Foster.

Thus was the truth revealed to the woman who had loved him.

Duty makes us do things well, but love makes us do them beautifully.—Phillips Brooks.

A countryman is as warm in fustian as a king in velvet, and a truth is as comfortable in homely language as in fine speech.—Spurgeon.

ON HER

RAISED PHLEGM AND BLOOD.

Never neglect what at first seems to be but a slight cold. You think perhaps you are strong enough to fight it off, but colds are not so easily fought off in this northern climate, and if they are not attended to at once will sooner or later develop into some serious lung trouble such as bronchitis, pneumonia, and perhaps that dreadful disease, consumption.

Miss Kasye McDonald, Sydney Mines, N.S., writes: "Last winter I contracted a severe cold, had it settled on my lungs. I would cough and raise phlegm and blood. I had the cough for a month, and had medicine from the doctor, but it did not seem to do me any good. I really thought I had consumption.

My friends advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which I did, and it gave me great relief. I am very glad I used "Dr. Wood's," and would recommend it to every one."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's," when you ask for it as there are a number of imitations on the market, which some dealers may try to palm off on you as the genuine.

See that it is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees is the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—Wholesale trade is not showing the increases that were expected, although the activity in dry goods lines is well sustained, with textiles badly needed, and with a number of mills sold for as far ahead as they care to book orders. The railway situation is still to be reckoned with as a deterrent of business. Wholesale dry goods business is reported as fair, and the spring openings have been only moderately successful, and although orders have been placed with the mills earlier than usual, many manufacturers have served notice that no more could be taken for 1917 delivery. The steel trade is quiet at the excessive prices. Hardware lines are rather quiet, except for the munition business. Groceries are not above normal. The tea market is stronger. The leather trade is quiet. Collections are fair to good, with failures below the average for this season of the year.

Montreal—Railway difficulties still confront trade, and curtailment in business has been the result. Deliveries of dry goods orders are much behind time on account of the inability of mills to make deliveries. The leather market is rather quieter than it was a short time ago, but prices are firmly maintained. Liberal orders are still being received by wholesale dry goods firms. Groceries are unchanged from last week, except that teas are firmer. More uncertainty about future conditions is noted in trade circles.

Ottawa—The retail movement of merchandise is proving satisfactory to a majority of dealers, and increases over last year, while not large in many cases, are still in the majority. Fall orders have been fair in most lines. Collections are fair.

Hamilton—Spring trade is proving quite satisfactory to local retail firms. Buying has been impaired to some extent by high prices for food commodities on foodstuffs, but the scale of wages which is at present in force is enabling the average wage-earner to maintain quite as good a standard of living as twelve or eighteen months ago. An increased number of smaller subscriptions to the war loan furnish an index of the large number of small savings accounts. Dry goods lines are fairly active. Local industries are busy, and collections are fair.

London—Prospects for a healthy spring and summer trade still look good. Wholesale and retail lines generally are doing nice business.

Winnipeg—Wholesale trade is experiencing a fairly active spring business, and city retail trade looks promising when spring buying commences in earnest. An increased acreage of wheat, especially in the newer districts, seems likely for this year. There is a good enquiry for spring merchandise, and the outlook is quite promising.

Calgary—Trade is easily better than that of the corresponding period of last year, and there is a general confidence on the part of wholesalers and jobbers as well as retailers that the spring will witness a broadening out of business. Reports from Regina, Saskatoon and Edmonton reflect optimism. Payments are being fairly well met.

Vancouver—Industries throughout British Columbia are in a flourishing condition. The real output for 1917 promises to be larger than ever before in the history of the province. Mercantile trade is showing improvement and payments are generally satisfactory.

St. John—From what can be gathered it would seem that the lumber cut in New Brunswick will be smaller this year. Present prices, however, likely to be maintained for a time at least. Collections fair. No important failures.

Many Women Suffer From Pains in the Back.

When the back begins to ache it is a sure sign that there is something radically wrong with the kidneys.

What you want is a kidney medicine. Doan's Kidney Pills are not a cure all but a medicine for the kidneys only.

Mrs. L. Morrison, Hampton, N.S., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills have been for me. For years I had suffered so with my back I could hardly do my housework. I tried several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief. I have used five boxes and to-day I feel like a new woman. I would recommend them to all."

Doan's Kidney Pills bear the trade mark of a Maple Leaf and are put up in an oblong grey box. See that you get "Doan's" when you ask for them.

Price 50c. a box, 3 for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Mr. Andrew Alexander sold his farm to Mr. Lambertus of the 10th con. Greenock. We all welcome Mr. Lambertus among us.

Mr. Herb Pearson has been called to Galt to superintend the flying gang that keeps the road in shape for the fast trains to Elora. Mr. Herb Allen has been appointed Mr. Pearson's successor here.

Mrs. Jno. Seiler sr. has the distinction of knitting more sox for the soldiers in the trenches than any society or individual in the neighbourhood. She is seventy-seven years old and has faithfully stayed on the job till she has reached 87 pair. We would like to hear who has done more.

Mr. W. Reynolds, 'Sunny Jim', has severed his connections with the G. T. R. here and left for his home in London last Saturday. Mr. Reynolds' absence will be keenly felt here. He was the "Oliver Goldsmith" for Eden Grove. Just before the 3 o'clock train arrived a large number of his friends gathered at the depot and presented the following:—

Eden Grove, March 31st 1917.

To Mr. W. J. Reynolds,
Eden Grove.

Dear Mr. Reynolds:—

It is with sincere regret that we learn of your departure from among us. There were few indeed who had the prosperity of the place more at heart than yourself and the skill and ability with which you managed your affairs as Grand Trunk Agent, and the active part you took in Social and Church Work has won for yourself a crown of joy and rejoicing which shall never fade in our minds.

Your literary talent alone was a tribute to the village as the surrounding country looked eagerly for the weekly locals. We ask you to accept this sum of money, not for its real worth but for the spirit that impelled the people of the village to do something towards what might make you feel how you were appreciated as a man of ripe scholarship and refined tastes.

Signed on behalf of your Friends:—P. O'Reilly, F. E. Desmond, Jno. Seiler, Thos. Burell & Son, H. Pearson, Albert Pinkerton, W. J. McKeeman, Jos. Cunningham, R. J. Nesbitt, D. J. Robinson, Neil McFarlane, Alex McKeeman.

MILDMAY

Mrs. Peter Kaufmann of the 10th concession is sick this week with pleurisy.

Rev. Mr. Moore of Victoria College was in charge of the services in the Methodist Church, Sunday. Mr. Moore, who is one of the college soloists sang two solos during the evening services.

It is rumoured around here that summonses will be served to a couple of men who secretly were enjoying some of the stuff they were wont to enjoy before Sept. 16th, 1916.

Mrs. Lucas who has been making her home with her daughter, Mrs. George Lambert, is seriously ill this week.

The farmers who brought in hogs last Saturday, and a large number did, were lucky as they received $15.25 a cwt. They surely had reason to smile.

An auction sale of the furnishings of the Methodist parsonage was held on Saturday afternoon. Most of the articles offered were sold at good prices.

Mr. Gideon Schneider's auction sale on Friday was well attended. The farmers were eager to bid and so good prices were paid.

EAST BRUCE

Mr. Andrew Colwell is down from Weyburn, Sask. to visit his mother and other members of the family.

Mr. Geo. Pace and G. W. Ritchie attended the Spring Assizes at Walkerton as Jurors.

Hugh McDonald of Tiverton made a business trip through here last week.

Mr. Allan McKinnon is under the Doctor's care.

Mr. Sturgeon of Detroit and Miss McArthur of Toronto attended the funeral of the late Peter McArthur.

Another of the pioneers of this section was called away by the Angel of Death in the person of the late Peter McArthur on March 27th. Deceased was born in Scotland and when a young lad came to Canada with his parents. When the Queen bush was for sale he came with his parents to Lovat where he died. He helped to clear the bush into a fertile field and lived to see the fruits of his labour. He was a prominent member of the Masonic Lodge and the I. O. O. F. He was buried by the members of the I. O. O. F. on Friday the 30th. He was Liberal in politics and Presbyterian in religion. He married Mary Campbell who still survives him with a family of three boys, John and James at home and Douglas of Toronto; three girls, Mrs. Sturgeon of Detroit, and Edna and Winnie at home. Rev. Mr. Little conducted the service and the funeral was largely attended. Interment was made at Willow Creek Cemetery.

JOHNSTON'S CORNERS

Mr. and Mrs. James McCarter spent a few days in Toronto last week on business, and before returning they visited some of their relatives and friends and report a good time.

Mr. Jack Lundy and son Ed. have been pretty busy lately cutting wood in Mr. Rennie's bush, as Jack has generally a good supply of wood on hand he is not expecting to face a wood famine next winter.

One of the "Maple Syrup Kings" of near Cargill sold a considerable quantity of the Pure Goods last week on this line. No adulterated stuff for our people.

Some of our farmers intend having wood-bees soon. We wonder if any of them will give us a dance in the evening, as our young folks like to have a good time after a day's work.

Mr. Joe Ernest got his two big piles of wood cut up last week, and now he is busy at splitting and getting it piled up before the spring rush comes on.

FORMOSA

Mr. George A. Reinhardt moved into town this week from Culross.

Mr. and Mrs. Alphonse Vogt, Matthew Kempel, and Leander Kuhry left this week for Saskatchewan where they have been engaged to work for the coming summer on the big fifteen hundred acre farm belonging to Mr. Robert Trench of Teeswater.

Master Dan Elphick of Pinkerton is the new employee at A. J. Hanmore's livery barn.

A very quiet wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Reid at high noon on Wednesday last, when their daughter, Miss Emma, became the bride of Mr. George Brownscombe, Rev. R. Gale officiating. After the ceremony about seventy-five guests sat down to a sumptuous dinner. Both bride and groom are well known here and have our best wishes for a happy voyage over the matrimonial sea.

Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Almack and babe spent a few days last week with Rev. Creighton in Paisley.

Miss Loretta Mahoney of Southampton is visiting at her home here.

Mr. Fred Hamilton is visiting his brother George, in Chesley.

Mr. A. J. Hanmore attended a reception given his brother, Capt. Hanmore at his home in Vesta on Thursday night. The Capt. was presented with a purse of gold.

To Improve Party-Line Service

WE suggest consideration for the persons who may be talking on your party-line. Do not interrupt their conversation. It is discourteous and unfair.

1. Answer only your own signal. If there is any confusion about the rings, report the fact promptly to the Chief Operator.
2. When you wish to call, remove the receiver and listen. If the line is in use hang up the receiver and wait until the conversation is finished.
3. Do not allow children or others to listen on the line when it is in use or to play with the telephone at any time.
4. Make your calls as brief as possible. Short conversations will keep the line open and make the service of most value to everyone.

Suing For Damages

R. E. Truax & Son are suing the C. P. R. in Division Court for damages due to freight being delayed in shipment.

High Prices For Cattle

Prices paid here on Tuesday for cattle by J. J. Zettler the local drover, give an idea of how the producer of beef cattle are faring at present. For four cows Wm. Schleiff got $169. For three two year olds and one cow Mr. James Lamb was paid $181.60. Thomas Steele received $200 for 3 heifers, and John Lamb $115 for a two year old steer.

Quietly Slipped Away

Mrs. Florence Griffin, an East Ward woman, whose children are wards of the Children's Aid Society, gathered her family and household goods together and quietly slipped away last Thursday morning. She hired a teamster to take her goods to Hanover, from which point they were shipped presumably to Toronto. Two of her three children had been left in her charge by the Society and she managed to get her nine year old boy away from his foster home in town before leaving. Mrs. Griffin's husband, who is an Old Countryman, is at the Front.

Off for the Front

Miss Thirsk, who has been Supt. of the Bruce County Hospital, the last four years, left on Tuesday for London to report for Overseas duty. On Monday evening Miss Thirsk was given a formal farewell at the Soldiers Birthday Party. Mayor Johnston, on behalf of the town, presented her with the usual gold piece which is given to all Walkerton soldiers or nurses who go to the Front. Addresses were also made by Rev. Thos. Wilson, J. A. Rowland, D. Robertson and others, expressing appreciation of Miss Thirsk's good work here in connection with the hospital, and wishing her godspeed. Sergt. Art. Taggart told of the noble work that is being done by the nurses at the Front.

Killed in Action

Mr. Sam Truax has received a letter from the Chaplain of the Battalion to which his son, Corp. Everett, belonged, stating that Everett, who had been reported "died of wounds" on March 11th, had been killed instantly. As Everett was alongside of several chums in the Mortar Battery, it is expected that fuller particulars will be received from some of the Walkerton boys before long. We republish the letter from the Chaplain below:—

France, March 12th, 1917.

Dear Mr. Truax:—

You have my very warm sympathy in the heroic death of your beloved son, E. A. Truax, No 120,303, who was a Corporal in the Brigade Trench Mortar Battery attached to the 50th Can. Battalion. He was instantly killed while at his post of duty on March 11, 1917 and was buried by me to-day according to the beautiful service in the Church of England in the Villers-au-Bois Military Cemetery. We reverently and solemnly laid his mortal remains to rest in a single grave, number 20—Row E, plot 6, which will be marked by a neat wooden cross suitably inscribed. All was done that could be done under the sad circumstances I assure you and we all mourn with you the great loss of a true and noble boy, who so bravely faced all danger and in the end gave his precious life for a righteous cause. History will indeed ring with the praises of the heroic acts of our gallant lads and their memory will ever be sublime and sacred to us all for all time to come. Your son has nobly done his duty and the supreme sacrifice cannot and will not be in vain I am confident. Yours very sincerely,

Chas. R. Cumming,
Chaplain,

CARD OF THANKS

Mr. Lindsay and family wish to thank their many friends and neighbors for their kindess during the illness of wife and mother.

GIVEN PUBLIC RECEPTION

Sergt. Art Taggart and Pte. Dick Addley Presented With Addresses and Gold Pieces At Town Hall —Art Tells How Women's Work Is Appreciated By Boys At the Front

Sergt. Art. Taggart, who has been home on leave from the Front was given a public reception in the Town Hall on Friday night at the close of the public prayer meeting. Art. was wounded three times and spent weeks in the hospital with shell shock after his terrible experience in the trenches, but he never looked better, a fine strapping soldierly boy at that, than he did on the platform on Friday night. Art. was presented by Mr. John Rowland, on behalf of the local Preparedness League, with the usual five dollar gold piece, and also a nice address, expressing high appreciation of his heroic services for King and Country signed by the Mayor and the officials of the league. Art. replied neatly, thanking everybody for their kindness. He told how much the good work of the Walkerton ladies was appreciated by the boys in Flanders and referred to the fact that many of the fellows over there did not have the good fortune of having relatives and friends to look after them, and that an extra pair of socks or good things always found their way to some fellow who was not so fortunate. Art. was to have left on Wednesday to catch the boat back to England but a telegram arrived from the authorities at London the night before extending his furlough by a further two months. Art. has surely earned it and the additional rest will help to bring him back to condition. Private Dick Addley, another battle-scarred Walkerton boy, was to have been present but was detained at London. Mrs. Addley who was present, received on her husband's behalf a present of a five dollar gold piece and an address of hearty appreciation of his services to his King and Country signed by the Mayor and the local officials of the Preparedness League. Pte. Wess. Russell, the last and youngest of the Russell boys to get into khaki, who enlisted last week at Toronto, was also called to the platform. Wess will be given his send off later on when he is home on last leave.

Second Brother Falls

Pte. Will Haug of Tiverton, who was reported seriously wounded in Tuesday's Casualty list is a brother of Pte. Wesley Haug, who was accidently killed at Wittley Camp, England, shortly after landing with the 160th Batt'n.

Taking A Commission

One of the Walkerton boys writes home from the Front that Sergt. Mel. Wilson, son of Rev. Thos. Wilson, is taking out a commission as lieutenant. Sergt. Wilson went over with the 71st and has been at the Front about a year.

Died at Edmonton.

Walkerton friends learned with deep regret this week of the death at Edmonton of Mrs. George Woods, daughter of the late George Pulford of this town. She is survived by her husband and three children. Death resulted from pneumonia after a few days' illness.

Domestic Wanted

Young girl to go to Toronto to do light work in small family. Will give opportunity for education. Good home. Good girl will receive every opportunity. State full particulars and salary. Mrs. B. H. McCreath, 22 Inglewood Drive, Toronto. 14—15

Took Scarlet Fever

Mr. Harold Patterson who signed up recently with the Forestry Battalion at Toronto, was taken down with scarlet fever shortly after reaching the city and has been confined to the Military Hospital. Harold wrote home a few days ago that he is now coming around all right.

A Sad Loss

The home of Mr. and Mrs. Con. Schnurr, west ward, was saddened by the death on Monday of their bright little two year old daughter, Isabel. The little one, who was formerly robust, had been suffering from a complication of children's diseases which sapped her strength. Deep sympathy is felt for the sorrowing parents.

House For Sale

"Finley" Russell Wounded

Reeve Robt. Russell had a service post card on Saturday from his second boy, John L. Russell, saying that he had been wounded and was at present in a base hospital in France. The card was dated March 16th. John enlisted with the 71st Batt'n, and went over to England with a special draft. He has been about a year at the Front and is now in the Hospital for the first time.

Quiet Wedding

Corp. Jim Henderson, a popular member of the 160th Batt'n, who was turned down in the last medical examination, was united in marriage at St. Andrews Manse, Windsor, by Rev. H. M. Paulin B. A. on Saturday, April 7th to a well-known Walkerton young lady, Miss Kathleen Saunders. Miss Saunders formerly practised as a trained nurse in New York, and is a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Saunders, Colborne St. The young couple will make their home at Walkerville where Mr. Henderson has a position in a munitions factory. Their address is, 450 Lincoln Road, Walkerville.

Novel Birthday Party

A Soldiers Birthday Party gotten up by twelve enterprising members of the I. O. D. E. for Monday evening was most successful. The Armouries was nicely decorated for the occasion, and in the Hall a large Easter nest received the "eggs" in the form of a cent for each year of the "age of a soldier you know." The proceeds exceeded fifty-two dollars which was very gratifying to the ladies who originated this novel affair. An excellent program was given including recitations by Miss Nesbitt, Mrs. Smart, Jean Norrish and Miss Havill; solos, Miss Whitehead and Miss McKechnie; Instrumentals, Misses Ernuel, Bremner and Taggart; Gramophone selections by R. L. Gibson. Misses Verba Skelton and Florence Rowland acted as accompanists.

Russian Vodka Shipped In

License Inspector White confiscated a couple of cases of unclaimed wet goods at Lucknow last week. One of the cases contained a rare curiosity—Vodka, the famous Russian drink whose manufacture is now prohibited in Russia. This stuff was made in Holland and shipped to a young Russian who is working on a farm, and who having no premises of his own, would have to take the goods into the property of his employer, which happens to be a "public place." The immigrant was told that this was sure to get him and his employer into serious trouble so he allowed the precious liquid to be confiscated. The Vodka is a wicked-looking mixture and by reputation quite as wicked as it looks. Inspector is awaiting instructions from the Department as to the disposal of the liquor.

Walkerton Boy In Mexico

When Chester Bryce, son of Mr. Robt. Bryce, East Ward, enlisted with the United States Cavalry, the big trouble in Europe had not yet started. Chester has spent the last three years eagerly waiting the expiration of his term to get home and fight for his own country but now he writes that owing to the U. S. having a real war of its own underway, he cannot get away just now anyway. Chester has two brothers with the Canadian Expeditionary Forces in England and he is very keen to be the third member of the Bryce family to go to the Western Front. His brother Charlie, who enlisted at Baldur, Man. is now in a hospital in England recovering from an attack of diphtheria and is attached to the 19th Reserve Battalion. Another brother, Sapper Walter Bryce is also in England doing telegraph work and expects to go to the Front any time. Chester has been over in Mexico chasing Villa since April last but he has an idea that he would see more real action with the Canadians in Flanders.

Bowlers Get Busy

The Bowlers held an enthusiastic reorganization meeting Monday night. There was a good attendance and a disposition on the part of the members to take hold was manifested which augures well for a successful season. The Club will have an early start and already a Committee is out canvassing for new members. Officers for the coming year were elected as follows.—Hon. Pres. R. H. Player; Pres. Ed. McConnell; Vice-Pres. H. G. Hunter; Sec. Treas., C. S. Stephan. Auditors, W. H. McBurney and Jas. Whitehead. Board of Management, G. T. Rourke, A. P. Sieveright, H. A. Stephan, A. E. McNab, Jas. T. Clancy, T. Pye, C. H. Rogers. Committee to canvass for new members—W. H. McBurney, Jas Whitehead, N. Hiscox, H. G. Hunter. Grounds Com. E. McConnell, A. C. McNab, J. T. Clancy. The fee for former members will be $5, and for new members $4. The Club voted $25 of the Funds in the Treasury to the Daughters of the Empire. It was decided to hold a tournament either on Civic Holiday or Labor Day.

Mr. and Mrs. Sam Truax came up from Toronto to be present at the memorial service for their son, Corp. Everett Truax, on Sunday and spent a couple of days with some of their old friends in town. Their son, Pte. Sam Truax, who is now on special military service at London, also came up for Sunday.

We are indebted to Mr. Art. Schnurr of Cleveland for some copies of the big Cleveland dailies announcing Uncle Sam's entry into the war. It is noticeable that war news which was formerly relegated to an inside page now fills almost the entire edition. The Yankee editors are now engaged in flaying militarism in a way which makes the Canadian newspapers seem tame by comparison.

Operation For Appendicitis

Walter Patterson was taken ill with appendicitis this week and operated upon at the Bruce County Hospital on Tuesday. Walt is reported to be making satisfactory progress.

New Hospital Supt.

The Hospital Board has appointed Miss Sutherland, formerly supt. of the Pembroke Hospital to succeed Miss Thirsk as Supt. of the Bruce County Hospital. Miss Sutherland comes highly recommended for the position and was chosen out of a list of half a dozen applicants. She will assume her duties here before the end of the month.

Kept Him From Enlisting

Mr. Will Truax is reported to be back to work again at Thamesville after the recent accident by which he lost parts of four fingers in a sash and door factory. Mr. Truax had written just before the accident to his father, Mr. Sam Truax at Toronto, that he was about to enlist for services overseas. But now he would be unable to pass the physical examination. It was the left hand which was injured and fortunately it will not interfere with his continuing his present occupation.

Home from China

Miss Winifred Warren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Warren, who has been homeward bound from the Chinese Mission Field the past month or more, arrived at Toronto on Wednesday morning and was met in the city by her sister, Miss Agnes. Miss Warren has some business to transact in the city for the missionary department and is expected home before Sunday. Miss Warren has been teaching the children of the missionaries at Honan, and is now taking her first furlough.

Lieut Col. J. J. Fraser

A Walkerton citizen who has certainly made good at the Front, is Dr. J. J. Fraser, now Lt-Col. Fraser, in charge of No 2 Field Ambulance C. E. F. Dr. Fraser went over at the beginning of the war with the rank of Captain. He received his Majority last year and for some months has been in command of the Field Ambulance. Word has just been received here that the Doctor has been gazetted Lieutenant-Colonel, the appointment dating back to November last.

More And More Help Wanted

Women are doing a wonderful in this war as they have done in all other wars. The Can. women are not behind in doing every possible thing to relieve the great suffering. The Daughters of the Empire are taking the lead in all patriotic work and the Walkerton Chapter has since the last report sent to the Queen's University Base Hospital in France (the Can. hospital nearest the firing line) 3,400 wipes, 52 doz. pads, 840 compresses 182 gauze dressings, and 12 bed pads. More and more of these dressings will be required after these big drives for this hospital alone has 2,900 beds. So many responded to the call to make shirts, that it has enabled them to send to each Walkerton boy in the trenches a service shirt, a suit of gauze underwear, two pairs of socks and a camphor bag ("K. K. K." girls.) These field comforts, are very necessary and to enable them to carry on they must have the hearty support and co-operation of the whole community.

Wants $15,000 for Factory

Walkerton lost the opportunity of landing a large spinning mill lately owing to the fact that no suitable building could be secured in the town at a satisfactory figure. The officials of the company were shown about the town by Mayor Johnston and members of the town council. They inspected the old Bindertwine factory and were well pleased with it but when they came to inquire the price from the owner, Mr. Henderson Black, of St. Johns, Que. they found the lowest price he would accept was $15,000. This they considered an exorbitant figure for a building that has been lying idle for several years and so they decided to pass Walkerton up. The company are now erecting a new building in their own town alongside their knitting factory but they would have greatly preferred to come to Walkerton owing to the difficulty of securing more female labour at home. Last year the owner of the old Bindertwine factory paid taxes on a $10,500 assessment.

A DOUBLE JUBILEE

Of Dominion of Canada and Bruce County Falls on Ju'y First—Dominion Day Is Important Milestone This Year

Seeing that Dominion Day this year will be the fiftieth Anniversary of Canada's Natal day, it would be well that the occasion be made a memorable one. Advantage should be taken of the opportunity of impressing upon the boys and girls especially, who will be the citizens to-morrow, the principles upon which our national life is founded. With the memory of Vimy Ridge and the Somme fresh in their minds Canadians realize that they have never before had such occasion to be proud of their country and Dominion Day will mean more to them than ever before. Up here in Bruce this is also the Jubilee Anniversary of our County, a mile-post that should not be permitted to pass by unnoticed. Last year Judge Klein made the suggestion that if the war were over in 1917, that the County organize a great celebration in connection with the home-coming of the soldiers, at the same time celebrating the fiftieth anniversary of the County, and also hold an Old Boys Reunion. A reunion would of course be out of the question until after the war but there is no reason why a Dominion Day celebration in the County would not be a great success. This matter could be best handled by the County Preparedness League which would no doubt receive the hearty backing of the County Council. It would also afford the League an opportunity to raise money for its treasury which will be needed very soon.

Former Cargill Boy

The death occurred in the military Hospital, at London, on April 6th, of Sapper David Nichol, son of Rev. F. O. Nichol, of Amherstburg, formerly of Cargill. The young man, who was in his nineteenth year, was a cashier at the Ford Motor Works, Ford, Ont. before enlisting. Death was due to pneumonia.

It Comes High

Mrs. Hester Smith, a resident of Bentick, had a costly experience recently in dealing with travelling agents for a cream separator. Mrs. Smith permitted her young son to sign a paper which proved to be a promissory note for $33.75. She contested payment in division court and and as a result has to pay the note and costs amounting to nearly the amount of the note and a lawyer's fee besides

160th the Best Yet

Col. Shannon, the commanding officer of this military district paid a remarkably high compliment to the 160th Bruce Batt'n in talking over the phone to President John Rowland of the local Preparedness League on Friday. The Col. referred to the Bruce Battalion not as "one of the best" but as the best battalion which has gone Overseas yet. And the Col. more than any other man is in a position to know.

Jack Clancy In France.

Corp. Jack Clancy of Cargill is one of the first boys who left here with the 160th to get to the Front. Jack has been transferred to a construction battalion and sailed for French soil on March 14th. Immediately on landing in France, he wrote his brother, Mr. Jim Clancy, G. T. R. Agent:—'Everything fine and dandy, Jim, over here. Hope you are the same. Will write at first opportunity. Regards to all.

Keyes—Morrison

Miss Florence Elizabeth Morrison, a young lady highly thought of in Walkerton, was united in marriage at High Nood, Tuesday, at the Manse, by Rev. Thomas Wilson to Mr. George Fleming Keyes, of Toronto, formerly of Cargill. Miss Morrison, who is a daughter of the late Joseph Morrison of Walkerton, has been engaged as night operator at the Bell telephone office for several years. A host of friends extend best wishes for future happiness and prosperity to Mr. and Mrs. Keyes.

THE GREAT CLASH IN THE WEST.

The Hindenburg retreat has come to a halt, and the belligerent armies are now engaged in a life and death struggle for the mastery. The Kaiser has expressed himself as pleased with the manner in which the retreat was carried out, and we must admit that it was managed without much loss of men or material. There has been no great bag of either reported by the allies. The question, however, that is now up for settlement is whether Hindenburg can hold on where he is. The French have followed rapidly on his footsteps, and are making ground, slowly perhaps, but they are continuing to gain territory. There has been heavy fighting in the neighborhood of St. Quentin, where Gen. Haig's forces are believed to be co-operating with the French.

Gen. Haig is not issuing as many bulletins as is Gen. Neville. We understand that Haig is merely content with holding his own on his right, while he is hammering his way on to Cambrai on the centre, and giving help to the French on his left. The French are making substantial progress at St. Quentin, and La Fere. Here the Germans have flooded the place, but as Nivelle now dominates the heights it is not believed that Hindenburg can hold La Fere, which is the extreme south end of the line of the battle which is now raging. A little to the east of La Fere there has been fierce fighting, the French trying to force their way to Laon. They have reached the west bank of the Oise, and gained additional ground east of Alette river.

It will take some time to get all the big guns up to the new front, but when they get there, they will make quick work of Hindenberg's defences. In the course of a day or two we will know better as to his plans. We incline to the belief that he will first try for a decision in the open. If this fails him he will try to dig in, if the allies allow him. However, the Germans cannot afford to spend another winter in France.

An Ideal System of Law.

The law, so far as it depends on learning, is, indeed, as it has been called, the government of the living by the dead. To a very considerable extent, no doubt, it is inevitable that the living should be so governed. The past gives us a vocabulary and fixes the limits of our imagination; we cannot get away from it. There is, too, a peculiar logical pleasure in making manifest the continuity between what we are doing and what has been done before. But the present has a right to govern itself as far as it can, and it ought always to be remembered that historic continuity with the past is not a duty; it is only a necessity.

I hope that the time is coming when this thought will bear fruit. An ideal system of law should draw its postulates and its legislative justification from science.—Oliver Wendell Holmes.

When Nature Was Timekeeper.

In the British museum is a large stone composed of carbonate of lime which would serve perfectly as a day laborer's calendar, inasmuch as it would indicate to him every Sunday and holiday of the year, though not the day of the month. Moreover, the stone is an actual time record of the work done for a long period in an English coal mine.

The "Sunday stone," as it is called, was removed from a colliery drain. When the miners were at work the water running through the drain left a deposit colored black by the coal dust, but when no work was being done the water ran down clear and left a white deposit. These deposits in the course of time built up the stone. Each day of work left a black streak, immediately followed by a white streak made during the night. Wide white streaks indicate the holidays and Sundays.

Alexander Pope, the poet, was four feet six inches high, and was unable to dress or undress himself.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

He is in evening dress, and looks as fresh and ready as if he had not been hard at work all day answering a thousand questions and directing everything as usual.

"I am sorry I am so late," he says, taking Lady Rookwell's hand; then he goes over to Signa, and taking both her hands, kisses them, the old lady's eyes softening as she looks on. "I had to get home and dress," he explains, still holding Signa's hands as he speaks.

"You need not have done so. You could have dined in your shooting jacket."

He laughs.

"It was all over whitewash and paint," he says. "You would have taken me for the foreman. Poor man! —it is well it is the last day. I left him on the point of insanity and exhaustion! Ah, what's this?"

"Lady Rookwell——" says Signa, in a low voice.

"Put that spray in her hair, sir," says her ladyship.

He takes the spray, and covertly caressing the sleek head, so that the color flies to Signa's face, he arranges the spray.

"Beautiful!" he says, but ungratefully looking into the lovely violet eyes instead of at the diamonds and pearls.

"Of course she is!" grins the old lady. "And I mean her to look beautiful to-morrow night. I don't want you to feel ashamed of her amongst all the 'great folk.'"

"I'll try not to be," he says. Then he takes the old lady's hand and presses it. "Thank you; it is very good of you—it is just like you," he says, in his simple fashion.

"There, there—that's enough!" she says, abruptly. "And now come into dinner. I expect the fish is spoiled. And how is it all getting on?" she asks, when they are all seated and dinner has progressed far enough to warrant her in disturbing him.

"Capitally, I think," he says. "I never saw men work as our men have done."

"Something must be done for them."

He nods.

"I have taken the liberty of telling them that there will be a spread for them on the lawn the day after to-morrow. Was it a liberty?"

"Great! For a man you are really very thoughtful, Hector Warren."

"Praise from Lady Rookwell is praise indeed!" he says, with a laugh, pressing Signa's hand that steals toward him under the table, approvingly. "Yes, I think everything is finished, even to the lamps upon the drive."

"Oh, I never thought of that!" exclaims her ladyship.

"I have had a telegram from London saying that the band will reach here by midday. They are already hard at work in the kitchen, and I left a small army of men and women in white caps, presided over by a tremendous swell of a French cook, who came in a fly with a pair of horses from the station, and who looked sumptuous enough to be a duke. He was very kind and condescending to me, and was good enough to give me the menu for the supper. There it is!"

"It is very good," says her ladyship. "Dear, dear! I hope it will be all right."

He nods reassuringly.

"Don't be uneasy. The French cook condescended to inch round the house, and pronounced it, with a bow 'magnificent,' so that I think we may be satisfied, and I hope that Miss Laura Derwent will be as pleased. By the way, when does she arrive?" he asks, carelessly.

"To-morrow morning, I suppose," replies her ladyship. "I expect to hear from her by this post. She will come down by the mail, her energy and 'go' are tremendous!"

"I am awfully afraid of her," says Signa, with a smile, "and shall shrink into a corner the moment she appears, and remain there until the close of the proceedings."

"Yes," said Lady Rookwell, sarcastically, "you are the sort of person who is generally permitted to remain in corners, aren't you?"

"Remember, before you retire into seclusion, that you have promised me the first dance and every alternate one," he says.

"I have done no such thing," she declares, but a happy light shines in her eyes. What is Laura Derwent, or any other professional beauty, to her while she has her lover and idol?

"The post bag has arrived, my lady," says the butler, with the tone of an archdeacon giving out his text.

"Bring it in," says Lady Rookwell at once. "There must be a letter from Laura—there is," she adds, as she tumbles the contents of the bag on to the table and pounces with jewelled fingers on an envelope.

"Hem, ah! what!" and she utters a shrill shriek.

"What's the matter?" asks Hector Warren, with a smile, while Signa eyes her with mingled amusement and alarm. "Has she thrown us up at the last moment, or sprained her ankle and can't come——"

"No, no, it's nothing of that kind. She'd come if she sprained both ankles," replies Lady Rookwell. "It's not that, it's—what do you think?"

"We don't know what to think," says Signa, almost piteously. "Don't keep us in suspense, dear Lady Rookwell!"

"My dear," says her ladyship, almost solemnly, "he's coming!"

"Who's coming?" asks Hector Warren, coolly.

"Who!" retorts her ladyship, indignantly. "As if there could be any other than one he. Who? Why, Lord Delamere!"

Signa leans back, and her eyes droop, but whether with displeasure or indifference Hector Warren cannot tell.

"Oh," he says, looking at her, and not at Lady Rookwell, "indeed!"

"Yes," said Lady Rookwell, her eyes fixed on her letter. "She says that she has received a note of acceptance from him, and that he has promised to be here at ten o'clock to-morrow night! What do you think of that, my dear!" and she eyes Signa with queer amusement.

Signa looks up.

"What do I think of it?" she says, with a laugh. "Why should it concern poor little me?" and she glances at the handsome face beside her as if adding that nothing is of any consequence so that her lover be there.

"And what do you think of it?" demands her ladyship, turning to Hector Warren.

He helps himself to the entree a footman has brought him before replying.

"I don't see how Delamere could have refused," he says. "It would have been churlish, and might have seemed as if he repented giving Miss Derwent permission to do—what she has done."

"Of course," says Signa, who would equally have said "of course" if he had said exactly the opposite.

"Well!" says Lady Rookwell, emphatically. "That is the climax! It is a good thing that it wasn't known before, or I should have been mobbed, positively mobbed, for cards! It is really considerate of him to keep it quiet till the last moment!"

A shade of annoyance or irritation passes over Hector Warren's face.

"Why should all this fuss be made about Delamere?" he asks, quietly. "One would imagine that he was a sort of monstrosity, instead of being an ordinary man who has chosen to live on the continent instead of vegetating in England."

"You forget what he has done on the continent," says Lady Rookwell, grimly. "If the stories that are told of him are true——"

"Ah, I forgot the stories," he says, and there is a tone of contempt in his voice. "Ah, yes, I see. Poor Delamere! Do you think the virtuous mob—I beg your pardon—the distinguished and aristocratic guests of to-morrow, will shun him like a plague-stricken wretch, Lady Rookwell?"

"Do I?" and she chuckles. "Why, they will surround him, and make much of him, as flies surround honey. What will it matter to them? He is Lord Delamere, with thirty or forty thousand a year, and three or four estates, and one of the oldest titles in England! Such a man may do anything—anything, with impunity!"

"I see," he says, calmly. "Signa, will you select the least sweet of those biscuits for me?" Signa picks out a biscuit with her white fingers, delicately, and puts it on his plate. "And Miss Derwent—when does she come?"

Lady Rookwell picks up her letter.

"She will be here at noon to-morrow; I am sending the carriage for her. It is only a note she has written, but it is full of you."

"Of me!" he says, smiling.

"Yes, I told her how hard you were working, and she is not ungrateful. She says that she will thank you personally to-morrow, and bids me ask you to lunch here."

He shakes his head, laughingly.

"I am sorry," he says, "but I must postpone the pleasure of meeting her until the evening."

"What!"

"I must, indeed," he says. "I am compelled to go to Woolstaple to-morrow."

"To Woolstaple? Why! What for?" demands Lady Rookwell, amazedly.

"Must I really tell you?" he says, laughingly; "well, then, I must buy a pair of dancing shoes."

"Nonsense!" and Signa laughs.

"It's sound sense, on the contrary," he says. "I can't dance in these, and you know I have to dance."

"You can send for half a dozen pairs and try 'em on," says Lady Rookwell, with an amused air.

"So I could," he admits, "but that is not all. I want my hair cut."

"You—you——" she begins, but he interrupts her.

"No, Lady Rookwell, I can't send my head into Woolstaple, even to please Miss Laura Derwent. I must draw the line somewhere. Don't be alarmed. I shall return in time to escort Signa to the Grange."

"And what time will that be?" demands her ladyship, irritably.

"Oh, about 10 o'clock," he replies. "Signa will not care to go before that."

"That will be quite early enough," says Signa. "But won't you be very tired after your journey?"

He looks round at her with a smile.

"Not too tired to take you to the ball," he answers. "No, I don't care to stay and drink wine by myself, Lady Rookwell; I'll come with you, if I may, into the drawing room."

It is a very pleasant evening they spend. Hector and Signa sing and play, and Lady Rookwell listens and approves, and then she kindly goes to sleep, and leaves them as much alone as if she had gone to bed. Yes, it is a very happy evening, and Lady Rookwell wakes with a start, and looking up at the clock, says:

"Now, Hector Warren, it's time you went."

Signa has arranged to stay the night, and go to the Grange from the villa. He rises with a sigh, and a curious look on his face.

"Good night, Lady Rookwell; I shall come a little before ten for Signa."

"But you can't," she says. "I am going to take her with me; I didn't think of that. Of course, I must be there with Laura, to receive the people."

"I forgot that," he assents, with a look of disappointment. "Never mind, I shall be at the Grange at ten. Good-night. This has been a very happy evening; you think me ungrateful sometimes for all your kindness; to-night I should like to say a word to convince you that I am not insensible to it," and, as he holds her hand, he looks into the sharp, kindly eyes with grave earnestness.

"Why to-night?" she asks.

He shrugs his shoulders.

"Because—well, say, I feel good. But thank you a thousand times for all your kindness to Signa and to me," and he bows his head, and Signa reverently touches the old lady's forehead with her lips.

"There—there!" she exclaims, petulantly; but her eyes soften, and she turns and leaves the two alone.

He holds Signa to his heart for a moment in silence; then he whispers:

"Good-night, my darling! Good-night. I shall see you to-morrow at 10. You are not displeased that I cannot come earlier?"

"Displeased!" and she lifts her eyes to his, reproachfully. "Why should I be? Everything that you do, and say, and think is right."

He does not speak for a moment, but his lips quiver as he turns to her again.

"May Heaven make me less unworthy such great love!" he murmurs; then he goes.

CHAPTER XXII.

At noon of the eventful day, the lady whose name has been on everybody's lips for the last three weeks arrives, gliding into the drawing-room of the villa, clad in a Parisian traveling costume that fits her to a fault, and followed by a maid, who is almost as fashionably and expensively dressed as her mistress.

Signa, looking up as the great personage appears, sees a tall, graceful woman, with a perfectly oval face, of that dead-ivory whiteness which belongs to a certain type of blonde, with dark eyes, and naturally golden hair, which is rendered, apparently, all the lighter by contract with the auburn eyebrows.

A beautiful woman, without a doubt and endowed with a subtle charm, which Signa recognizes instantly.

"Yes, here I am, dear," she says, giving both her delicately-gloved hands to Lady Rookwell, and just touching her with a kiss. "Here I am, you see, and safe and sound, quite strong enough to bear all your scolding, Jeannette," to the maid who stands waiting, "they will show you my room—I suppose I have my old room, dear?—get my imperial unpacked, Jeannette, please, and lay out two dresses on the bed." The maid goes, and Miss Laura Derwent gives Lady Rookwell another dainty kiss and laughs, a low, self-possessed and self-amused laugh. "How well you look, dear! But surely"—and she glides toward Signa, who has been watching her with curious interest—"surely this is Miss Grenville, of whom you have written so much? Why don't you introduce me?"

"You haven't given me time," retorts Lady Rookwell.

The beauty laughs again, and taking Signa's hand, bestows a dainty kiss upon her also.

"Never mind, I can introduce myself. My dear, I am so glad, so really glad to see you! I seem to have known you, oh, for years. Aunt has written volumes about you—volumes!"

"Laura, don't be ridiculous!"

"It's true, I assure you. I quite feared to meet you, you were described as such a paragon."

"I am not very terrible," says Signa, smiling.

"No, not a bit of a paragon," laughs Laura Derwent. "But I can well understand aunt's enthusiasm."

And she gives a frank, candid nod of admiration. Signa laughs, and the beauty laughs in harmony.

"And you have heard nothing but bad of me, of course," she says, taking off her hat and traveling cloak, and dropping them on to the sofa. "I'll go upstairs directly—I want to rest and talk a little first." To Lady Rookwell: "I do hope you haven't been setting Miss Grenville—by the way, would you be offended if I commenced to call you Signa at once? I should be sure to do so before the day was out."

"By no means," says Signa. "I think"—and she smiles—"most people call me Signa."

"I don't wonder at it. You're just the sort of woman that other women pet, and men go mad over."

"Now, Laura!" says Lady Rokwell, quietly.

"Oh, you think I shall make her vain, do you?" And the low laugh sounds again. "So I shan't. My dear Signa, don't you believe all aunt tells you about me. I'm not as frivolous and bad as I'm painted by her, at least. Oh, how delightful it is to be in England again! but there—after I have been here a few weeks, and get back to Paris, I shall be sure to exclaim, 'How delightful it is to be in France again!' My dear, you see I am quite candid. I am just like a weathercock—here, there, and everywhere, with every passing wind of fancy. There, aunt, that's as true a picture as ever you could paint. How comfortable this room looks! And, oh, I am really so tired, and so glad to be here! Aunt, have you seen the new bonnet? I give you my word that it is the most absurd thing you ever saw."

"Laura Derwent," retorts Lady Rookwell, "I've had something else to think about these last few weeks than the [illegible] bonnet."

"Ah, me, you are going to begin!" says the beauty, holding out her white hands with a little gesture of resignation. "I warded it off as long as I could, but I see I am to have it. Well, 'go ahead!' as the Americans say, and overwhelm me."

Lady Rookwell grins.

"I wouldn't waste my breath," she says, grimly.

Laura Derwent laughs.

"Well, you have wasted enough ink and paper over your reproaches. Do you know"—and she turns with a graceful sweep to Signa—"I am almost frightened myself at what I have done. But that is just like me—I am always getting into scrapes by my impulsiveness. I don't suppose such a thing was ever done before as to ask a man, a perfect stranger, to lend his house. The moment I had done it I felt fit to sink into the earth. But the man—my dear, I can't describe him, or the effect he had upon me."

"Was he so dreadful?" asks Signa, immensely amused.

Over Africa by Rail.

It is now possible to cross Africa by rail and water in practical comfort. Kings in Africa could always travel in comparative comfort; but one not a king had difficulties to contend with, which are being slowly removed by the steady extension of the means and methods of civilization. Following approximately the trails traversed by Livingstone and Stanley in penetrating the heart of that vast continent infested by wild animals and hostile natives, the traveller to-day may go from Banana at the mouth of the Congo River on the west coast, to Dar-es-Salaam on the Indian Ocean, a distance of 3,016 miles. All but the last section, Kigoma to Dar-es-Salaam, is in Belgian Congo, and the transcontinental trip may be made with good connections, in forty days. The gauge of the railroads in Congo is two feet, five and one-half inches. Lake Tanganyika is 2,642 feet above the sea level. The final gap in this route, Kabalo to Albertville, was finished and opened to traffic in 1915, and the map of the route of the Congo is a fair outline of a tropical helmet.—The Christian Herald.

Inspect the lower jaw, of course,
The sixth front tooth the tale will tell,
And every doubt and fear dispel.
To middle "nippers" you behold
Before the colt is two weeks old.

Eight months, the "corners" cut the gum.
Two outside grooves will disappear
From middle two in just one year.
In two years, form the second pair;
In three, the corners, too are bare.
At two, the middle "nippers" drop;
At three, the second pair can't stop,
When four years old, the third pair goes;
At five, a full new set he shows.
The deep, black spots will pass from view
At six years from the middle two.
The second pair at seven years;
At eight, the spot each "corner" clears.
At nine, the black spots will withdraw

Teacher Has Not Lost One Day in a Year

MRS. ROGER GIVES CREDIT TO DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Before that She Suffered from Sciatica, Neuralgia, Nervousness and Other Troubles Coming from Sick Kidneys, Which Dodd's Kidney Pills Cured.

Elm Tree, Gloucester Co., N. B., April 5.—(Special)—Mrs. Jos. Roger, the popular teacher here, is fully recovered from a long siege of sciatica, neuralgia, and other troubles resulting from diseased kidneys and has made a statement in which she gives Dodd's Kidney Pills all the credit for her cure.

"My troubles came from a strain," Mrs. Roger states, "and I suffered for thirteen months. Backache, heart flutterings, sciatica, neuralgia, dizziness and failing memory were among my symptoms. When the doctor I consulted failed to do me any lasting good I decided that my kidneys were the root of my troubles and decided to try Dodd's Kidney Pills. I took twelve boxes in all and you may judge of the results when I tell you that I have not lost a day's work as teacher in the last year.

"I can say that Dodd's Kidney Pills have done all for me that was claimed for them."

Others of Mrs. Rogers' symptoms were nervousness, that tired feeling, irritability, and a dry harsh skin that itched and burned at night. They all come from diseased kidneys and all vanished when she used Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Clever Hindu Jugglers.

It is admitted that the Hindu jugglers and acrobats are the most skillful in the world. One of the latest reports is about a performer who went through many wonderful feats perched on the top of a single bamboo stick about fifteen feet in height. The top of the stick was tied to a girdle around the waist, and a leg rest was provided by a cushion a few feet down the pole. Perched on this slender stick he hopped and danced round in the liveliest way, accompanied by the tapping of a drum. He did other things even more wonderful. For example, he balanced a light stick on his nose and a heavy one on his chin and then threw the heavy one into the air with his head and caught it on the end of the light one. While balancing the two sticks thus end on end he made one revolve in one direction and the other in another direction.

Value of White Oak.

The white oak has served for more useful purposes than perhaps any other tree, and its wood to-day is worth as much as mahogany. Furniture of "solid oak" is now a rarity, for the wood has become so expensive that it is used in the form of a veneer over baser woods. So used it loses none of its beauty, and even the thin veneer resists wear for an incredibly long time. This wood was a useful one to the early agriculturists, as well as to those of the present day. It is durable when exposed to the elements and was also durable in contact with the soil. It was and is still used in fencing, and much of the second growth white oak timber in America is now being cut for railroad crossties.—Outing.

The Hangman's Stone.

There is a large bowlder lying in a field near Foremark, England, which is known throughout Derbyshire as the "hangman's stone." The exposed portion of the bowlder rises about six feet above the surface of the surrounding field and has a narrow ditch or indentation running across the top. The mark, so tradition says, was made in this way. A sheep thief in the dead of night, while leaning against the bowlder to rest, placed his booty above on the flat surface of the stone. The man had the sheep tied with a rope, and in its efforts to escape the creature slipped on the opposite side and the rope, catching under the thief's chin, choked him to death. The indentation in the rock was made by the friction of the rope while the dying man was engaged in an effort to extricate himself.

STORY OF A DOG'S JAW.

The strength of a dog's jaws and teeth were never more exemplified than in the case of a Ross-shire gamekeeper whose collie was unfortunate enough to be caught in a steel vermin trap. The gamekeeper, gun in hand, was soon on the scene, but in the short time the dog had become quite infuriated with pain. Having nothing suitable for muzzling the animal and fearing to place his foot upon the trap spring with the dog's jaws free, the gamekeeper placed the gun barrels in the dog's mouth and held them there while easing the spring. With a vicious snap the teeth closed on the cold steel ere he regained his freedom. The barrels were bold through—an almost incredible performance—and were examined shortly after.—London Graphic.

Army of the Maple Leaf

Lord Northcliffe Writes of a Day With the Canadian Lines In France

Under the heading "The Army of the Maple Leaf," Lord Northcliffe contributes to the Times the account of a day with the Canadians in France, in part as follows:

A brilliant late summer Canadian morning in Winnipeg—Labor Day, when hour after hour a procession of stalwart trade unionists, with their music and banners, passed along the American-looking streets, bearing proudly the emblems of their trades.

That half forgotten scene was in my mind as I waited by the roadside in Flanders to see the same men, square jawed, on their way through the snow to the ordeal of the firing line. For some of these Canadians it was their first trial; others had been "over the top" again and again in the raids in which they had been so successful in capturing and agitating the enemy.

RESEMBLE THE BRITISH.

In appearance Canadian soldiers, of whom we see far too little in London, owing to the action of the Canadian Government segregating them, more closely resemble British soldiers than any of the others from overseas. Many are of a great stature, especially the Scotsmen from Nova Scotia, New Brunswick and Cape Breton, some of the descendants of the disbanded Highland regiments of long ago. Quite a number speak Gaelic. Most of the other English speakers are of strong and stocky Canadian and American type, which has resulted from a generation or two of the natural life of the out-of-doors men. The French Canadians are smaller, but they are wiry.

The Canadian front in France is a replica in miniature of the whole vast Dominion. It is a world of the railroads, the forts, the farms, the mines, the lakes, the rivers, the banks, insurance, real estate, the lumber camp and dare I whisper it—even politics.

ABLE GENERAL COMMANDS.

The Canadian soldiers have had good and bad luck. At home many of them are accustomed to and willing to rough it in all sorts of ways, and they were, therefore, inured to discomforts. They had not experienced damp mud, and the dreadful mud of that first rainy winter on Salisbury Plain was a piece of real misfortune. They bore their trials nobly, though so arduous were the conditions that the mortality was serious. All their ill-luck, however, has been more than balanced by the all-important fact that they have secured for their leader one of the ablest as well as one of the best liked generals in the whole war—Sir Julian Byng, a worthy representative of a great fighting family.

The Canadians call themselves the Bing Boys, after the popular musical comedy. Quite lately they gaily signalled back from within a few yards of the artillery barrage that "The Bing Boys are here," denoting their arrival at the second German trench.

Each of the British armies in France has its own characteristics. One of the keynotes of the Canadian character is quick adaptability. The boy who works the lift in the Vancouver hotel and tries to sell you a corner lot may, with twelve months, be running his own real estate office or developing some industry far away on the Yukon. The atmosphere of adaptability in that climate is infectious. The London suburban clerk, who has stood the dull imprisonment of tube, typewriter, and bed sitting-room until nature has burst his bonds, catches on to the Canadian life in most cases with a rapidity that is due to the vitalizing sunshine and the opportunities that offer themselves to everybody except those who are born temperamentally as "quitters."

AT HOME IN BILLETS.

Sir Julian Byng and his Canadian generals have utilized this adaptability to the utmost. He is remembered always that the Dominion troops are undergoing experiences in the contrast not [illegible] to our men. Whereas the difference of life in England and Flanders is not very great, the difference between Dominion life and European is vast. The absence of sunshine, and the damp, the difference of diet and the surroundings, constitute an hourly and daily contrast between North American life and ours. It is the French-Canadians only who have an advantage over the others. Billet them in a French village and they are at once at home with the inhabitants. Their Louis X. accent does not differ much from ordinary French.

Byng and his Canadian generals have utili[illegible] specialties of the daily work [illegible] the Canadians with signal effect. [illegible] and his officers "get together," to use an expression in Canada, continually in conference and lectures. By this means they have found out exactly what particular aptitudes the Canadians can bring to bear in beating the Boche. One specialty is map-making and surveying. For obvious reasons the Canadians are probably the greatest map-makers in the world, just as they are the greatest railroad builders. They are map-makers by necessity, for they have a rich and largely undeveloped territory forty times the size of the old country, which is being mapped and surveyed continuously. For the better accomplishment of their purpose they have not only developed their own map-makers, but have absorbed the best talent from Europe. That skill has been developed in the Canadian army in France. When I revisited Sir Julian two features of his small workroom attracted my attention—the theatre posters of the Bing Boys and the red-hot maps showing German positions of yesterday afternoon which have already been photographed by aviators, developed, mapped, printed and circulated up and down the line. This would be "going some" even in Fleet street. Accurate photography and mapping of the enemy lines is a life-saver of the first importance.

One of my Canadian glimpses was a little procession of shattered-looking enemy prisoners, with their great-fallen officers, all in very different mood from those with whom I conversed twelve months ago. They were not only cowed, but what I have never seen in Prussian officers before, shabby as to their clothes. It was explained to me by a Canadian who spoke German that it is the arrival of the big guns that has alarmed them. For years they had relied on big guns, and now the British and French have bigger guns. Something that had never entered into their calculations had appeared. Let me quote from some documents captured upon them. Here writes a lieutenant of the 170th Regiment:

"You are still in Champagne and no longer in the witches' cauldron on the edge of which we are sitting, always waiting. During the last few days the air has been alive with aviators, and still more so with heavy shells which have been flying over our heads. Yesterday at noon there was an intense bombardment, frightfully near us, at Beaumont, and an attack which is said to have been repulsed. The number of guns, and of the heaviest calibres, too, that the English possess is uncanny, and the amount of ammunition they fire off quite fabulous. And in addition, which is so bad, their airmen are constantly over our lines, discover our batteries so that they may be peppered, and are always attacking our captive balloons, which is the same thing as putting our eyes out. Meanwhile the sky is black with captive balloons and hostile airmen—but of that I will say nothing. It would be merely pouring water into the Rhine. Solely the English artillery, the English Flying Corps, and their balloon observation have given them the success they have attained. That they have gained no more, in spite of all, is due to our German infantry. We could save several thousand lives, if only we had the English airmen and gunners. It makes one despair when one thinks of it all."

"From a Bavarian—

"The war fanatics and their friends ought to go through this literal hell and feel its effects on their own bodies, and then they themselves would surely come to the decision: Peace, peace, at any price, is the one and only maxim that ought to direct the Government's policy."

A Company Report, 5th Guard Grenadier Regiment:

"I urgently request that I may be relieved to-morrow night, in case no relief takes place to-day. The men have to lie in holes (there are no longer any dugouts in my sector). In addition there is very brisk and well-aimed artillery and trench-mortar fire. We are so exhausted physically and mentally that with the best will (and that is not lacking) we are no longer in that physical state of readiness that is absolutely essential."

From a man of the 11th R.I.R.

"We entrained at Savigny, and at once knew our destination—our old 'blood bath,' the Somme. We relieved the 119th on October 7th and had dreadful casualties that night. The 9th Company dwindled to 29 men; two platoons were taken prisoners, and the rest were buried in dug-outs. Our company has up to date lost 30 men.'

From a letter written by a man in hospital:

"Our regiment was suddenly taken from Flanders and flung into the Somme district. Twelve days we stayed there and were completely smashed up. Ten days I endured that hell and came to the end of my strength."

From another—

"Yes, my dear comrade, I have been on the Somme, but can only tell you that I have been through a great deal in this war. Such a slaughter of men as there was I have not yet experienced, for in two days our division was wiped out. I cannot help wondering that I came off with a whole skin, but there were not many of us."

From a man of the 2nd Reserve Ersatz Regiment—

"The officers we have up to the rank of captain are mostly boys who have no idea of anything. They draw high pay and have food and drink in abundance. We, on the other hand, live miserably. We do not receive by a long way what we should. The German Government is always writing about other States, and the German Government is far worse. The German Government deceives the people in a very shameful way; one sees it now very clearly in this wholesale murder. One can hardly help being ashamed of being a German. We must turn our rifles round and destroy the whole Government. Dear Grete, if I should happen not to return, then think how I have written to you about it all, that the gang has got us to be killed for fun and for sport. It is very different from the English. That is why they have not nearly so many losses. If only one of us shows himself then they use up plenty of ammunition; but they work in hundreds without cover, and our guns don't fire. They are not allowed to—there is a shortage of ammunition. The newspapers write, of course, that the enemy is short of ammunition. By that they mean that we ourselves are.

"It is quite clear that Germany is losing and is getting into a terrible state. It is all right for the upper ten thousand. The canteens make a profit of two or three hundred per cent., not for us, of course, as they ought to do, but for the officers' club. The officers here live in great luxury. In the line the officers are in bombproof dug-outs. We, on the other hand, have filthy, wet, tumble-down holes. The officers and others have it in their hands to take away our food, which we ought to have but do not get. I have heard it only too often from non-commissioned officers and old soldiers that if we had better leadership we should have been able to do something without heavy losses, but we are generally too late, or do it in the wrong way and with heavy loss. If the young officers did not swank so much and treated the men more like human beings we should be more content and more would be accomplished; but we hate our officers. We are bound to, for what miserable grub we get, while these swine live on the fat of the land.

"Here is Teubrielen, where the airmen threw bombs and where we shall get artillery fire very shortly, there is a dug-out for the officers, but none for the men. In this wholesale murder we get to know completely how much we are under the knout."

The eleven armies of the British, the Dominions and French peoples have anchored the greater part of the real forces in front of them, within easy reach of London and Paris. It is the German object to detach these armies of ours and scatter them in little packets all over the world, in order that we shall not kill so many Prussians and Bavarians. The Canadians, who are clear-sighted people, accustomed to big tasks, see this situation very plainly, and one leaves the magnificent Canadian army with a feeling of content that they, at any rate, have not been recklessly dispersed, but are a compact wedge and perpetual menace to the great body of Germans immediately facing them in the dreary snowscape of north-western France.

BEEF CATTLE SITUATION==DURING WAR AND AFTER

Holdings Are Badly Depleted, European Herds are Decimated, and Demand Will Soon be Satisfied—Breed Well, Feed Well and Weed Well is One Expert's Advice.

(By John Gardhouse.)

During the last five years there has been a marked decrease in beef cattle holdings in Canada—some 600,000 fewer cattle being held now than in 1912. In all provinces except Saskatchewan and Alberta this decrease has been general but was far more marked in Ontario than in any other. We find, moreover, that there exists a great shortage of beef the world over. When the war is ended this shortage will be felt very keenly not only in this country, but all over the continent of Europe as well. Therefore we are safe in saying that there never was a time in the history of the country when it was of as great importance as it is at present for the people of Canada to think, and think most seriously, of the position this country is likely to be in with reference to the future supply of beef producing animals.

HOW CANADIANS MAY BENEFIT.

We are now in the third year of the greatest war the world has ever known, and which has in several ways had its effect on the beef supply of the world. In consequence, we find that breeding operations are completely disorganized, especially in the countries where the war is raging. It will be impossible in those countries, even under the most favorable conditions, to get back to the breeding of anything like a reasonable supply of good beef cattle for some time after the cessation of hostilities; and that points out the road to opportunity to Canadians. Most of the European countries will have to get part of their breeding stock at least from this North American continent in order to build up their herds again and may be compelled to buy large stores of the beef which will be required in these countries as well. There is no reason why Canadians should not secure an important part of this trade, providing we breed and feed the proper type of animal.

I know I am safe in saying that it is most important from the standpoint of the individual farmer and of the nation as well, that a solid foundation should be laid by the conservation of all good breeding females possible. As a war measure the British Government has already imposed restrictions against the slaughter of calves and females. I am afraid that a measure of this kind, even in war times, would not be advisable in this country. Yet we have only to visit some of the live stock markets to find that even at this time a great many calves of the beef breeds, and large numbers of useful heifers and cows, which should be spared, are finding their way to the block. We continually face the danger involved in the loss of such large numbers of good beef bred calves, and in the slaughter of very many breedy and serviceable cows and heifers, many of which are in calf when slaughtered. This is certainly short-sighted practice—to say the least—on the part of those who sell them, and is a most serious loss to the country at large.

EXPORTATION OF FEEDING CATTLE.

In the matter of exportation of our stockers and feeders we find as a result of this business, that large numbers of young, unfinished stuff have been dumped on the market at a time when prices are ordinarily the lowest. In 1915 there were exported from Western Canada to the United States 56,499 head, and of this number probably 70 per cent. were stockers and feeders. And, as you will no doubt remember, there was an abundant supply of all kinds of feed for live stock at that time. Fortunately we find that the recent campaign carried on by the Live Stock Branch, Ottawa, to conserve as far as possible the breeding stock, has had a very beneficial effect.

In spite of the fact that the census of June 20th last shows a heavy decrease in the total number of beef cattle within the Dominion, the marketings at the different stock yards in Canada during the past year have been exceptionally heavy, especially so during the last few months—partially on account of the scarcity and high prices obtainable for meat producing animals. Due to these high prices it has been an exceptionally good year for beef raisers, even though large numbers of unfinished animals have been conspicuous at practically all the markets. Many farmers, we believe, might have made even more money had they not been in such a hurry to send their stock to market, but had spent a little more time and money in properly finishing them.

A noticeable feature of the year has been the splendid trade in pure bred cattle at fairly high prices. I have been informed by the accountant, that registrations in the beef breeds in 1916 have increased [illegible] over those in 1915. There is every reason to believe that the trade for commercial stock will be maintained at very profitable rates.

With so many men taken from the land by the war, including experts in breeding and feeding, it is perhaps more than ever necessary, that careful attention should be given to the breeding and feeding of the right type of animal, as it is only by maintaining animals in a thoroughly healthy condition, that the best and most profitable results can be secured. I trust that those who remain at home will render no less valuable aid by helping to maintain and increase, in every way possible, not only the live stock of the country, but the yield from the land as well. The importance of renewed exertion on the part of every Canadian farmer and live stock man cannot be overestimated.

For profitable feeding we must have animals that are "good doers." Breeding the cows to the right kind of bull, therefore, is more than half the battle.

Considering the high price of feed and the scarcity of labor, it is more than ever essentially in this country that nothing but the right type of pure bred sires should be used, and it is just as important that liberal yet economical feeding be practised in order to obtain the best results with the least possible waste.

MUST CONSERVE GOOD FEMALES

Considering that there are not enough beef producing animals to supply the normal demand, the following facts stand forth clearly: 1st. Prices will continue high; as long as the supply is not equal to the demand we cannot expect anything but high prices. 2nd. The high market prices are bound to continue to have the effect of drawing from the breeder many good cows and heifers which should be retained for breeding purposes. 3rd. The fact that so many good females find their way to the block will have a tendency to keep the supply down for perhaps a number of years. 4th. It is well to keep in mind the length of time it requires to produce a good beef bullock. 5th. Looking to the future, with the evidence we have before us, we may safely predict that for some years to come, beef cattle will be scarce and high, and it will be good business, both from the standpoint of the breeder and farmer, as well as of the nation, to breed all good cattle possible, retain the females, and feed and care for them well.

Speedway Races

Cars and Drivers Coming From Old Country.

A cablegram from Turin, Italy, to the Indianapolis Motor Speedway, assures T. E. Myers, general manager, that two brand new 1917 Fiats will be on hand when the starting bomb of the May 30th 300-mile race sounds. Racegoers are going to see these cars and Fagnano and Scales, their drivers, give the others in the big international race a contest.

The cars, which are modified 1914 French Grand Prize racers, have been in the process of design and construction for two years for the great Turin factory, the largest motor factory in all Europe, now employing 17,000 men. These cars have been tested for speed on the road; they have been electrically timed, and, according to W. F. Bradley, the European representative of the Speedway, "They are the classiest pair ever turned out of the Turin shops, and they certainly are fast."

Fagnano, one of the drivers, had his first chance in big racing at the last French Grand Prix, and finished fifth. Scales, the other driver, is an Englishman, who will make his debut at international racing at the coming meet. Both of these drivers are free of military obligation at present, and Bradley, in his last letter, wrote that a sailing schedule and route for the men and cars had already been worked out.

With these two Fiats and the two English Sunbeams, which are to come over to be driven by Christiaens and Rickenbacker, speed fans are already assured of a fine field. Beside these DePalma's noted Mercedes, thoroughly renovated, and his Peugeot, that used to belong to Lutcher Brown, and the two Peugeots and three Premiers that were being prepared in the Speedway race shop, are sure to be on hand at the start, together with several purely American cars and drivers who have signified their intention of contending.

Reciprocity In Licenses

More Than Three Times as Many Touring Cars Came Into Ontario in 1916 Than 1915.

Because of auto reciprocity, the number of tourists coming into Ontario in the 1916 season was more than three times as large as in 1915. It is certain that the traffic coming into the province will be large again this year. Unless something unforeseen occurs, it should be greater than last year. The regulations, which are reciprocal, are outlined here:

The American tourist must present his license permit or automobile identification card at the Canadian port of entry to give the residence or business address of the holder as well as the town or city. Each automobile must have its own license, of course. Where the owner wishes to remain in Canada for twenty-four hours only, the license card will be accepted. This will be retained by the collector of customs until the owner re-crosses the boundary. In this instance the automobile owner will be required to return by the route by which he entered Canada.

When the tourist desires to stay in the Dominion for any period from one to thirty days, a touring certificate will be issued to him by the collector of customs at port of entry, and this will be cancelled at any port through which he passes in leaving the country. A guarantee company's bond will be required from any tourist who desires to remain in Canada for any period up to six months, over the thirty day period. This bond will also be cancelled at the point where the non-resident motorist leaves and the cancelled copy will have to be returned to the port of issue. If a tourist, whose residence is in one of various States which reciprocate with Ontario in the matter of license recognition, wants to stay in the Province of Ontario for less than twenty-four days, he may do so without taking out an Ontario license.

In any event, an Ontario license must be secured for all commercial trucks, business cars or demonstrating model driven into the province for any period of stay. A blanket license covering a number of machines such as used by automobile dealers, cannot be accepted for touring purposes by the Ontario authorities.

Only one thirty-day certificate or one six months' bond will be issued for any one car by the Canadian Customs Department. In other words, a non-resident motorist cannot remain in the Dominion for a whole year without paying the 35 per cent. duty and 7½ per cent. war tax on his car by simply taking out a six months' bond twice during the year.

According to figures compiled from reports of the collectors of customs at [illegible] ports in Ontario and Quebec, the number of tourists' automobiles admitted from the United States into the two Canadian provinces during last summer was 21,[illegible] of which 17,292 entered Ontario. The greatest international traffic was at Windsor, across from Detroit, where 4,850 cars from the States were passed during the period. The biggest "drive" for a single day was recorded on Labor Day, Sept. 4, when more than 1,000 cars were brought into Canada from Detroit. At Niagara Falls the incoming automobile traffic during 1916 consisted of 3,[illegible] cars, while the number of incoming tourists' cars registered at the port of Walkerville on the Detroit River was 2,592. At Bridgeburg, opposite Buffalo, the cars of American tourists during the summer were 1,917. Fifty automobiles belonging to non-residents were brought across Lake Ontario by boat to Toronto.

In Ontario the totals of incoming tourists' cars for the past three years were as follows: 1916, 17,292; 1915, 5,[illegible]; and 1914, 6,161.

Ontario As Auto Centre

Promises to Become "Detroit of the Empire."

The Motor Magazine predicts a great future for the manufacture of autos, with United States money behind them, in Ontario. It says:

Automobile manufacturers of the United States are admitting that Ontario will undoubtedly become the "Detroit of the British Empire." Before the war, there was a tendency in this direction, but the European smash-up has added a strong impulse to the movement. The opinion is expressed freely in manufacturing circles that practically all the American producers will soon find it necessary to have branch factories in Ontario to take care of the foreign trade—except what may happen to be German or Austrian. The makers anticipate that a Canadian plant will be necessary if they hope to secure a slice of export business, which should be heavy after the "outbreak of peace." The reason for this is evident—the present sanguinary struggle will undoubtedly be followed by a spirited trade war, in which [illegible] will be a mighty factor.

Ontario is admirably suited as the location of a larger automobile industry, and a great, big nucleus has already been formed in this Province. The production of the Canadian factories will be heavy because both the Canadian and foreign demands for cars will be large. There will be openings for many workmen in the Canadian industry and employment for many mechanics undoubtedly will be provided. This would help to reduce any labor saturation after the war. At the same time considerable wealth will also be brought to the Province, as the U.S. manufacturers can be counted upon to take up the Canadian proposition extensively.

The Bluebeard of Belgium

How von Bissing Lost His Partner in Crime, and How a Widow's Vengeance Was Foiled

At the moment of writing Von Bissing lies on a bed of agony in Brussels, but his energy and his powers of recuperation are, I know, from personal observation, phenomenal. Any day may bring the news that he has resumed his career of barbarism.

Torturing helpless women is to Von Bissing a sport fit for the gods. But it has always been his custom to take full precaution against punishment descending upon him for his hateful crimes. By day a bodyguard of stalwarts always surround him; but at night he would sally forth accompanied only by a captain in the Death's Head Hussars, an Austrian steeped in every form of vice as deeply as himself. The captain was named Otto Jaeger, and I am not exaggerating when I say that he and Von Bissing were responsible for the ruin of more innocent girls than any two other men in the whole of the German Empire. It is difficult to write in cold blood of the outrages this pernicious pair committed.

Do not imagine that these two men dared the perils of the night alone. The bodyguard of which I had spoken had orders to be stationed at spots where the sound of a whistle blast could reach them. And in the event of Von Bissing and Jaeger being attacked by some half-maddened Belgian husband, whose wife had been torn from his arms, or by a lover whose sweetheart had been subjected to the same treatment, soldiers would quickly appear and stop further argument with pistol shot or sabre-thrust.

"GOOD SPORT."

It is a matter of grim satisfaction to me to relate how Von Bissing's infamous accomplice met the fate he so richly deserved. His groom was a man named Koufmann, a burly fellow with beetling brows and of prodigious strength. Before he joined the army Koufmann had been a notorious white-slave trafficker in Berlin. Here he had every opportunity of displaying his bestial qualities, for Berlin is the only city in the world that I know of where there is a woman of ill-fame to every 255 inhabitants.

Koufmann was the terror of the regiment. With the exception of Jaeger he feared neither man nor devil, but of his captain he stood in mortal terror. Soon after the occupation of Belgium in 1914, I emerged one evening from a restaurant in the Rue Lozane, at Antwerp, and came face to face with Captain Jaeger. He had been drinking heavily, and I have seldom gazed on a face in which fiendish cunning was so blended with animal ferocity in the whole course of my experience. He greeted me boisterously.

"You are a good sport, Herr," he said to me in German. "Come with me, and I will show you something that will bring the blood rushing to your head."

"What is on the boards?" I asked.

"Let us split a bottle of wine with a dash of Cognac in it, for I want a little more devil in me before I introduce you to my little entertainment."

We retraced our steps along the Rue Lozane and were soon seated at the Jeuness Doree. In less than ten minutes my companion had consumed no fewer than six glasses of neat brandy in addition to a quantity of champagne. I had had previous experience of Captain Jaeger's idea of "sport," and although I should have liked to refused his invitation, to decline might have excited that suspicion which, as a neutral, I did not want to engender.

AN OUTBURST OF DEVILRY.

"Herr Captain will give me some idea of what I am going to see?" I asked.

"Not a word till we reach the rendezvous," he said, with a drunken leer, wiping his coarse red mouth on the back of his hand.

"It will not entail any risk to my—er—position, Herr Captain?" I asked anxiously.

"Not a bit, Kamerad!" he replied, taking me affectionately by the arm. "A prize-fight will be child's play to it. You shall see how we sons of Austria make the red blood flow from the bodies of those who dare thwart our will."

"Then in that case, Herr Captain, I shall not come," I said.

He persisted so vehemently, however, that I thought it indiscreet to offend him in his condition of intoxication. He led me along the broad white road which branches off when one turns to the left out of the Rue Lozane, and after traversing a quarter of a mile we reached the barracks where the Captain's regiment was quartered. He paused in the officers' mess to fortify himself with another brandy, and then, from the wall, he took down a heavy whalebone crop, loaded at one end with lead.

Only having a glimmering of the deviltry he was about to perpetrate, I followed him as he staggered as well as his drunken state would allow him to the stables. He called loudly for Koufmann, and the villain, who had for years battened on the downfall of women and girls, came forward and stood to attention.

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

THE SCREAM IN THE MOONLIGHT.

Once again the crop descended, and another [illegible]. The Captain had been standing with his back only a couple of feet from the open door of the stables, where his horses were kept. The [illegible] had made Koufmann [illegible] as Von Bissing's blood-curdling laugh split the air. Before the Captain could realise what was happening Koufmann relaxed his attitude, stooped down, snatched his heavy unlaced hob-nailed boot from his foot and dashed it with all the force he could command into the bullying Captain's face.

Jaeger staggered back and fell at the heels of his own charger. Startled by the impact and the noise, the animal lunged out with its hind leg. There was a sickening crunch of steel horse-shoe against flesh, and when Von Bissing and myself picked up Captain Jaeger he was dead. Koufmann, battered and bleeding, was arrested, and the next morning he was shot.

The tragic death of his companion in vice did not, however, lessen Von Bissing's ardent pursuit of helpless women. He was constantly travelling, and no matter to what portion of stricken Belgium he went, he left behind him indelible marks of lust and brutality.

In a small village three miles to the north of Liege there lived a peasant named Jacques Etien. He was a finely-built man, who had witnessed many of the horrors which I have already intimately described. His soul was sick within him, and in the course of several conversations I had with him he determinedly declared that he would murder on sight any "Hun pig" whom he found molesting one of his country women.

Within a week of his assertion Jacques encountered a Captain of Uhlans molesting a girl of eighteen, who had been sent out on an errand rather late at night. But let me tell the story in proper order.

With some friends he had been to visit Jacques had spent a convivial evening. He had partaken freely of their red Burgundy, so beloved of all Belgians, and his blood ran warm. He sang merrily as he strolled along. In his hand he carried a new axe presented to him as a gift by his host, a fellow woodcutter.

Suddenly a girl's piercing shriek rang out. Jacques stopped his melody, and ran towards the spot whence the sound had come. A full moon lighted up the scene. Struggling desperately in the arms of a German officer, who stood nearly six feet high, was a beautiful girl.

"Let her go, swine!" shouted Jacques in Flemish.

"Get you gone, pig-dog!" thundered the Hun.

A WIDOW'S VOW.

But Jacques had no intention. He saw red. Cost what it would, he was determined to rescue the girl from the clutches of the monster who held her. The German, thinking he was about to be attacked, and quailing at the sight of the axe-head, which gleamed like silver in the moonlight, flung the woman away from him so that she fell, half-stunned, on the springy turf.

Jacques thought she had been badly injured, and that thought roused everything savage in his nature. His powerful right arm, which had felled many a stout oak in the forest of Argonne, scarcely two hundred yards away, flashed up in the moonlight, and with a sickening thud the axe blade descended on the officer's skull, literally cleaving it in twain.

One shriek split the night air. That sobered Jacques. Panic possessed him. He had killed an officer wearing the Kaiser's uniform—an offence he knew to be punishable with death by torture. He knew that Von Bissing would exact the full penalty. He picked up the unconscious form of the girl, and staggered home with her.

The next morning Jacques was arrested and taken before Von Bissing. Unluckily for Jacques, the slain man was a personal friend of the Bluebeard of Belgium.

When Jacques came before him Von Bissing had been drinking, and his rage at the death of one of his officers at the hands of a Belgian peasant drove him into a frenzy.

"Take this pig-dog away," he thundered, "and give him punishment No. 9. I myself will witness it."

I should explain that what is known as punishment No. 9 in the German army consists of the most terrible form of torture the human brain has ever invented. I will spare the reader the details.

Jacques bore the torture without letting a cry escape his lips.

The monster Von Bissing raged in dumb rage at the pale, stern set face of Etien, and at last, letting his fury break all bounds, he snatched a revolver from the holster of an attendant and shot the woodcutter through the head.

Jacques fell without a moan. To his pretty bride, who had only been married three months, tidings of the terrible event were conveyed by a friend. The charming little woman had been the belle of the village. Jacques had won her from a dozen other suitors, and he was as proud of her as she was of him. She did not weep when the [illegible] of her husband's death [illegible]. She determined henceforth to devote her life to the one purpose of taking vengeance on the brute who had robbed her of her mate.

Despite her lowly station, she was a woman of considerable brain power. The wrong she had suffered sharpened her wits. To get the bestial slave-driver of Belgium into her clutches was the desire which dominated her day and night.

"WELCOMED LIKE A BRIDE."

[illegible]

[illegible]

The widow of Jacques Etien set out for Brussels. She sought an interview with the actress and detailed [illegible]

As woman to woman, in the name of their country, Mme. Etien begged the actress to give her a chance to take the place which Von Bissing had assigned. After a great deal of persuasion, and hearing details of the terrible story, the woman, whose acting had charmed audiences all the world over, consented to the arrangement. And thus by one of Fate's grim ironies the wronged woman was welcomed like a bride to the house which Von Bissing had prepared.

THE NECKLACE OF PEARLS.

With a catlike tread Von Bissing entered the apartment. His eyes rapturously devoured her beauty. Little did he know that in the dainty lace handkerchief held against the beauty's right hand was concealed a tiny phial of poison calculated to produce untold agonies before the one who had taken it was mercifully released by death.

"Welcome, thrice welcome, fair lady!" said Von Bissing softly, advancing with outstretched hands.

"It has been my great desire to meet a man who has done so much for his country as you. I may be a Belgian actress, but my heart is in the Fatherland. My father was a German," she said, smiling up at him. She was playing her part perfectly.

"And you will stay here with me, little one?" he murmured eagerly, moving a step nearer.

"As long as you like, Count," she whispered.

Von Bissing turned to a sideboard and poured out two glasses of wine.

"Let us drink to our new-born love!" he cried and following his example the woman drained her glass to the dregs. Von Bissing recharged the glasses. Then he walked over to a small oaken cabinet.

"I would like to put a necklace of pearls round that little throat of yours," he said gloatingly.

Now was the woman's opportunity. The chance for which she had schemed and prayed had come. With a deft movement she slipped the deadly poison into Von Bissing's glass. But, unknown to her, the monster of Belgium had observed her movement through a small mirror placed on the top of the cabinet.

With consummate cunning he drew her gently from her position by the table on which stood the two glasses of wine to the bottom of the cabinet, and bade her kneel down and examine the rich collection of sparkling jewels it contained. Suspecting nothing, she obeyed. Von Bissing took but two seconds to step back to the table and noiselessly change the glasses.

"Now, my pretty one, choose what you would like and then come and drink once more to our love," he said.

She rose to her feet. In her hand was an almost priceless row of pearls. Von Bissing fastened it round her neck, then again, they drained their glasses.

"At last, you murderer, my husband, Jacques Etien, is avenged!" she screamed. "There was poison in that wine. In a few moments you will be a corpse!"

Von Bissing gave a low laugh.

"Not so, you vixen!" he grinned. "I have changed the loving cup, and it will be you who will be writhing in the agonies of death. Such is the way that I deal with all treacherous women!"

For a full ten minutes he gloated over the woman's dying agony. Laughing over every spasm of pain that contorted her face, he told her in minute detail the story of her husband's torture.

"I don't care! I'm going to him," gasped the woman. "Jacques! Jacques!"

"Call louder!" jeered Von Bissing. "He is underground, and his case is stopped with earth."

But the woman heeded him not. She gave one last convulsion, and lay still. Von Bissing poured himself out another glass of wine and staggered from the room, leaving the corpse of his victim alone in the flower-decked chamber.

THE scarcity of print paper is modifying the size of newspapers. That is very acceptable. Newspapers are so cheap that the tendency is to indulge in them to excess, and they have been so voluminous that it has been an excessive labor to find out what they had to say. Moreover, the great amplification of their contents which had come with linotype printing and a millon-a-minute presses had necessarily impaired their literary quality. Some of the good and important papers have come to be so slim that is a pleasure to read them. Even the Sunday papers are improved.—N. Y. Life. All of which means less "pulp" and more "brains."

WHEN the Legislature was dealing with the supplementary estimates Wm. McDonald was heard at his best in the lighter vein. He cited many instances from the curriculum to show "that education had fallen into the hands of faddists." The first case quoted by Mr. McDonald was, "Draw and paint a box of onions" "How does that look, or rather how does it smell?" was the comment of the member for North Bruce, and then he advised: "Teach them to grow onions instead of drawing them." Another choice specimen which made the members of the House rock with laughter was: "Draw a picture of the noisy geese that babble o'er the pool." "He is a goose who put that on the paper," declared the member for Bruce. "Draw a picture of the Attorney-General with his ear to the ground and that would be more true to life." he added. Then turning to Dr. Pyne Mr. McDonald asked: "Why don't you clip the wings of these jackasses who put these things on the paper?" Mr. Sam Carter—You mean their ears. (Loud laughter.) Mr. McDonald—Yes, their ears. The member for North Bruce strongly contended that art should not be made a plucking subject.

HONOR SOLDIERS MEMORY

Impressive Service at the Methodist Church for Two Walkerton Boys—Eloquent Message of Consolation and Hope by Rev. C. W. Cosens

Citizens of all denominations were represented in the large congregation that filled the Methodist Church on Sunday night the occasion being a memorial service for the two young men of the congregation, who fell recently on the field of battle. The Church had been beautifully adorned for Easter with flowers, and for the memorial service bands of royal purple and white were used to complete the decorations; and two shields, each bearing the name of one of the young fallen heroes, Corp. Everett Truax and Alvin Wilton were hung at the front of the auditorium. The front seat on both sides of the aisle were reserved for the members of the bereaved families.

The pastor, Rev. C. W. Cosens, delivered an eloquent message full of consolation and assurance for those who mourn: of encouragement for all who fight the good fight for liberty and humanity, and of inspiration for all who heard him.

Does a wise God approve of our best sons being thus torn from us? Out of this evil thing, War, some good will come. There are many things we cannot understand but those are days of faith. Liberty has been dearly won through the ages from the time the people of England cut off King Charles I's head. The United States opposed the Prussian idea once before when King George III of England, fresh from the Hanover school, tried absolutism on the United States. Before putting his head in the lion's mouth by trying on his views in England, he warily put his hand in first by trying it on the United States. His hand was bitten off. To-day the world was fighting the same fight against German militarism. The flower of mankind was being cut off to stem the tide of military oppression which threatened to carry the world down. They were fighting to free Germany from herself and she herself saw it not. The world owes a deep debt of honor to the men of courage who have died at their posts.

Rev. J. W. Sanderson who was a personal friend of one of the fallen heroes, Corp. Truax, spoke of the young man's conversion during a series of revival services here and the interest which he had taken in the work of the Y. M. C. A. at the Front.

At the opening of the service, Rev. Mr. Sanderson led in supplication for the men at the Front, the cleansing of national life, and for a righteous victory. An appropriate musical program was given by the choir under the leadership of Miss Flossie Cosens, which included beautifully rendered solos by Miss Whitehead (Gently Lord, O Gently Lead Us) and Miss Peyne (My God and Father While I Sleep) and an anthem by the choir (The Angels Roll Call) in which solo parts were taken by Mrs. Skelton and Mrs. Hebu. After the benediction the congregation remained standing while Mr. Claxton Tovell, acting organist, played the Dead March in Saul. An impressive Service was brought to a conclusion with the singing of "God Bless Our Soldiers True" to the music of the National Anthem.

Mr. Ed. Mosack was home from Preston for Easter.

The Walker House, Kincardine, has closed after sixty years.

A BRANTFORD SLATE. 1—Fibre Base. 2—First coating of Asphaltum. 3—Second coating of Asphaltum. 4—Covering of crushed slate.

Yesterday and To-day

Wooden shingles of twenty or thirty years ago were of splendid quality, and answered the purpose very well. There was nothing better at that time. In fact no other roofing material was on the market. Yet who would think of putting on shingles to-day? When the deterioration of wooden shingles became noticeable, efforts were made to invent a roofing that would not only be an economical and permanent substitute for wooden shingles, but one that would outlast them in service.

Brantford Roofing was the result. It has "made good." The secret of its success is this: First, the base is of pure, long-fibred felt which is thoroughly saturated with asphalt or mineral pitch. The asphalt and crystal roll roofings are then thickly coated with crushed rock particles, which adhere tightly to that base, and the whole forms a permanent fireproof, water-tight roof.

Brantford Asphalt and Rubber Roofing are made in three different weights. Crystal is made in heavy weight only, and in red or green natural colors. All three grades are pliable and well suited to either flat or steep roofs.

Brantford Roofing

comes in rolls with protected ends. The layers do not stick together and the roofing is easily laid. It requires no painting or tarring when put on. It does not crack with the cold nor melt with the summer's heat. It does not curl, split, rust or blow off. It gives permanent weather and fire protection at a reasonably low initial cost.

May we send you our roofing book and samples? They will show you the real value of these roofing materials.

GOLD DUST
digs deep after germs

Gold Dust not only cleans but sterilizes.

Soap merely washes over the surface, leaving a greasy film behind it.

Gold Dust "goes to the bottom," and insures absolute purity, and sanitary safety. Why not sanatize your home, as well as clean it?

Soap needs muscle help; Gold Dust does all the hard part of the task without your assistance.

Gold Dust is a good, honest, vegetable-oil soap, to which are added other purifying materials in just the right proportions to cleanse easily, vigorously, and without harm to fabric, utensils or hand.

Gold Dust is sold in 5c size and large packages. The large package means greater economy.

Buying automobiles is very like buying investment securities.

You consider
—the relation of price to value.
—The security or integrity of value
—the return.

When you consider the relation of price to value, the Overland Big Fours and Light Sixes conspicuously stand out as more automobile for the money than can be had in any other cars of similar specifications.

As to security—the Willys-Overland industry,—firmly intrenched,—with more than sixty-eight million of assets,—with more than four thousand successful dealers and branches, is squarely back of the integrity of value in these cars throughout the whole period of their use in your service.

As to return—the return these cars give you in service. Their economy of operation and rugged reliability are established by over three hundred thousand in use.

Value! Security!! Return!!!

Until May 1st, Big Fours $1190; Light Sixes $1380, while we have them to deliver—thereafter $1250 and $1435.

To Improve Party-Line Service

WE suggest consideration for the persons who may be talking on your party-line. Do not interrupt their conversation. It is discourteous and unfair.

1. Answer only your own signal. If there is any confusion about the rings, report the fact promptly to the Chief Operator.
2. When you wish to call, remove the receiver and listen. If the line is in use hang up the receiver and wait until the conversation is finished.
3. Do not allow children or others to listen on the line when it is in use or to play with the telephone at any time.
4. Make your calls as brief as possible. Short conversations will keep the line open and make the service of most value to everyone.

THE FRUIT OF THE SPIRIT

(Written for the Telescope)

O Spirit of the Lord descend
And fill our hearts with love
The sweetest fruit our God hath sent
To earth from Heaven above.

God's love implanted in our heart
Then joy and peace abound
By trusting in God's promises
That in his word are found.

Long suffering and gentleness
Are fruits the spirit yield
From Christ they flow into our heart
And by His Spirit sealed.

Goodness and faith God's spirit grants
Unto His people all
And through the precious blood of Christ
We're ransomed from the fall.

Meekness and temperance beautifies
The character of those
To whom God's Spirit giveth strength
To overcome their foes.

CITIZENS ANSWERED CALL

To Public Prayer on Friday Night—Large Attendance at Town Hall in Spite of Desperately Bad Weather

Walkerton's response to the Call to Prayer issued by the Town Council was most encouraging. Friday night produced about the most disagreeable weather of the whole winter but a crowd turned out large enough to fill the lower floor, besides a few in the gallery. Men, women and children of all classes were present, indicating the readiness which citizens show at the present hour to interest themselves in serious things. Mayor Johnston opened the meeting with a few remarks. Throughout England and Canada, he said, meetings of this kind were being held on Good Friday. He called upon Rev. Thos. Wilson, as representative of the Ministerial Association to take charge of the meeting. Prayer and song, together with a brief scriptural reading, took up the whole attention of the meeting. Rev. Mr. Sanderson first led in a period of Confession and Supplication. Rev. R. Perdue followed with prayer for the King and those in Authority over us. Rev. Mr. Wilson then read an appropriate scripture lesson from the psalms. Mr. Norman Robertson prayed for the men who had gone from our Dominion especially remembering those from the town and county. Mr. James Warren and Rev. J. H. Granzenbach made supplication for the Sailors of the Navy. Rev. C. N. Cosens prayed for the men of our Armies. Rev. D. McLennan and Mr. John McCool remembered the sick and suffering, the prisoners in a foreign country, the doctors, nurses and those who are mourning friends. Rev. Mr. Rock prayed for the Divine Blessing upon the Allies, and Mr. James Tolton prayed for the dawn of Peace when the nations swords shall be beaten into pruning-hooks. The meeting closed with the singing of "God Save Our Splendid Men" to the music of the National Anthem.

Mr. George Siegner has an interesting curiosity at his residence. Last Feb. he cut off some small branches of an apple tree, and brought them into the house and put them in a jar of water. Bruce County Gave $27,116.90

According to the official report just issued, Bruce County contributed the above amount for Red Cross on appeal made last October. The contributions by municipalities are stated as follows: Elderslie $1,509, Greenock $1,002, Huron $1,194, Kincardine Tp. $855.40, Kinloss $705 00, Lindsay $200 55, Saugeen $1,002, St. Edmunds $57 30, Hepworth $230 56, Lucknow $2,000, Paisley $773 12, Port Elgin $1,049 75, Tara $303 25, Teeswater $591 83, Tiverton $118 00, Chesley $1,305 00, Kincardine t'n $3,281 02, Southampton $650, Walkerton $1,557, Wiarton $500,—total $27,116.90.

To Raise Ministers' Salaries

Delegates from the Baptist Churches from Southampton, Port Elgin, Tiverton, Glamis, Walkerton, Willscroft and surrounding country assembled at Paisley to discuss the plan of the home mission board of Ontario to increase the salaries of ministers to a minimum of $900. Addresses were made by Mr. E. Roy Sayles of Port Elgin, and Rev. Mr. Schutt of Toronto. It was moved and carried unanimously by those present that the plan be formed in the following resolution: "That we, the members of Baptist churches assembled at Paisley do approve of the plan of the home mission board for the increase in pastors' salaries and that we pledge ourselves to go back to our respective churches and do all in our power to have the salaries raised to the proposed standard."

Heavier Grain, Better Quality

"I used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on half a field of oats and found that the grain was heavier and of better quality on that part of the field than on the other half. I am well pleased with results."

Well Satisfied

CONRAD FEICK, Stratford, Ontario, says:—

"I used some Homestead Fertilizer this season on my oats and I am well satisfied with the results. One could stand back twenty rods and see just where I sowed it."

One Of The Biggest Crops Ever

LOUIS WALPER, Dashwood, Ontario, says:—

"I have used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on my wheat and must say I had one of the biggest crops ever seen on my farm."

Lasting Results

J. A. GORDON, Arkona, Ontario, says:

"You ask me what I think of the Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer. Well I have used it for about five years and the first year I sowed it I shut it off once across the field and my neighbour said he could see that the strip eighty rods away and you could see it two years after in the meadow, so I think it pays all right."

Colonization Grants Cut Down

Ever since the formation of Bruce County what has been known as The Peninsula from the boundary of Arran and Amabel to Tobermory or the Jumping off place, has been receiving Govt. money known as Colonization Road Grants. These Townships pass by-laws and receive dollar for dollar for the amount spent on roads. The Govt. is anxious to get Bruce County to adopt the Good Roads System and as a means to that end has cut out Amabel from any Colonization grant this year. The grants to the other townships in the Peninsula have all been reduced.

AUTOINTOXICATION OR SELF-POISONING

The Dangerous Condition Which Produces Many Well Known Diseases.

HOW TO GUARD AGAINST THIS TROUBLE

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" — The Wonderful Fruit Medicine — will Protect You

Autointoxication means self-poisoning, caused by continuous or partial constipation, or insufficient action of the bowels.

Instead of the refuse matter passing daily from the body, it is absorbed by the blood. As a result, the Kidneys and Skin are overworked, in their efforts to rid the blood of this poisoning.

Poisoning of the blood in this way often causes Indigestion, Loss of Appetite and Disturbed Stomach. It may produce Headaches and Sleeplessness. It may irritate the Kidneys and bring on Pain in the Back, Rheumatism, Gout, and Rheumatic Pains. It is the chief cause of Eczema — and keeps the whole system unhealthy by the constant absorption into the blood of this refuse matter.

"Fruit-a-tives" will always cure Autointoxication or self-poisoning — as "Fruit-a-tives" acts gently on bowels, kidneys and skin, strengthens the bowels and tones up the nervous system.

Keep hens this year

EGG and poultry prices, the like of which have seldom or never been experienced, certainly make it worth anyone's while to start keeping hens. By doing so you have fresh eggs at the most trifling cost. At the same time you have the splendid satisfaction of knowing that you are doing something towards helping Britain, Canada and the Allies achieve victory this year.

Increased production of food helps not only to lower the high cost of living, but it helps to increase the urgently needed surplus of Canada's food for export. It saves money otherwise spent for eggs and poultry at high prices, and saves the labor of others whose effort is needed for more vital war work.

The Ontario Department of Agriculture will give every possible assistance by affording information about poultry keeping. Write for free bulletin which tells how to keep hens (address below).

"A vegetable garden for every home"

Nothing should be overlooked in this vital year of the war. The Department earnestly invites everyone to help increase production by growing vegetables. Even the smallest plot of ground, when properly cultivated, produces a surprising amount of vegetables. Experience is not essential.

On request the Department of Agriculture will send valuable literature, free of charge, giving complete directions for preparing soil, planting, cultivation, etc. A plan of a vegetable garden, indicating suitable crop to grow, best varieties and their arrangement in the garden, will be sent free to any address.

A P[illegible]ZLING CASE

"There is another thing you must find out," said Gilbert, as Tancred was about to go, "what connection Mazzucata has with the black carnation."

"Oh, now you open up another romance," replied Tancred, in a perplexed tone; "the complications are bad enough now, so let us solve the problems we have in hand before we look for new ones. Good-bye, Sir Gilbert, when I see you again I shall know all about the black carnation."

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

Number Three.

I do not at all agree with Tancred's idea regarding Dallas, for I feel sure he is innocent, and, besides, has not enough brains to conceive and execute such a difficult task. My belief is, that Ilma Cellinati killed her mistress out of jealousy, and for the following reasons:

She is in love with Dallas, who adored her mistress; and to destroy her rival invented that devilish bouquet.

She managed to get Gilbert to innocently throw it, in order to avert suspicion from herself.

She gives false evidence in the box in order to hang Gilbert, so as to be safe.

From a feeling of compunction she warned Gilbert to fly, knowing such flight would be a confession of guilt, and thus, without committing a further crime she would ward off suspicion.

CHAPTER VII.

Having thus laid our plans, Tancred and myself proceeded to carry them out, and in order both to lighten the labor and economize time, we divided the business into two portions. Tancred was to make inquiries at the shop of Phillis & Co. regarding the existence of a black carnation; and I, through the agency of my man, Pointer, was to discover the movements of Dallas from the time he arrived in Paris. Having thus arranged matters we parted to execute our several tasks; and I returned to my rooms to interview Pointer, while Tancred went off to Phillis & Co., ostensibly to purchase a buttonhole, but in reality to find out about that confounded flower. We were to meet next day at the Old Friends' Club, to report on our movements, and decide upon what was to be done.

I think I have mentioned Pointer before, but you only know his name, not his admirable qualities which make him the prince of valets. You have doubtless read 'Les Trois Mousquetaires, by M. Dumas, which contains the admirable character of the lackey Planchet. If so, there is no need for me to describe Pointer: he is a replica of Planchet, faithful, shrewd, and blindly devoted to my interest. Nowadays, such a servant is a jewel of price, for what with the revolutionary ideas of the lower orders, and the all-men-are-equal theory, it is almost impossible to find a decent valet. I, therefore, valued Pointer very much, and as he has been with me for many years, he is completely in my confidence, being, I may say, a humble friend and adviser, though he has too much good sense to venture on any familiarity; if he did, egad, we would soon part, for I am a staunch supporter of class divisions.

Such remarks, however, are scarcely to the point, save in showing the reason why I trusted Pointer so fully; but, being an old man, I am naturally somewhat garrulous, and therefore a trifle egotistical, for I have noticed garrulous men generally stick to discussing themselves. However, I will not digress further, but merely remark that Pointer was an excellent servant, and well fitted to perform the mission with which I now entrusted him.

"By the way, Pointer," I said, after having led delicately up to the subject, "do you know the valet of Mr. Dallas?"

"Very well, sir."

One admirable quality about Pointer is that he answers exactly what he has been asked, and makes no comments thereon.

"What is his name, Pointer?"

"Dabsworth, sir."

"He is in town, I believe?"

"Yes, sir."

"And his master?"

"Has left town, sir. No address given."

"Does Dabsworth expect him back shortly?"

"Can't say, sir."

"Can you keep a secret, Pointer?"

"I can, sir."

"Good. I will trust you. Mr. Dallas is mixed up in this opera house tragedy."

"Is he indeed, sir?"

Another excellent qualification possessed by Pointer is, that he is never surprised at anything, but accepts the most startling statements in a calm and unemotional manner. Such a trait cannot be too highly valued in a servant.

"You know Sir Gilbert Fressinger has been arrested Pointer?"

"So the papers say, sir."

"I am, as you know, a friend of Sir Gilberts, and I wish to assist him to prove his innocence, for of course he is perfectly innocent, Pointer."

"Of course, sir."

"I have reason to believe that Mr. Dallas knows more about this affair than he chooses to say. Not that he is guilty in any criminal sense, Pointer. I make no accusation against him—you understand?"

"I do, sir."

"But, as I said before, he is connected in some way with the death of Madame Mazzucata. Now, Mr. Dallas told me that he arrived from Paris on the sixteenth of May, which was the date of the tragedy. I have reason to believe he was in London before that date, and has some strong cause to conceal his movements. What I wish you to do is to find out from Dabsworth when his master returned to town."

"I will do so, major."

"And, Pointer, there was a letter posted to Madame Mazzucata from Paris, which, I fancy, came from Mr. Dallas. You might sound his man on that point also."

"Yes, sir."

"That is all, I think, Pointer."

"Very good, sir. I will make my report to-night. Have I your permission, sir, to go out this afternoon to make inquiries?"

"Yes, Pointer."

"Very good, sir. I will find out all you desire to know. Anything else, sir?"

"Not at present. Oh, by the way, give me that book."

Pointer obeyed, and handed me a French novel, in which I was just then much interested, after which he retired quietly and left me to my own reflections.

This confounded detective fever certainly disorganized my life very much. Formerly, my mind being completely at rest, I was the slave of habit, and with me, one day was exactly the same as another. I arose about ten o'clock, and after a light breakfast read the papers, then I dressed myself carefully and went for a ride in the park, afterwards I had luncheon at my club, called on my friends, walked in the park, and amused myself according to my fancy until dinner-time. When that occurred I dressed myself again and took my meal at the club, after which there was either the theatre, a visit, or a game of whist, and bed before midnight. It was a very pleasant life and regular, but this detective fever put an end to all that by exciting my mind. Morn, noon and night, I was thinking about the case, and the idea of the Black Carnation was continually with me. I rode in the park—Mazzucata. I paid a visit—Mazzucata. I ate my dinner, I played whist, I retired to bed Mazzucata—heavens, this woman dominated my entire life, and until I discovered and punished her assassin, I saw no way of escaping from her influence. I was the slave of an idea, a fancy, and the more resolutely did it remain there, and the case, though interesting, was exhausting. Judging from my own sufferings, I should say that police officers die young, for such wear and tear on the imagination must inevitably end in wearing out the brain long before its due time in the course of Nature.

Detective fever had made me do many things which I considered unfit for a gentleman—it made me ask questions about my friends' private affairs—it made me suspect my social equals—it made me consult with my social inferiors, to wit, Pointer, yet so keen was I on the result, that I confess, without blushing, that I did not care two straws about the means, provided the end was attained.

How I got through that afternoon I did not know. I could not read; I could not walk. I went to the club, and tried to converse with my friends, but failed dismally; so, in despair, I took a quick turn in the park by myself, and returned to my rooms at five o'clock in order to dress for dinner—which was a mere farce, seeing I had lost my appetite—and hear what Pointer had to say.

He was waiting for me, as calm and composed as ever; so, though I was burning to know the result of his inquiries, I emulated his stoical behavior, and saw him perform his various duties in connection with my evening toilet, without evincing any undue impatience.

"Well, Pointer," I said at length, when I was nearly ready, "did you have any success?"

"Yes, sir."

"What, you found out all I desire to know?"

"I found out everything, sir."

"Capital. Tell me all about it."

Pointer, who has been in the army, held himself upright in a rigid fashion, and delivered his report in as few words as possible.

"According to your directions, sir, I called on Dabsworth, and asked him to come with me to a public house which is kept by an old friend of mine who was a butler. Dabsworth sir, came at once, as, his master being out of town, he had plenty of time on his hands. So we went to my friend's house, and had a chat over a bottle of claret."

"The wine of gentlemen," I muttered grimly, "and valets drink it. The world is going to the devil."

"While thus engaged, sir, I led up to the question of travelling, and asked Dabsworth how he liked the east, which he didn't, sir. Then, sir, he told me a queer tale about himself and his master in Paris."

"Yes, yes; go on, Pointer."

"He promised not to tell a soul, sir; but, Lord bless you, sir, 'When the wine's in the wit's out' and Dabsworth's got a poor head for the bottle. Even claret goes to the head, sir; and it did to-day."

I felt a certain disgust for myself at countenancing such conduct as getting a man's secrets out of him through drink; but when I thought of the serious position in which my poor friend was placed, and of the scoundrelly fashion in which Dallas was acting all my scruples vanished, and I commanded Pointer to proceed.

"Mr. Dallas, sir," said Pointer, promptly, "arrived in Paris about the seventh of May, and came on to London on the eighth."

"Oh!" I cried, startled at finding Tancred's suspicions confirmed, "then he was in London at least a week before the day on which he said he arrived."

"I suppose so, sir. But he didn't tell Dabsworth he was going to England. No, sir. Dabsworth only found that out by letter."

"What letter?"

"The letter, sir, posted from Paris to Madame Mazzucata."

"Did Dabsworth post it there?"

"Yes, sir, by the instructions of Mr. Dallas, who was then in London."

"The deuce!" I muttered, rather at a loss to understand this complicated recital. "Be more explicit, Pointer."

"Sir, it is difficult to tell all plainly; but, as far as I could understand Dabsworth, who told me the story in scraps, it is this way. On the eighth, Mr. Dallas told his valet that he was going to see some friends at Amiens."

"Good. Amiens is a station on the line running from Paris to Boulogne and Calais."

"Dabsworth, according to instructions, was to remain in Paris with the luggage of Mr. Dallas, till he was told to come on to Amiens."

"I understand."

"He remained in Paris, sir," resumed Pointer, deliberately, "for some days; and on the eleventh, or thereabouts, received a letter from Mr. Dallas, enclosing another letter endorsed to Madame Mazzucata, which he was told to post—an order which he obeyed."

"And the outside envelope, addressed to Dabsworth, bore an English stamp and postmark?"

"Yes, sir."

"While all the time Dabsworth thought his master was at Amiens."

"That is the strange part of it, sir. On the fifteenth, Dabsworth received a letter from Mr. Dallas, with a French stamp and the Amiens postmark, telling him Mr. Dallas would precede him to England, and that he was to come on to London on the sixteenth with the luggage."

"Judging, then, by the first letter, Mr. Dallas was in England; and by the second, he remained at Amiens."

"Yes, sir! I cannot understand it."

"Queer," I muttered, rather perplexed; "I expect the solution is this, Pointer: Mr. Dallas went straight to England on the eighth and posted that letter, then he returned to Amiens and wrote the other. What time did Mr. Dallas arrive in London?"

"On the morning of the sixteenth. He travelled by the night mail, sir."

"And Dabsworth?"

"Arrived in the evening about seven o'clock on the sixteenth of May."

"Egad," I said to myself, in surprise, "Tancred is right after all, and Dallas was in London all the time. Our friend has a talent for intrigue."

"Anything else, sir?"

"No, thank you, Pointer. That is all I wish to know, and I congratulate you on your talent for finding out secrets. Keep this information to yourself."

"Yes, sir."

"And now I will go down to the club."

I was destined not to reach the club for at least some time, as, just as I was leaving my sitting-room, a man rapidly mounted the stairs.

"My dear Major, I am fortunate in thus catching you."

"Tancred."

"The same. Come to your sitting-room, Major. I have found out all I wish to know, and could not wait until to-morrow. And you—"

"Have discovered all the movements of Dallas."

"Excellent. We will now put two and two together."

"Will you have a sherry and bitters?"

"Thank you, yes. I can only spare a few minutes, as I have to catch a train for Surbiton, but I can learn and tell everything in that time. Come major, you begin."

Pointer placed the wine on the table, poured it out, and on a sign from me, retired, after which I began and told Tancred the story of the letters, to which he listened quietly without evincing the slightest surprise.

"I was right, you see, major," he said, sipping his sherry.

"You were, sir, you were," I answered, generously, for which I am in fault, I always admit myself to be so. "Dallas was in London a few days."

"At least a week."

"But he returned to Amiens to post that second letter."

"Not he," answered Tancred emphatically, "he wrote and addressed that letter before he left Paris, and left it at Amiens with instructions to be posted on the fifteenth."

"You think so?"

"I am sure of it. Dallas, as I surmised came to London to convince himself of the truth regarding Mazzucata. She left Paris on the sixth, and he arrived on the seventh, consequently he followed her to London on the eighth; but in order to establish an alibi, should it be necessary, he invented that Amiens business, what I admit is very clever."

"You were also right about that black carnation."

"Yes, he sent that to Paris to be posted, but like a fool, forgot that he was betraying himself to his valet by the English postmark."

"It is strange that such a clever man should make such an error."

"It is, indeed, but the cleverest people always overreach themselves. Dallas came to England, found out that Mazzucata was about to marry Gilbert, and set himself to work to frighten her with the black carnation."

"Which he obtained where?"

Tancred took a slip of paper from his pocket and read out an address—

Simon Maxwell,
Florist,
Lippiston.

"Where is Lippiston, Tancred?"

"It's a little village near Harrow, where this man keeps a nursery garden."

"And grows black carnations?"

"Yes; he is the inventor of the flower."

"Where did you find out this?"

"From Phillis & Co. I saw the head of the firm, who, by the way, is a great friend of mine."

"What's his name?"

"It isn't a 'he,' it's a 'she,'" replied Tancred, calmly; "the Hon. Mrs. Lauster."

"My dear Tancred, you don't mean to say——"

"But I do mean to say. Most women take to the millinery business, so Mrs. Lauster, to be novel and make money, has started a florist's under the name of Phillis & Co."

"Does she do well?"

"Rather; makes no end of money. You have, doubtless, observed how regularly Lauster pays his gambling debts now."

"Yes, but I didn't know——"

"Of course, you didn't, but that's not the question. Mrs. Lauster told me that the black carnation is in existence, and is grown by this man at Lippiston."

"Did she think Mazzucata's case had anything to do with this Simon Maxwell?"

"She thought it queer, certainly, but as she is a woman who can hold her tongue, she kept her own counsel. Few people know about the existence of this flower, as Maxwell guards the plant jealously."

"Then how did Dallas get a bud to give to Mazzucata?"

"That is the question. We must find out."

"By calling on Maxwell, I suppose."

"Precisely. And then, Major Granby, here is a chance for you to do the [illegible] business. Will you go down to Lippiston and see this man?"

"Certainly. I will go down to-morrow; but what excuse can I make?"

"Oh, tell him you wish to look at the greenhouses and buy plants; but above all do not ask to see the black carnation."

"Why not?"

"My dear major, neither you nor I know anything about this man, and for all I know he also may be mixed up in the affair."

"What a marked prejudice! Absurd."

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson III.
April 15, 1917.

Jesus the Good Shepherd.—John 10: 1-18.

Commentary.—I. Christ the door of the fold (vs. 1-10). 1-6. "Verily," repeated for emphasis, shows that what was to follow was closely connected with what has just been written. Jesus declared that those who cast out the man born blind, when they ought to have protected him, were thieves and robbers. They were like those who would climb over the wall of a sheepfold to do injury to sheep and their owner. The Eastern sheepfold was a place enclosed by a stone wall, the greater part of which was open to the sky, while a part was covered by a roof. The entrance had a solid door which could be securely fastened. It was the shepherd's right to be admitted to the fold by the porter, who had charge of the door. The sheep recognized the voice of the shepherd, and were ready to follow him. This figure needed further explanation, and Jesus proceeded to make his teaching clear. 7. I am the door of the sheep—As the sheepfold stands for protection—under the care of a considerate keeper, so the entrance into that condition is Christ himself. There is no salvation outside of him. Through Christ the believer enters into a state of grace in which he is free from condemnation and is consciously saved. There is no other way by which one may enter the fold of God. Good works, good resolutions, or forms of religion will not afford an entrance into a state of salvation. 8. thieves and robbers—Jesus used the expression, "All that ever came before me," to include, not the prophets who foretold his coming and mission, but the Jewish leaders who had taught the leaders wrong doctrines, the traditions of men, and had bound heavy burdens upon them. They were not true shepherds, for they plundered the flock instead of caring for them. The sheep did not hear them—These false leaders did not speak with an authority that won the confidence of the people. The "thieves and robbers" are contrasted to Christ "the door." 9. If any man enter in—There is admittance for all who will enter the fold through Christ the door. he shall be saved—He shall be free from condemnation, and shall have power over sin. shall go in and out, and find pasture—As the sheep are led out through the door into the rich pastures, and are led in at night for protection, so the followers of Jesus are afforded sustenance and security for their souls. 10. the thief cometh ... to destroy—In Palestine there are still those who attempt to steal sheep from the shepherd. The Pharisees were self centered. They desired wealth and honor. They wished to be considered eminently pious, while at heart they were thieves and robbers. might have life—The motives of the Pharisees were in sharp contrast to those of Jesus. They would destroy the flock, but he would give life, spiritual life. abundantly—There is abounding spiritual life for those who enter the fold by Christ the door. It is not the will of God that any of his followers should be stinted and in want. He provides on an abundant scale for all who will trustingly yield themselves to him. If we are emaciated and destitute, it is because we are not willing to make a proper use of Christ the door. The abundant life includes victory over sin and deliverance from it. The Lord said to His people of old, "If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land" (Isa. 1: 19). He intended that this should apply to the temporal affairs of the people of Judah, but it had also its spiritual application. Those who were called by his name would have enjoyed great prosperity in material things, as also in spiritual, if they had cheerfully and fully obeyed the Lord. Jesus has made full provisions for his followers, and they will have abundant spiritual life if they are "willing and obedient."

II. Christ the Good Shepherd (vs. 11-18). 11. I am the good shepherd—The figure is changed. From being the door, the way into the state of salvation, Jesus becomes the shepherd of His followers with all that is included in that relation. "The word translated good can not be adequately translated; it means beautiful, noble, good, as opposed to foul, mean, wicked. It sums up the chief attributes of ideal perfection.... He is the Good Shepherd, who gives His life for the sheep, as opposed to the wicked thief who takes their lives to preserve his own. Thus in Christ is realized the ideal Shepherd of the Old Testament."—Plummer. Giveth His life for the sheep—The literal shepherd has been known to give up his life in defending his sheep from robbers; Jesus, the good Shepherd, laid down His life that He might save the world from spiritual and eternal death. 12. Hireling—One who is hired. He has no interest in the flock further than to put in his time and receive his wages. It is nothing to him whether the sheep thrive and are safe or not. He does not own the sheep and cares much more for his own ease and safety than for the welfare of the flock. The hireling shepherd represents the Pharisees who had no interest in the people further than to secure emolument for themselves. The wolf—Whatever threatened the safety of the flock is represented by the wolf. The hireling's motto was, "Safety for myself first." 13. Because he is an hireling—His love for the sheep and his responsibility to his master are not strong enough to keep him at his post of duty when danger threatens him and the flock. The hireling shepherd is of little value in caring for sheep, and the hireling shepherd in the church does not have any proper regard for the spiritual interests of his flock, but his concern is for his own interests.

14. Know my sheep—The Oriental shepherd knows his sheep and calls them each by name. A Lebanon shepherd once said, "If you were to put a cloth over my eyes, and bring me any sheep and only let me put my hands on its face, I could tell in a moment if it was mine or not." The good Shepherd knows every one of his sheep in all time and in all lands by name, and he never forgets. More than that, he knows the exact physical, mental and spiritual condition of each and he knows the circumstances of each. And am known of mine—"And mine own know me" (R. V.). To know Jesus Christ is to have yielded fully to Him and to have by faith received Him as a personal Saviour. Sheep come to know their shepherd by his voice, and they obey his calls, but they flee from the voice of strangers. 15. Even as the Father knoweth Me, and I know the Father (R. V.)—This is clearer than the Authorized Version. There should not be a full stop at the end of v. 14. An intimate acquaintance exists between Christ and His followers. It is life eternal to know Him and the Father.

16. Other sheep .... not of this fold—Without doubt Jesus here meant that he had followers among the Gentiles. These were far from the Jewish to the good Shepherd. This statement would not be pleasing to the Pharisees, to whom Jesus was speaking. They could not conceive how any outside of the pale of Judaism could be of sufficient value to claim the notice of the Almighty. This would be a stunning blow to pharasaic pride. Them also I must bring—He had spoken of laying down his life for the sheep. This he would do for all races and conditions of men. They shall hear my voice—The Gentiles would know the voice of the good Shepherd as well as would the Jews. They shall become one flock, one shepherd (R. V.)—The wall of separation between Jews and Gentiles would be broken down. All Christians now are in one spirit, but they will be one in a richer and deeper sense when all misunderstandings shall have been swept away and we shall know as we are known. 17. Therefore doth my Father love me—The Father loved the Son, but he also loved the world enough to give his Son to save mankind. The ground for the Father's love for his Son is here stated to be the Son's dying for the world. 18. No man taketh it from me—Jesus here makes a clear declaration of his power over his own life. No one could take it from him without his consent. He could lay it down and he could take it up again at will. This commandment—To die and rise again. From my Father (R. V.)—The intimate relations of the Son to the Father is here shown, as also the Son's obedience to the Father's word.

Questions.—Who are represented by those who climb up some other way into the sheepfold? What is said of the mutual knowledge of the shepherd and the sheep? What is implied by Jesus' statement, "I am the door of the sheep"? Why does Jesus call himself the good Shepherd? Draw the contrast between the shepherd and the hireling. What is meant by "other sheep"? What power had Jesus over his life?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Christianity Portrayed.

I. Embracing full redemption for man.

II. Revealing atonement through Christ.

I. Embracing full redemption for man. We have here a precise statement of a definite historical situation. The time had come for Jesus to lead his flock out of the theocracy which was destined to pass away. He recognized the sequel of that inevitable passing away of Judaism in the recent expulsion from the temple of the man whom he had healed of blindness, and also in the hostility of the rulers, of which he found himself the object. The Pharisees claimed to be the shepherds of Israel. They decreed who should be admitted to, or cast out of, the fold. They professed to be interpreters of God's truth and with it to feed his flock. They had established an authority over the people which had no sanction in the divine law to enhance their own greatness at the cost of the spiritual welfare of the people, a course which involved their spiritual ruin. They had done this by evil methods by strategem, by hypocrisy and greed. Selfishness had destroyed the very life of the nation. The officials had listened with scorn and in anger to Christ's assertions of union between himself and God, while they contemplated a step to put him out of their way and to shatter his claims. Jesus read their thoughts and answered them calmly with the consciousness that such an event would only point to his own voluntary self-sacrifice and render him the special object of his Father's love. Jewish unbelief could not defeat his purpose to establish a kingdom into which should be admitted Jews and Gentiles. Jesus represented himself in contrast with a type of character which he called "the thief." He contrasted the religious guidance of the Pharisees, as the shepherds of Israel, with that afforded by himself in respect to loyal devotion and obedience. In the allegories of this lesson he laid down the relation which should obtain between himself and his people unto the end of time. He presented himself before the whole race of man and declared himself able to deal with and meet the needs of every individual, securing unto all, who accept him as Shepherd, perfect safety and freedom with sufficiency in all things. His surpassing goodness is shown in the provision he has made of all things necessary for the salvation of his flock. As the good Shepherd he thoroughly identifies himself with the sheep. He rescues them from the great robber. He brings them to his fold.

II. Revealing atonement through Christ. The first word picture here describes the forming of the Messianic flock and its departure from the theocratic fold; the second describes the life of the flock, when formed and led by the Messiah, when the fold no longer represented the ancient covenant, but Messiah's salvation and that complete happiness which believers enjoy. At first God caused the porter to open the door to the shepherd. When Christ came, he became the door of a constant daily salvation. By him alone man has access to the Father, the enjoyment of salvation and a title to heaven. To all who accept the atonement of Christ the provisions of God's spiritual bounty are open. Christ's coming actually brought the blessings of the divine life in reach of all. It was by no flash of splendor or miracle of external power that he proved his divine leadership over the hearts of men, but by coming to walk with them, to toil, hunger and suffer with them and to give his life for them. The life which he yielded up for the ends of love was restored in the triumphs of love. The taking up of his life was as much in the divine plan as the laying it down. The concealed aid of heaven was at his bidding. But more than all this was the strength of his submission. The Jews were ignorant of the power that restrained itself. They regarded him as their victim. Jesus spoke of his power to show how complete was his obedience. He spoke not of power to avoid his sacrifice, but to make it. His majesty was apparent when he spoke of the complete mastery and control over his life. His life-service was to be crowned by his sacrificial death.—T. R. A.

Get Out Of Ruts

Lord Shaughnessy Tells What Canada Needs.

Lord Shaughnessy may be best known now as President of the Canadian Pacific Railway Company. When the inner history of the war comes to be written he will be still better known as one of the effective organizers of victory. From the beginning he threw his energy, and directed the energies of many of his staff, into the national cause.

When asked for a statement as to Canada's greatest needs at this critical time, especially in making arrangements for returned soldiers, Lord Shaughnessy said:

The return of our soldiers will be a tremendous opportunity for our country. Shall we seize it, or bungle and miss it? That will be the test of the quality of Canadian statesmanship.

HAVE THE MEN CHANGED?

They will not come back exactly the same as they were, but some people have an absurdly exaggerated idea of the change we may expect. The slacker has been improved by discipline, and the downright steady man has certainly not been turned into a slacker. Taken as a whole, the men who return able-bodied will be found better men than ever, physically and mentally—more hardy, self-reliant, and enterprising.

I take for granted that the present system of getting ex-soldiers employment will be greatly improved and developed, for it is barely able to place the few thousands already with us.

There is too much haphazard employment, at the best of times; and with a flood of men having to be placed simultaneously there is a greatly increased danger of shoving them into places without regard to suitability.

Having still some time to prepare, there will be no excuse if we do not devise schemes of employment which will use a high percentage of each man's capacity, instead of a low percentage.

The man and his employer and the country at large will all gain by this. The man can make most of work that he is interested in and has skill for.

MAKE COUNTRY LIFE MORE ATTRACTIVE.

I am glad to hear that the National Service Commission is taking steps to discover the previous trade or calling of each man now under arms, and his intentions or capacities for his future career, at any rate in the matter of agriculture. That is the foundation industry of the whole country. Farming should be made so profitable, by educational and financial aid, and the social conditions of rural life should be so improved, that thousands of men with natural inclinations that way will be attracted to agriculture and will succeed at it.

But even when that is done, the great majority of the men will have to be provided for in other kinds of work. I should like to see thousands of them, not now highly skilled, given special training to equip them with the skill they lack. I am sure it would pay the country to give it them.

But we have got to come down to particulars, and find out in detail what is best for the men—yes, and for each particular man, with his individual capacities and aptitudes.

By doing that very thing for men returning disabled, the Military Hospitals Commission has given the country a splendid lead. This lead should be followed in dealing with the mass of men returning later on. The benefits of this system should finally be extended to our people generally, so that every boy on leaving school should be directed and helped into the occupation that he can do best in—and trained specially for it, whenever that is by any means possible.

TALENTS DISCOVERED IN HOSPITAL.

The Commission, I notice, gives men a good deal of occupation and instruction while they are still under medical treatment. In fact, these occupations form part of the curative treatment—a really valuable part. But they also help to develop a man's technical skill. Often they reveal astonishing talents which even the man himself did not know he possessed.

An extra privilege is given to men who are so incapacitated that they cannot take up their old line of work. They are given special training for a new occupation, in technical colleges or otherwise. And they are helped to choose the occupation most suitable and profitable for them, by the advice of medical and vocational experts.

PLUCK WINS AGAINST HEAVY ODDS.

It is good to know that even a great injury, such as the loss of the right arm, cannot now prevent a plucky man from earning a good living.

I am glad to see there is plenty of variety in the list of occupations that the wounded are being trained for.

We want to get out of ruts. We do our thinking in ruts, and that keeps us acting in ruts.

Take agriculture, for instance. People have a habit of thinking and saying that intensive farming is not suited to Canadians; and, accordingly, it is not developed. But Canadians pride themselves on their adaptability; and many of them might transfer their energies from extensive to intensive farming with great advantage to themselves and the country.

This is a line of industry which partly disabled soldiers, with sufficient training, could carry on both easily and profitably.

NATIONAL CO-OPERATION.

It involves thorough co-operation, of course. But is it too much to hope that co-operation, or government organization of buying and selling—in other words, national co-operation—may be applied in the near future to the agricultural industry in general, intensive and extensive alike?

While we must avoid impracticable schemes, we must not turn down a scheme off-hand as impracticable just because we have had no experience of it. Nor must we be scared of big things just because they are big.

We must investigate all plans that seem to contain any promise of usefulness, experiment with those that still seem promising after being subjected to rigid examination; and boldly adopt those that stand the test of experiment.

"CAUTION" AS AN EXCUSE FOR TIMIDITY.

At a critical time like this, with tremendous problems to solve, we must be bold without rashness, and not flatter our timidity with the name of caution.

I said just now that the Military Hospitals Commission had given the country a good lead by training men for the occupations they were found most suited to. And there is another very striking feature of its work that offers a good example for the whole country to follow.

When a soldier is found to have tuberculosis, he is given the most scientific treatment in a sanatorium, for as long as his case requires. And he is taught not only how to conquer the disease in himself, but how to avoid spreading it to others. If the same systematic care was applied to civilian consumptives, the gain in health and wealth to the country would be simply enormous.

As many Canadians have been killed at home by tuberculosis since the war began as have been killed by the war itself. Yet it is an entirely preventable disease. If we stop its ravages, we shall more than make up for the ravages of the war. If we stay in the rut, and let this enemy go on killing our people at home as fast as the Germans can kill them at the front, then the less we talk about our national intelligence and enterprise, the better.

Use of Auto In War Time

United States is Studying the Question.

John A. Wilson, chairman of the Military Preparedness Committee of the American Automobile Association, in the Chicago Tribune, writing on how the auto owner can aid if the United States can go to war, says:

Mobilization on the high speed includes the prompt assembling of the individual units in each State at the concentration camps. The answer as to how the organized motorists of the country can do their part in the plans now being formulated for defence would seem to lie particularly in the direction of transportation.

From all over the country have come repeated offers from A.A.A. clubs and members to count on them in any preparatory programme into which they would logically fit.

Naturally we have been and will continue to be vitally concerned in roads improvement, and, of course, we appreciate thoroughly that any comprehensive defensive scheme must include substantial attention to highways in connecting up main arteries and providing for coastal and border avenue of communication. I have asked President H. M. Rowe, of the national body, to add to the military preparedness committee not only Chairman George C. Diehl, of the good roads board, but all members of the executive board, as these men are scattered over the country and can assume much of the work in their respective vicinities.

It appeals to us that there are two definite ways in which the motor car owners can be exceedingly valuable. One of them is in connection with mobilization effectiveness, especially of the minute men sort. In every State there are now enough passenger automobiles which could be made systematically available in carrying to State camps these men who could not be provided for conveniently by railroad transportation. Those States which have gone forward in highways betterment would particularly lend themselves to the carrying out of such a plan, which probably would include county arrangement and appointment of officers responsible for the details and the apportioning of specified cars to certain enlisted men.

Once the troops were assembled, then would come the necessity for longer periods of service, and undoubtedly there would be plenty of motor driven vehicles available under an enlistment project on which the war college has been at work for some time.

In the army appropriation act, approved by Congress among the duties given to the council of national defence is set forth the "coordination of military, industrial, and commercial purposes in the location of extensive highways and branch lines of railroads." Not long since the A. A. A. good roads board, which had much to do with the passage of the Federal Aid Road Act, called the attention of the Secretary of War to the great value of a southwestern frontier highway in the effective handling of troops and munitions. The communication was referred to the council of national defence, which is now about to give its thought to the essential matter of roads in the furtherance of its work.

Standardizing of Motor Fuel

Detroit Has Passed An Ordinance to Do It.

In the passage of an ordinance by the Detroit council that city has started what its motorists hope will be a national movement to standardize motor fuel.

The object of the standardization is to provide a quality that can be used readily in any temperature or altitude, and to prevent adulteration by unscrupulous dealers. In low temperature it is almost an impossibility for the highly developed engines made today to consume most of the fuel being sold. Under the standard adopted in Detroit, it is declared, any motor will burn the product specified.

The Technical committee of the Wolverine Automobile club cooperated with J. C. McCabe of the municipal department of safety engineering to perfect the Detroit ordinance. Then representatives of the Society of Automotive Engineers, manufacturers and oil companies were called to a conference, at which all agreed the Detroit standard was fair to those concerned.

Under its provision, fuel must show 20 per cent. boiling at 220 degrees Fahrenheit in order to qualify. This, the experts say, will be suitable for use in any climate or altitude. The old idea of showing a flash point has been abandoned.

Had Pneumonia

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP CURED HIM.

A cough is an early symptom of pneumonia. It is at first frequent and hacking, and is accompanied with a little tough, colorless expectoration, which soon, however, becomes more copious and of a rusty red color, the lungs become congested and the bronchial tubes filled with phlegm making it hard for the sufferer to breathe. Males are more commonly attacked than females, and a previous attack seems to give a special liability to another.

On the first sign of a cold or cough you should get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent the cold from developing into more serious lung trouble.

Mrs. E. Charles, North Toronto, Ont., writes: "Two years ago my husband had a very bad attack of pneumonia, and the doctors said he was getting consumption. A friend came in to see me and told me to get Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I got three bottles, and they seemed to quite clear his chest of the phlegm, and now he is fine and well.

I shall never be without it in the house as it is a very valuable medicine."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

The genuine is manufactured only by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—While wholesale trade continues to show increases over last year, and spring openings have attracted considerable retail business, the feeling in trade circles is that increases in turnover is due more to enhanced prices for commodities rather than to actual gains in the volume of goods sold. In dry goods increases are reported in embroideries and laces, gents' furnishings, carpets, etc. House furnishings are fairly active. Boot and shoe wholesalers state that they have almost finished their spring placing orders. Road orders for fall shoes are only moderate, but orders for rubbers are coming in quite satisfactorily. With regard to spring business, wholesalers express themselves as quite satisfied with results. Retail shoe trade is fair, with conservatism on the part of the buying public noted in many quarters. Hardware lines are only moderately active. Groceries are moderately active. Business obligations are being well met, and the large number of small subscriptions to the war loan have indicated a large amount of surplus capital available for investment.

Montreal—Wholesale trade for the week has been good generally, and while outside collections are fair, city payments have not quite measured up to the same standard. Wholesale dry goods firms report an active mail sorting order business, and travellers are sending in quite large orders for fall delivery. Wholesale buying is on the whole rather cautious, indicating that many retailers prefer to buy from hand to mouth. The tendency towards conservatism is also being evidenced by wholesalers. Hardware lines are rather inactive. Boots and shoes are rather quiet, as far as wholesalers are concerned. The leather market is firm.

Ottawa—The shipment of spring orders practically has been completed, and mail sorting orders are being received in fair volume. Dry goods lines are quite active, and millinery is very active. The grocery trade has shown a moderate wholesale and retail movement. Collections are fair to good.

Hamilton—Spring retail trade has been ushered in auspiciously and buying has been quite liberal, on consideration of the advanced prices. Spring millinery business has been very satisfactory to date. Dry goods staples for spring wear have been fairly active. Wholesalers also report good business, both by mail and also from travellers who are on the road with fall samples. Industries are busily employed. The transportation problem is less acute, following the settlement of the railway issue in the United States. Conditions in the Niagara peninsula fruit belt are good to date, as trees have been injured only to a slight extent by storms. Hardware business is moderately quiet, with prospects for a good spring business. Groceries are moving out well, and there has been an extensive demand for canned fish during the Lenten season.

London—General mercantile conditions warrant an optimistic outlook for spring trade. The retail trade in millinery, spring dry goods, and to a lesser extent boots and shoes has been quite satisfactory thus far. Wholesale dry goods business is fair, and increases in turnover are expected. Collections are fair to good.

Winnipeg—General conditions are very good. Hardware lines are fairly active. Business conditions throughout the province reflect the conditions of Winnipeg.

Many a fellow thinks he ought to have a medal just because he is meddlesome.

FOR "LIVERISHNESS" USE MILBURN'S LAXA-LIVER PILLS

THEY NEVER FAIL TO DO GOOD.

Mrs. J. Shellsworth, Halifax, N.S., writes: "I take pleasure in writing you concerning the great value I have received by using your Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills for a sluggish liver. When my liver got bad I would have severe headaches, but after using a couple of vials of your pills I have not been bothered with the headaches any more."

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills clean away all waste and poisonous matter from the system, and prevent as well as cure all complaints arising from a liver which has become inactive.

Milburn's Laxa-Liver Pills are 25c. a vial, or 5 vials for $1.00, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

RID SOILS OF POISONOUS MATTER.

Scientists tell us that during recent years considerable evidence has been accumulated to show that the failure of some soils by the plants themselves.

It is the belief of these scientific men that during the growth of the plant, certain unknown organic substances are thrown off which, when they gather in the soil to any extent, are harmful to the further growth of plants of the kind that produced them. Some of the benefits known to arise from systematic crop rotation may be explained on this basis.

These harmful substances seem to be disposed of rapidly by certain soils, generally those in which organic matter is readily converted into humus. Other soils, usually marked by a lack of the brown carbonized organic matter, do not seem to have this property of removing harmful plant products to such a degree. This idea bears out the common experience that soils that are dark colored, well willed with organic matter, are generally productive.

FIGHTING POISONOUS MATTER.

These poisonous organic products may be rendered harmless, if not freeing the soil from them, by turning under barnyard manure or decaying organic matter, such as a green crop of rye or cowpeas. Nearly all of the common commercial fertilizing materials act more or less in the same manner.

Thorough and complete airing of the soil will often destroy or overcome these poisonous substances. When the same crop is not grown oftener than every three or four years on the same land, the injurious substances a crop throws off seem to have time to disappear before the same crop is grown again—hence the benefit from crop rotation. Soils well supplied with humus seldom experience any trouble from this source, and the same crop may be grown year after year with good yields, though continuous cultivation of the same crop may invite in[illegible] from certain insects and fungous diseases which live over in the soil, or the remains of the crop.

Improper methods of tillage add very greatly to the evil effects that result from lack of humus, is the opinion of Prof. W. J. Spillman, of the United States Department of Agriculture. In many parts of the country the land is plowed three or four inches in depth. Below the plowed stratum the soil becomes sour, densely packed, and unfit for plant roots. When such soils are deeply plowed and this sour subsoil is mixed with the upper portion, the growth of many crops is greatly retarded. This fact has led to the belief that deep plowing is ruinous, and subsoiling has been resorted to in order to remedy the difficulty. The subsoil plow will break the packed layer, but it does not throw it out on top. But while subsoiling does break up the hard layer into chunks, it does not pulverize it, or put humus into it. In the majority of cases the work done in subsoiling is practically wasted, and there is a doubt if it ever pays. A far better plan is to plow a little deeper each year, until a depth of eight or ten inches is reached. This gives a deep layer of good soil, especially if the supply is humus is kept up.

FURTHER EFFECTS OF TILLAGE.

When new soil, or that which has lain undisturbed for several years, is broken up, it is always best to plow deep from the beginning, for the deeper layers will be about as fertile as any, except the top inch or two. It is best, too, never to plow the same depth twice in succession. In general, fall plowing should be from seven to nine or ten inches, and spring plowing from five to seven inches deep.

The soil is plowed in order to loosen up its texture and get air into it; also to turn under stubble, manure, etc., to make humus. Plowing also does a worthy act in killing weeds.

After the soil has been thoroughly pulverized to great depths, so that there is no danger of turning up packed clay, the deeper the plowing the better the crops, but as the cost increases with depth, ordinarily it is not profitable to plow below 10 inches.

Certain crops prefer a rather loose seed bed—millet, for instance. Sometimes farmers plow a second time in order to sow millet on freshly-plowed land. Other crops, as wheat and alfalfa, prefer a fairly compact seed bed; hence, frequent harrowing and rolling after plowing is good before seeding to these crops. Nevertheless, it pays to plow the land for them, even if we have to compact it again before seeding.

FARM NEWS AND VIEWS.

The two extremes of the United States are demonstrating the efficiency of the Ayrshire cow was a producer of milk and butter-fat. The State of Washington is the latest to boost her efficiency, in the announcement of the official yearly record just completed by Ryanvage Hattie, a mature cow, which produced 17,214 pounds of milk, containing 806.91 pounds of butter-fat. This animal was bred by John Logan, Howick, Quebec, and imported by P. Ryan, Brewster, N. Y., and is at present owned by J. W. Clise, Redmon, Washington.

Two months ago New York State, on the opposite side of the continent, gave the Ayrshire an impetus by giving to the world a new Ayrshire senior 3-year-old record. Jean Armour, 3d, owned by W. P. Schanck, Avon, N. Y., producing under official test 21,938 pounds of milk, containing 859.65 pounds of butter-fat, her record being exceeded by only one cow of another breed, when reckoned by points including both milk and fat.

These records but prove that the Ayrshire, in adapting herself to all conditions of climate and environment, is gradually, but surely coming to her own.

If the feeder will give some attention to the compounding of an appropriately balanced ration for his stock, and will also see that the ration be palatable, that it does not contain too much fibre, and that it approaches nature's plan in furnishing some succulent food a san appetizer and a conveyor of other feeds, and to keep the system in proper "tone," depending upon his own experience to some extent, as well as upon analyses, he will be in a fair way to get a maximum of results at a minimum of cost.

Alfalfa is an "exacting crop" only in the sense that it demands a clean, healthy home; well ventilated, with good water conditions, and freedom for its roots to move about in search of food and water.

Approximately 8 per cent. of the corn acreage last year was cut for silos, 11 per cent. cut green for feed, and 81 per cent. matured for the grain.

Sod plowed with a moderately shallow furrow, manure applied on the surface, the whole thing well packed and disk harrowed, and corn sown right after these operations have been properly performed, is practically certain to give a good crop.

A hundred-pound beef calf is a thousand-pound steer in embryo. Kill the calf and you net but a 50 or 60-pound delicacy for the table of an epicure. Kill the steer and you provide 500 to 600 pounds of substantial beef for the upbuilding of the manhood of the world.

A mixture of bran or oat chop, 75 per cent., and cottonseed meal, 25 per cent., will give good results with the dairy cow.

RIBBONS FOR SUMMER HATS.

Warm weather hats show a liberal use of ribbons, particularly those hats of the sports variety. So far the ribbons employed are mostly narrow, but milliners prophesy the wider ribbons for hats, once the narrow ribbons have gained an assured entre.

Very narrow velvet ribbons are sometimes braided into bands, wide bands, for sport hats, the ends being left loose to form a fringe, and huge tassels, sometimes the sole trimming of a sports sailor, are fashioned of these narrow ribbons.

Very narrow ribbons, especially those of velvet, are used for embroidering designs upon straw hats and sometimes upon wider ribbons that in turn will adorn millinery. Very effective are the cat-o'-nine tails, grapes and birds thus made.

The narrow grosgrain ribbons, however, continue to be of first importance in sports millinery, both in simple bands and in most unusual bows. These hats made entirely of grosgrain ribbon will continue to be fashionable during the summer, especially for country club and week-end wear.

One of the most extreme novelties for the summer season is that of the ribbon beach pillow, which must match the hat, at least in color if not in material. The pillow is oval in shape and finished with ribbon loops that it may be hung upon the arm.

"Narrow ribbons," says one ribbon manufacturer, "are now in demand for millinery, but one never knows when the wide ribbons will have the field. Consequently we manufacturers are making a most tempting assortment ahead of time. Ah, you should see them—ribbons of Oriental character, including cashmere effects, East Indian, Persian and Arabian patterns, all of the richest colorings! Nor are we neglecting the plain satin ribbons, for we're hoping and expecting that sashes will be the rage toward the end if not at the beginning of the summer, and we want to have ribbons of the very newest tints and shades ready."

CHINA'S MODEL CITY.

Latest Undertaking Would Put It in Suburbs of Hong Kong.

For a good many years schemes have been entertained from time to time for the erection somewhere in South China of a model city for the use of the well-to-do Chinese. Chinese people of wealth and Chinese returning from the United States, Australia and other sections of the globe with a knowledge of modern cities have felt this need, and in recent years several attempts have been made to launch such a project.

One scheme went so far as the organization of a city at Heungshan, not far from Kingmoon and within a short distance of Hong Kong. This city was established upon Chinese soil and by special arrangement with the Chinese government. It was to have certain custom privileges. It was established upon modern sanitary lines; and its close proximity to Hong Kong, on the one hand, and its location in the part of China from which come most of the Chinese in America on the other, were expected to make it attractive. The city has made little progress however.

The latest undertaking of this sort is for the construction of a model suburb of Hong Kong along the most modern lines for the housing of wealthy Chinese. This plan involves the reclamation of a tract of land about a mile and a half long and a third of a mile broad, the construction of wide avenues and fairly wide side streets, the erection of 47 blocks of high grade apartment, tenement and similar buildings, and the establishment of a modern sewerage system and other public utilities. In spite of war and the uncertainties of finance the company undertaking this enterprise has been formed and its plans completed, and work is to commence at once.

Increasing numbers of wealthy Chinese from various parts of South China are coming to Hong Kong to make this city their permanent residence. The result has been a constantly increasing need for houses for such people and a growing demand on their part for homes so situated that they can be among their countrymen. Most of these newcomers have plenty of money for their needs, and some of them have considerable sums for which they seek profitable investment. Purchases of residence property in the lower levels of Hong Kong by such people have changed the entire course of real estate matters in the colony of Hong Kong. The organization of this new suburb offers a way out of many difficulties, for it will not only afford this class of people the proper housing they demand, but will also offer a ready and safe investment.

The new suburb is to be located on the south side of the Kowloon peninsula, the mainland portion of the colony of Hong Kong two miles from the landing of the ferry from the city of Victoria (commonly known as Hong Kong) and along the shore of Kowloon Bay, near the native city of Kowloon. The site is to cover a tract about 8,000 feet long and 1,500 feet broad, embracing the foreshore only but backed by hills from which several small streams emerge, the ravines affording considerable fall for drainage purposes. The reclamation is wholly a dredging undertaking. The company is at present drawing specifications for the work to be done and expects to let the contract within the next six or eight weeks. There is some doubt as to whether dredging machinery of sufficient capacity will be available at the present time for the company's purposes, but apparently this is the only obstacle in the way of rapid progress being made upon the entire undertaking.

The reclamation of the land for this suburb is being undertaken by the original syndicate, the plan being that the construction of tenements, private residences, piers and warehouses shall be undertakings of separate syndicates to be arranged later. Being on the mainland portion of the colony the site has the advantage of railway connections for pier and warehouses and to assist in its development generally. It is probable that connections with Kowloon and Hong Kong will be maintained by motor busses rather than by a tramway system, but this question is yet to be settled.

The plan includes the erection of four piers with space for warehouses if need for them arises on the water front of the reclaimed land. The depth of the water now over the side averages about one and a half fathoms. With the extension of the piers and the dredging to be done in reclamation work sufficient depth for ordinary oceangoing vessels will be had at all tides.

Unless delayed by a lack of machinery it is expected that the reclamation will be completed in about two years.—Commerce Report.

CARE OF LITTLE CHICKS.

The life of the chicks from the incubator to the eighth week is a time when the "peeps" should be given the most careful attention. Especially during the first 10 days should the little things be most thoroughly looked after. Care must be exercised from the incubator to the brooder that in transferring the chicks they do not become chilled.

Many poultry beginners are careless in this respect, and the result is bowel trouble in some form. The heat under the brooder should be 100 degrees and maintained at that temperature for the first 10 days to two weeks, after which a gradual lowering can be done. The weather conditions taken into consideration more heat can be allowed in winter and early spring than later. This is due to the fact that the chicks run out in weather that is cold and the warmth of the brooder is welcome. In the spring, when the weather is warmer, the chicks do not require the same amount of heat. The advanced system of brooders with the new coal or oil-burning stoves there is ample ventilation and a good diffusion of heat properly applied. For the first few days board or muslin frames should be placed around the brooder that the chicks may be kept close to the outer edge of the hover, otherwise some may become chilled. After the chicks are 10 days old the frames can be placed further away from the hover, and at two or three weeks of age the whole floor space devoted to them.

They should get out for a time at least each day after they have reached the age of 10 days; but should be watched closely that all will return to the brooder house for warmth and none allowed to become chilled by staying out too long. Some chicks are early trained to go in and out the brooder house. When warmth is desired, other flocks do not seem to train so well in this respect, and a careful watch must be kept for a few days until they know what to do. This extra trouble is well worth the effort with early spring chicks: a chilled chick in one is time a dead one, or if not one that will never grow with the rest of the flock.

Chicks must have the proper amount of heat at all times under the hover, especially for the first two weeks. In every poultry house good ventilation should be secured. Warmth and fresh air are two essentials in starting the chicks if the hatch is to be a profitable one, and the poultry keeper should see that it is provided. It is for this reason that the experts in poultry [illegible] any brooder [illegible] stoves that the heat in the room may not become too great, especially during the spring months. A small brooder house may not work well early in spring when weather conditions are cold, but not for the warmer days of late spring.

These essentials are as vital as feed and without considering them good results cannot be obtained. Allow the chicks to thoroughly dry out, and in a measure cool off in the incubator. Place them under the hover, and after an hour, feed the first meal, consisting of some rolled oats on a board, or in a feed pan, so that the chicks can see it. Do not feed too soon. They should be provided with chick grit and charcoal, and as soon as they know how to eat the oats, a good mixture of chick feed can be given them, [illegible] as possible, should cover the floor, and cut alfalfa or clover chaff over this to promote exercise as they grow older. For the first few days there is little danger of them overeating, as so many suppose, and to throw grain in a litter, as is often done, at this tender age is to invite underfed chicks, as they cannot see so well and need feed more than exercise. [illegible] should be placed before them. Milk in some form can be fed with good results, but should not be kept before them the entire day, as they should also drink water. When 10 days old the dry mash can be placed before them, consisting of bran, ground oats, middlings, cornmeal, beef scraps, and in some cases fine bone meal. Green feed in some form must be supplied; properly made, sprouted oats is good, cabbage or mangle beets, cut clover or lawn clippings when the season is advanced.

If fortunate enough to have grass and clover runs this is sufficient. But the majority who raise chicks seem to neglect this important essential, and yards for poultry are as a rule bare. Less care is required as the chicks grow older, and at 4 to 5 weeks they should be past all danger. The main point is to keep them growing. Second size chick feeds can now be used and milk discontinued, unless it can be obtained cheap enough to warrant its feeding. Avoid crowding. The space that seemed large enough for the chicks at 10 days to 2 weeks may not be ample now. Overcrowding has ruined more than one flock that had a good start. The aim should be quality rather than quantity and especially in these days of high cost of feeds and equipment.—J. Harry Wolsieffer, in Philadelphia Record.

NOTES.

Anconas are becoming more popular each year. They are hardy and good egg producers and bred right for color marking they are attractive to look at.

Three parts, by weight, of corn and one part wheat fed twice a day in litter, together with a mash mixture of two parts meat scrap added to two parts of ground corn and one part bran, fed in self-feeding hopper, furnishes a well balanced ration, according to the Ohio Experiment Station.

In selecting hens look for a full well-developed breast and crop, showing a large pocket in which to carry the food supply. This indicates strength and vigor and ability to consume sufficient food to produce eggs.

The small incubator still has its place, and every poultry keeper should look well into the merits of the different makes now on the market. Marked improvement is made each year in the incubator, and it is fast displacing the hen as a hatcher. It breaks no eggs, does not leave the nest, and will hatch as many eggs as the hen when properly run and, contrary to the belief of many, the "wooden hen" will hatch chicks just as strong, if properly operated.

BIDDY AND ME.

(Written for the Times by Charles J. Bulfin).

I know a sweet lass, and Irish is she,
O the fairest of women, is Biddy to me;
There's nothing can touch her, no, not anywhere;
I'm longing my fortunes with Biddy to share;
When her dark eyes are flashing, I then have a care,
For a storm there is brewing, O better beware.
She'll stand for no triflers, I plainly can see,
Yet, I love the fair vixen, it's Biddy for me.

She's a fine little girl, with a tongue of her own,
When she lets loose that weapon my arguments blown.
Should the music get started, I hurry to quit,
For she slings like a tartar when doing her bit;
Just punctures my logic with shafts of [illegible],
I declare she's a terror, and always can hit,
Sure, I never can hope to learn half of her tricks,
For a [illegible] with the [illegible].

Yet, sweet is her nature, and tender of heart,
O, a dear little [illegible] just right from the start,
She's thoughtful of others, and thinks some of me,
And better than that, why I hardly shall see,
When sweetheart and I walk out on the street,
The fine Irish beauty, bewitchingly sweet;
And men as they're passing, look daggers, I see,
Not one in the bunch can take Biddy from me.

I think very soon, I, a preacher shall see,
And ask what he'd do with sweet blossom and me;
I suppose he will say: look here Mr. Man,
Just tie to that Duchess as soon as you can;
Any man who has sense enough under his hat,
Won't hesitate long when he's looking at that,
Such a fine Irish rose right now you must pluck,
Or another will steal her, then where is your luck?"

The preacher was sure he could warrant the job,
And tied us as tight as a door to its knob,
When that is accomplished there's nothing to fear,
Just tend to the [illegible] and sailing is clear.
They tell me that Biddy's a swell little cook,
Knows more about that, than is found in a book,
And since I believe in conserving my health,
Why, throw in Biddy's like marrying wealth.

I heard of a fellow, 'twas just t'other day,
He married a Princess, some distance away,
But what's in a Princess I never can see,
When Biddy's a queen, what's a Princess to me;
And now it is settled, this fine Irish pearl,
Has promised to be just my own little girl,
Though the world's full of women, all fair as can be,
She's alone in her glory, Queen Biddy for me.

SPEED HIGH IN AIR.

Aeronautical Theory Borne Out by Bird Migration.

The statement that a flying machine with a normal speed of 40 miles an hour would travel at a height of 5 miles at [illegible] miles an hour—made by Dr. Graham Bell, in [illegible] Boston Bell's view, which [illegible] prolonged course of [illegible] inquiries, was that the speed of an aeroplane increased in [illegible] the height from the [illegible] the thinner the air the faster the air craft.

That birds use this quality of the air now seems probable. Some of the migrants arriving in England have been observed to dive down from an incalculable height [illegible] as Heligoland. That [illegible] should cross the North Sea in one night has become an insoluble mystery, because it has [illegible] they are endowed at that altitude with a sudden access of power, that it [illegible] be that they only [illegible] in the thinner upper air. Swifts, which are the most rapid fliers of all, for the most part fly higher than other birds.

Cranes have been seen to cross the sun's disc at an estimated height of 3-4 miles, and others have passed over clear the highest mountain ranges. The verdict of one of the best students of migration is that "without ascending to a considerable altitude the migration of many birds would be simply impossible." That very poor flier, the corncrake, has traveled the seemingly impossible distance of 5,000 miles.

It is true that many birds have been observed to fly low during migration. Swallows especially have been seen migrating at a low elevation, and even to cover 100 miles an hour.—London Mail.

IMPURE BLOOD IN THE SPRING

The Passing of Winter Leaves People Weak and Depressed.

As winter passes away it leaves many people feeling weak, depressed and easily tired. The body lacks that vital force and energy which pure blood alone can give.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all-year-round blood builder and nerve tonic, but they are especially useful in the spring. Every dose helps to make new, rich, red blood. Returning strength commences with their use and the vigor and cheerfulness of good health quickly follows.

There is just one cure for lack of blood and that is more blood. Food is the material from which blood is made, but Dr. Williams' Pink Pills double the value of the food we eat. They give strength, tone up the stomach and weak digestion, clear the complexion of pimples, eruptions and boils, and drive out rheumatic poisons.

If you are pale and sallow, if you feel continually tired out, breathless after slight exertion, if you have headaches or backaches, if you are irritable and nervous, if your joints ache, if your appetite fails and food does not nourish nor sleep refresh you, Dr. Williams' Pink Pills will make you well and strong. To build up the blood is the special purpose of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and that is why they are the best spring medicine. If you feel the need of a tonic at this season give Dr. Williams' Pink Pills a fair trial and you will rejoice in new health, new strength and new energy. Do not let the trying weather of summer find you weak and ailing. Build yourself up now with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the pills that strengthen.

Ask for Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale people and do not be persuaded to take anything else. If your dealer does not keep these Pills they will be sent by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

The Eternal English Sparrow.

The same little sparrow was a pest in ancient Egypt in the time of Rameses. It has outlived nations, tribes and dynasties. Laws have been passed against it in Germany. Austria and France declared war on it, the British Parliament made it the subject of an investigation. It was imported into Australia and has become such a nuisance there that laws have been enacted against it, but, through it all, the little gray coated sparrow has twittered gayly on, busily hatching and rearing its five or six broods a year.—Kansas City Star.

THE COLONEL SAYS:

"Zam-Buk is a valuable addition to every soldier's kit." This remark was made by Lieut.-Col. A. C. H. Hamilton-Gray, R.C.R., Wellington Barracks, Halifax, N.S. He says further:

"I can speak from personal experience, as I have used Zam-Buk myself for cuts, burns and rheumatism, and believe there is nothing to equal it."

Zam-Buk, the great herbal balm, is a boon to the men in the trenches. It soothes pain and heals so quickly, and instant application of Zam-Buk prevents all possibility of festering or blood poisoning.

Don't forget to put some Zam-Buk in your next parcel to the front. All druggists, or Zam-Buk Co., Toronto. 50c. box, 3 for $1.25.

A TALE OF TURKEY.

Queer Things That Happened in the Name of the Constitution.

The ignorance of the Turkish masses concerning political questions, says Sir Edwin Pears in "Forty Years in Constantinople," is shown by certain incidents of the revolution of 1908. The hamals, or porters in the towns, like the peasants in the country, when they heard that the Sultan had sworn to be faithful to the constitution, inquired who [illegible] a person? [illegible] The words "liberty" and "equality" meant something good, although they could not have said what. To some they signified general licence.

Two English friends of mine were motoring [illegible] when a number of Turkish boys set upon them and flung stones at them. The Englishmen gave chase and caught the principal offenders. The eldest was asked why he had thrown stones.

"Hurriet var," was the reply. "There's liberty. We can do what we like now."

The Englishman replied "Hurriet var, and I am at liberty to give you a good thrashing, am I not?"

One of the boys said yes, he supposed that would be so, but he hoped the liberty would not be used. The Englishman replied that it would not be used that time, but if the offence were repeated he would use it to the fullest extent.

The workmen on a newspaper during that time asked for a large increase of wages.

"But why?" asked the owner.

"Because there is a constitution."

The tramway men struck for higher wages, and the only justification that they put forward was that there was now a constitution. Yet men of all classes cheered in the heartiest manner for the constitution. Throughout the month of August smuggled tobacco was openly sold in the streets at a very cheap rate, buyers and sellers alike considering that the constitution allowed men to set aside the law that had made the sale of tobacco a government monopoly.

A. McKim Limited Advertising Agency New Executive

The new Executive of A. McKim, Limited, Advertising Agency of Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and London, Eng., has been announced.

During the last few years the late Mr. Anson McKim had gathered around him an executive staff capable of relieving him of all but a general oversight of the rapidly growing business of the advertising agency which he founded nearly thirty years ago, and which now comprises [illegible] offices in different cities and over [illegible] employees.

Since his death, these experienced men have been carrying on the work in the same efficient way that has characterized "McKim's" for so many years. The personnel of the executive as now organized is J. N. McKim, President and Treasurer; Mrs. Anson McKim, Vice-President; W. B. Somerset, General Manager; H. E. Stephenson, Secretary; F. T. Pears, Manager at Toronto; Tom Bell, Manager at Winnipeg; W. Reeble, Manager at London, Eng.

The appreciation of the value of advertising space in local and home papers of modest circulation, always a strong feature of this Agency's policy, will be as marked as ever under the present management.

Deadly Prussic Acid.

Prussic acid is so deadly that even the smell of the acid produces pain in the throat, and in the region of the heart. There are few poisons for which there is such little opportunity for an antidote. If there is time—and there seldom is, for the poison is almost instantaneous—ammonia inhaled very freely may give relief and reduce the absolute certainty of death to a grave probability.

Newsy Happenings of the Week Collected for Our Readers by a Staff of Live Correspondents

GLAMIS

The Ladies Missionary Society of St. Paul's Church met at the home of Mrs. Campbell on Wednesday last.

Mrs. J. K. McLennan visited her sister Mrs. (Dr.) Black in Clifford, whom we regret to report is very low, on Thursday.

Miss Nora C. McNally, who is attending Faculty in Toronto, is home for the Easter vacation.

Word was received here last week of the death of Mrs C. E. Russell (nee Miss Louisa Beere) of Mt. Hamilton, who had been in ill-health for some time. The deceased was well known here and her death was learned with regret. Her husband was killed in action a few months ago. To the bereaved ones heartfelt sympathy is extended.

Miss Nettie Gunn, who is teaching at Norland, was home for the Easter holiday.

Misses Margaret McLennan and Elizabeth Campbell spent Thursday afternoon with the latter's sister, Miss Margaret Campbell of Harriston.

Mrs. Devall returned home from Toronto on Saturday.

On Wednesday the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bonnett, 2nd con. Bruce, was the scene of a happy event when their daughter, Alice was united in marriage to Mr. Angus Annets of Bruce Twp. Rev. E. A. De Mille officiated. The young couple's many friends join in hearty good wishes.

Miss Jennie McKeeman is visiting friends in Toronto.

Mr. Thos. W. Thompson has returned home from Guelph Hospital where he underwent an operation a few weeks ago. All welcome him home and hope that he may soon be restored his usual strength again.

Misses Jean and Katherine McDermid of London spent Easter with their mother, Mrs. C. McDermid.

Mr. Chas. J. McKinnon of Wallaceburg spent a week with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. John McKinnon.

Mrs. James Thompson spent the latter end of the week in Pinkerton.

Mr. McCauley is spending a few days with his parents in Tara.

Mr. Lorne Carr, of the Royal Bank staff of Cargill was a holiday visitor at his home on the 14th con.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Smith went to Toronto last week and brought home their young child aged 3 years who was undergoing treatment in the Sick Children's Hospital for eye trouble but the child, we regret to report, has gone blind.

MILDMAY

Mr. and Mrs. George Frank and daughter, spent Sunday with friends near Dunkeld.

Liesemer and Kalbfleisch have unloaded 2 car loads of Fords this week. Each car had 9 autos in it. In a short time a good many of these cars will be on the road.

Mr. Harry Young, teller in the Merchants Bank here, visited at his home in Stratford over Easter.

Principal Kidd of the Public School had a number of pupils write on the Senior Public School Graduation exams before Easter. These pupils will help on farms after Apr. 20th.

Miss Kate Schwalm is visiting in Kitchener this week.

There is quite a stir among many thrifty housewives these weeks preparing for the ministers who are to attend the annual conference of the Evangelical Association which is to be held in the Evangelical Church from April 18 to 23.

The following are among the Easter visitors in town. Miss Zettie Liesemer of the Public School Staff, Baden; Mr. William Miller, Waterloo; Mr. Albin Uhrich, Toronto; Miss Minnie Miller, Miss Irene Uhrich, and Mr. Stuart Thompson of Central Business College, Stratford; Mr. Ed. Diebel, Elora; Mr. Wm. Diebold, Kincardine; Richard Hutton Detroit; Miss Emma Diebel, Elmira; Pte. Press of 234 Batt. Brampton.

Mr. Alex Kraemer has purchased a new Gerhard Heintzmann piano this week.

In Friday's Globe it stated that Charlie Pletsch was sure to have a place on Detroit's hockey team next year.

On Saturday afternoon in the town hall, Ed. Rubland was brought before Magistrates Tolton and Fisher on several charges relating to the breaking of the temperance laws. The case aroused great interest and the town hall was crowded. It was finally settled by Rubland paying fines amounting to $75 and 6.50 costs. It is a good thing to get after all violaters at the earliest chance and make them respect the law.

Mr. Kalbfleisch and his son Norman are visiting at the latter's brother, Mr. Ed. Kalbfleisch.

Mr. Lewis, manager of the Merchants Bank left on Saturday to spend Easter at his home in Toronto.

FORMOSA

The farmers of this section are going to meet next Monday at 3 p. m. to organize a Farmer's Club under the auspices of the United Farmers of Ontario, an organization which is growing rapidly throughout the Province. Mr. J. J. Morrison, chief organizer, will address the meeting, which will be held at Opperman's Hotel.

JOHNSTON'S CORNERS

Mr. J. J. Zettler's auction sale of cows and calves which was held at the Central Hotel in town on Saturday was well attended and good prices were realized as Mr. Zettler always has good stock to sell when he makes an auction sale. Mr. "Dave Coates" wielded the hammer for the high prices.

Some of the farmers in our section started to plow last week and when that snow storm came on, they hitched to the sleigh and hauled home more wood as it looked as if another winter was coming on. Don't get scared for it's better to get snow now than frosts in May.

Dr. M. R. McLean, Dentist of Goderich, spent over Easter at his home here. The Doctor looks hearty. It seems the job agrees with him alright.

Mr. Andrew Zettler traded his white horse off last week for a dandy team. He has a pretty lively team now. Hold onto those lines now. Andy!

Mr. James McCarter bought another horse last week. As Jim has all young horses to work with he will show some farmers how quick seeding can be put in this spring. He's a hustler when he starts.

Mr. Barney Ruetz and sister Mary spent Sunday visiting some friends at Chepstow, out where an occasional taffy-pull is being divided up among the sweet young folks.

Mr. Arthur Childs who has been working in Stratford since last fall is here for Easter accompanied by a friend.

Mr. Anthony Sutter bought Mr. Jno Heughan's farm last week for his son Frank. We understand that Frank has a fine farm now and his next job will be to look for the "Mrs."

Mrs. Frank Ernst spent a few days visiting old acquaintances at Hanover last week.

Mr. Andrew Waechter sold 25 fat hogs lately which brought him something over $700.00 cash. Hogs at present prices are good mortgage lifters for those who have them to sell.

OTTER CREEK

Mr. Henry Wolfe was spending the Easter holidays with his brother Louis Wolfe of Clifford.

Since the weather prophet Hicks died the weather apparently does as it pleases.

A few farmers around here started ploughing last week. They are like the robins and black birds, a little out of season.

Mr. and Mrs. Emmerson Schumacher of Belmore and Mr. and Mrs. William Klein of Mildmay were visiting their parents Mr. and Mrs Philip Giess.

Quite a few around here attended the annual Spring Show at Mildmay on Tuesday.

CARRICK

The North Carrick Red Cross workers, after a series of earnest and enthusiastic meetings in the homes of the members, had their closing meeting for the season at the home of Mr. J. A. Hutton on Wed. night, April 4th, where a shower was donated for the good of the cause.

The donations consisted of 8 sheets, 40 pillow cases, 10 towels, 31 housewifes, 30 personal property bags, 5 khaki handkerchiefs, 6 lbs toilet soap, besides honey and sausage, cake, candy, cookies, summer sausage etc.

The ladies packed 9 boxes for boys overseas using the eatables donated, besides putting in each box, socks, a towel, soap, a handkerchief, and a housewife filled with its necessaries. The boxes were valued at $3.00 each. The rest of the donations were shipped to C. R. C. S. Toronto.

During the winter the workers have made 421 flannel shirts, 20 pyjama suits, 31 helpless shirts, 15 towels, 155 pairs of socks and 3 quilts besides the items in the shower.

The funds used were obtained as follows:—Box Social S S No 3. $40.15; Box Social, Otter Creek, $116.65; Otter Creek Scholar's quilt, $18.25; Members fees, $16.45; Donations from friends, $9.25; Total $200.75, Amount Expended for material $160.45, Bal. on hand $40.30.

The members voted that the postage on the overseas boxes be paid into the Red Cross funds.

The ladies served a lunch after which the National Anthem was sung, and all expressed a feeling that though our membership roll was small, we had helped with our "bit", enjoyed the work and shown our patriotism. Pres. Mrs. T. H. Hickling, Vice President Mrs. G. M. Scott, Secretary Mrs. J. A. Hogg, Treas. Mr. G. W. Scott.

HOME FROM TRENCHES

One of the Canadian Heroes of Courcellette Returns to His Home Here —Mr. Nutting's Shoulder Shattered in September Drive

The people of the town turned out in large numbers Monday night to welcome one of our returned soldier heroes, Mr. U. F. Nutting. Mr. Nutting saw some of the hardest fighting in France and after many long painful months spent in military hospitals he is enjoying the privilege which the German bullets almost deprived him, of coming back for a reunion with his wife and bright little family.

It was in the famous drive on Courcellette last Sept. that Mr. Nutting got the serious hit which threatens the permanent disability of his arm and shoulder. An expanding bullet, long forbidden by international law but now freely used by the enemy, got him in the shoulder just as his arm was uplifted to carry a package of machine gun ammunition. The bullet shattered the bones of his shoulder seriously. Mr. Nutting has been in one hospital and another ever since. His shoulder is still far from healed and it will be necessary for him to report at the Military Hospital at Toronto shortly for further examination.

Mr. Nutting had a rather rough passage, coming across about the time of the equinoctial gales. A bad fall on shipboard and another on the icy pavement at Quebec necessitated his going back to hospital two weeks at Quebec.

Mr. Nutting possesses the chronic cheerfulness of the British Tommy, which has won the admiration of the world. Although adverse to talking about doings at the Front, he has many interesting incidents to relate. He was present when the tanks first made their appearance on the western front. The British had forty tanks then. He heard before leaving England that there were two thousand of them on the job now.

Auction Sale.

Auction sale of between 20 and 30 young calves at the Central Hotel, on Saturday, April 21st, at two o'clock. Net proceeds to go to Red Cross. J. J. Zettler, prop., David Coates, Auct.

New Dairy Firm

Mr. Jacob Dippel has bought Alex Gordon's dairy business which will be conducted hereafter by his two sons, Wilfred and Peter. The former has had experience in the dairy business with Price & Sons, the Toronto dairymen and also at Niagara Falls. Mr. Dippel will put up a large brick dairy building on his farm adjoining the town limits and intends installing the latest dairy equipment including a plant for pasteurizing the milk, a process which is now compulsory in a good many of the larger cities.

Joe Sees Old London.

In a letter received by his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Rennie this week, Pte. Joe Rennie of the 160th, gives an account of a visit to Old London where he spent six days' leave. Joe visited St. Paul's Cathedral, the Tower of London, the Old Curiosity Shop, and other places of historical interest and was also taken through the King's stables. Besides this he had a privilege which many a Canadian high school boy and others would like to have at this time, that of listening to Premier Asquith and Lloyd George speaking in the House of Commons.

A Prisoner In Germany

Left for Overseas

Percy Roulston, a nephew of Miss S. Roulston and former pupil of Walkerton High School, left for Overseas last week with the 141st Batt'n with which he has been in training at Port Arthur for some time.

Former Brant Family Bereaved

Mr. D. McKerracher had word last week from his nephew, Mr. James Adair, of Treherne, Man. that he had lost his only daughter, Violet, a bright young girl of fifteen years. Sorrow again came to the home a few days later when it was learned that their son, Wilfred, who is fighting in France, had been wounded. Mr. and Mrs. Adair have many old friends in Brant who will sympathize deeply with them at this time.

A Second Close Shave

Mr. Thos. Cunningham had a letter a few days ago from his son, Chester telling how he got on the casualty list as "wounded". A huge German shell, bursting in the trenches near him grazed his cheek and inflicted a flesh wound in the forehead. This was Chester's second close shave since going into the trenches last year. About Christmas he and several companions in a dugout were buried by a shell and narrowly escaped death.

Fingers Badly Gashed

Mr. Jos. Becker an employee of the Knechtel Furniture Factory, who lives on the old Dippel farm south of the G. T. R., was the victim of a nasty accident on Thursday afternoon when his left hand came in contact with a ripsaw which he was operating. The index finger was almost severed and two other fingers badly gashed. He was removed to the hospital where the injured members were dressed. Hopes are entertained by the attending physician that all the fingers may be saved, but Mr. Becker will be off work for many weeks.

Recruits Wanted

50 men are needed to complete Forestry Draft No. 2, with Headquarters at 103 Queen St. West Toronto. Only those who have had experience in lumbering either in the mill or woods are eligible but as the physical standard is very low many who have been rejected for Infantry or Artillery can enlist in this service—Opportunity for advancement is quick and special men such as saw filers, sawyers, engineers and millwrights can be sure of material advancement. As this Draft hopes to leave for Overseas this month if you want to go—get in at once.

Commended By Judge

In giving judgment against Alex. Stewart, the Harriston farmer, found guilty of sedition at Guelph last Wednesday Chief Justice Falconbridge warmly commended the informant, J. A. Rowland of Walkerton for the stand he had taken. Stewart was allowed his freedom on suspended sentence on giving a bond of $2,000 to appear when called upon and to pay a portion of the costs of the court. Had the judge sentenced him at all, it would have been a heavy one, but he felt that the ends of justice would be served by letting him go on his own recognizance to appear for sentence when called upon. The example made of Stewart may have a happy effect in bringing people of his class to their senses.

Passing of Old Resident

Mrs. Chris. Neverman, an old and respected resident of this vicinity, passed away at the home of her son, Mr. H. J. Ernest of Brant, on Tuesday, in her 84th year. Mrs. Neverman infirm through old age and a heavy cold which she caught on Easter Sunday proved more than her aged forces could combat. Mrs. Neverman, was a sister of the Wilkin brothers who were among Brant's earliest settlers. She came with her husband to Brant from Germany forty-four years ago. After living on the farm for a number of years they removed to town where her husband was employed by R. E. Truax & Son. Mrs. Neverman was a kind-hearted old lady, a good neighbor and was respected by all. She was a member of the Lutheran Church. Her husband predeceased her five years ago. Five married daughters survive:—Mrs. August Saunders of Neustadt, Mrs. H. J. Ernest of Brant. Mrs. Fred Huffman of Kitchener, Mrs. Chris. Ernest of Walkerton, Mrs. Al Gibbons of Davidson, Sask. The funeral takes place this Thursday afternoon from the residence of H. J. Ernest, Brant.

The people of Pinkerton are holding a gathering to-night to do honor to their worthy young townsman who is leaving in a few days to report at Ottawa.

HOME FROM HONAN CHI

Miss Winnifred Warren Tells of Conditions in Awakening Empire of the East—Will Return as Missionary.

Miss Winnifred Warren, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Warren arrived home from Honan, China, on Saturday. She has just completed a three years engagement as teacher of Presbyterian Missionaries' children at Honan, Central China.

Miss Warren reports a fairly smooth trip across the Pacific, considering the fact that it was the season when equinoctial gales are frequent. She sailed on the Empress of Russia, the queen of the C. P. R's Pacific fleet, the same boat on which she journeyed her outward voyage three years ago.

With the giant Empire awakening from the slumbers of countless centuries Miss Warren states the opportunities of christian missions are [illegible] increasing. A number of the Cabinet ministers of the new Republic are Christians. Even non-christian leaders encourage the missionaries, and the eagerness of the student class to acquire Western ideas opens the way for important work among the Chinese leaders of to-morrow.

Feeling in the coast cities is strongly pro-Ally, but in the inland districts less interest is taken. Everywhere anti-Japanese feeling is strong, the Chinese strongly resenting the aggressiveness of the Japs in taking advantage of China's helplessness to enforce what was considered impudent demands.

Miss Warren is greatly interested in China and its people and hopes to return to Honan as a missionary after a visit to the old home here.

Get Them Going

Norman Dennie writes home from France that he is fine and in the pink of condition. We've got them on the run, he writes, and we are going to keep them there. Norm. wishes to thank the young ladies of the Tea Room for parcel received. His address is Headquarters Staff, 4th Can. Inf. Batt. C. E. F. France.

Annual Vestry Meeting

Reports presented at the Annual Vestry meeting of St. Thomas Church last week were of a very encouraging nature. Out of less than one hundred families on the church roll, the church has no less than forty-eight members serving at the Front. Mr. R. M. Player was reappointed Rector's Warden for the coming year and Mr. R. V. Baker was re-elected people's Warden.

Died of Wounds

A telegram from Ottawa on Sunday announced that another young man of this neighbourhood, Alexander Brick, had made the supreme sacrifice in France. The despatch stated that he died of wounds. Alex. was a son of Mr. Jacob Brick of Formosa and a relative of Mr. J. J. Schumacher. Before the war he was engaged in farming in Saskatchewan and enlisted in the West.

Gabe Training Again

Gabe Hase writes his father, Mr. Alex Hase from England that he is rounding up into shape again after his long siege in the Hospital with serious wounds and expects to go back to the Front again before very long. Gabe says that everything is getting much dearer in England. Beer which was the cheapest thing in all England is now 13 cents a pint. All foodstuffs keep going higher.

To Enlarge Plant

S. A. Rife & Co. are advertising a big ten days' sale to clean out their stock of men's furnishings. The firm wishes to have more space to devote to the factory. Mr. Rife states that he is at present negotiating for a woollen mill plant for the manufacture of yarns, blankets and other woollen goods for which there is a great demand at the present time.

A Shattered Romance.

A local spinster, who announced a few weeks ago her approaching marriage to a Brant farmer, is now threatening to sue her alleged sweetheart for damages caused by lacerations to her affections, as well as to her purse strings through his non-performance of the agreement to marry her, which she claims he made. The affair took an astonishing turn on Thursday last when her intended who according to her announcement, was to have led her to the altar at Easter, was a participant in matrimonial proceedings with another spinster of the town. She professes to be the victim of gross fickleness and threatens to air her sorrows in court.

The Weekly Sun charges that the proposed teachers' pensions are a blow to the marriage relation. The question is, it says, of the influence of pensions on female teachers. These, we assume, abandon the profession after short service, not for the higher rewards of other callings, but to marry, and the pension scheme is, in effect, a premium, insufficient we hope, on the celibacy of female teachers.

FOOD AND MORE FOOD NEEDED.

If the Allies are to win the war, the allied peoples who stay at home must do their share in winning the victory. The men at the front are fighting and striving for the victory but all their fighting and striving will be in vain if the rest of us do not back them up with food and with munitions of war. None but the young, the strong and the healthy need go into the trenches and when there their strength must be kept up with an abundance of good food.

In this issue of to-day's Times the Dominion and Provincial Governments are making separate appeals to the people to do what they possibly can to raise an abundance of food for all. The farmers are short-handed, and all who can give them a hand should do so. It is just as imperative that a man should do his bit on the farm as on the battlefield.

The Organization of Resources Committee declares that:

"The call of the Empire for more food is urgent, but Ontario farmers cannot respond unless labor is available for seeding, which commences early in April. Immediate action is imperative, if assistance is to be given. Will your patriotic committee kindly call an emergency meeting and ascertain whether retired farmers and others in your community are willing to help? Co-operation with Boards of Trade and other organizations interested is advisable."

These appeals should have their effect. We understand that locally the Farmers' Section of the Board of Trade will actively interest itself in getting recruits for the farm, and that the South Wentworth Agricultural Society will deal with the matter this afternoon. This is important, because the appeals of the Governments might fall unheeded to the ground unless some means were taken here to secure whatever help might offer.

In this issue we publish an appeal to the clergy of the Province asking them to bring the matter before their congregations to-morrow. This question of food has become so acute now that next to winning battles it is the most important thing that can engage the attention of the public. Great Britain must have food for her soldiers and for her people if she is to win the war, and it is the duty of every Canadian man, woman and child to do whatever they can to see that the Motherland and her soldiers do not come to want.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"Dreadful! No. He was one of the handsomest men I ever saw, and looked like a prince, though he was dressed in a sort of peasants' costume—rough jacket, and those braided stockings, you know, with a big broad sombrero, and wet through. It was an awful day! But, notwithstanding the masquerade, one could see the gentleman and nobleman beneath. Then his manner! I think I do know manner when I see it, and there never was a finer mannered man than Lord Delamere. They say that the worse a man is morally the nicer he is in manners; and, upon my word, it's true in his case. He took my modest request as naturally as if I had only asked him to lend me an umbrella, and just as if the favor was on my side."

"And did you see much of him?" asks Lady Rookwell, when she can get in a word.

"No," replies the beauty, with a little pout, "I am ashamed to say that he proved rather indifferent to my charms, and disappeared as suddenly as he had appeared. But there was a rumor that he had an adventure in hand—"

"We don't want to hear anything about that, thanks, Laura."

The beauty laughs.

"I don't know anything, so I can't shock you, dear, though I would like to. There was a story about a duel—"

"Which we have heard," says Lady Rookwell. "And now, don't you think you'd better go up-stairs and change your things? Some sort of meal will be ready directly; I won't be answerable for a proper dinner or a proper anything else to-day; my poor old head is nearly turned with all this fuss."

"And I'm too excited to care what I eat, dear," responds Laura. "Give me plenty of tea and I shall be satisfied. Oh, I do hope it will go off all right; I should simply die if it should not!" But the laugh which accompanies the assertion doesn't savor much of death.

"And so, my dear," she says, almost before she gets into the room again after "changing her things," "and so you are very, very happy. You see, aunt has been telling me everything, and really I can congratulate you warmly. Such a good-natured man as Mr. Warren must be a charming lover! And aunt tells me that he is everything that is handsome and clever. I do so long to meet him. Aunt says I ought to throw myself on my knees before him with gratitude. Shall I? Do you mind?"

"Not in the least," replies Signa, laughing softly. "I am sorry and so is he, that he cannot be here to welcome you. I hope you will be satisfied—"

"For Heaven's sake, don't put it in that way," exclaims Laura Derwent, with pretty horror. "Just as if he were a tradesman executing an order! Satisfied! I am simply overwhelmed with all he has done, and, indeed, I didn't mean him to take so much trouble. And as to Lord Delamere, I trust I shall never meet him again in this world, if all the money has been spent that aunt declares has been."

Signa smiles.

"There has been a great deal of money spent," she says; "but Hector—Mr. Warren—"

"I know. What an awfully nice name! Well, what does he say?"

"That the amount does not matter, as Lord Delamere is so rich, and that he would only be annoyed if the thing were done shabbily!"

"Shabbily! Yes, but I only meant to have the place cleaned."

Signa cannot refrain from a laugh of amusement.

"It has been all but rebuilt," she says, contritely.

Laura Derwent groans.

"I am almost inclined to run away. I do hope he won't keep his word and turn up to-night. And yet—yet it would make the thing so complete, wouldn't it; quite a dramatic climax, eh, dear? What lovely hair you have! Oh, dear! I wish mine were like that, instead of being washed out yellow."

"It is golden," says Signa, smiling, and just lifting her eyes from her dress, round the sleeves and neck of which she is stitching on some old lace.

"How kind of you to say that; all my dearest—women—friends declare it yellow, and so it is really. Do you know, I think I shall like you awfully if you will let me!"

"I give you permission on the spot," says Signa.

"Thanks, dear!" responds the beauty, and she leans forward and kisses her. "And now, let me see. How calculating I am! I want you to come upstairs and choose the dress I am to wear to-night. You can—and I can see it myself—that you have the most exquisite taste."

Signa starts, then laughs. She choose the dress which the great beauty is to wear on this eventful night!

"Are you laughing at me?" she says, smiling.

"Laugh—oh, I see! No, not a bit! I'm not, mean, I haven't the least taste in the world, not really. I always rely on my friends, only I do it in this way: If they say, Wear such and such a thing, I just put on the opposite, and it always succeeds; but I shan't do it in your case, really."

"I think you'd better," says Signa, as they go upstairs.

Jeannette has laid out, not two, but half a dozen beautiful frocks from the huge imperial, and Signa stands ruminating before them, thinking of the vast sum they must represent. The hand of worth is plainly to be detected in each, and they are all exquisite.

"Mademoiselle likes ——?" says the maid, but her mistress interrupts her quickly.

"Hold your tongue, Jeannette. I wish for Miss Grenville's unbiased opinion."

"Really, will?" and Signa glances at the beautiful face, with its perfect mouth, and auburn eyebrows and lashes, and the crown of golden hair. "I should wear this," and she puts her hand caressingly on a dark, grape-colored chiffon, with lace of the same shade, and a touch of silver sheen introduced in a gauzy trimming. A quaint circle in the description, but made on by an artist, and a marvel in its way. Laura glides to her and kisses her.

"You are perfectly lovely!" she exclaims. "That is the dress I was longing for you to choose! And aunt is quite right; you are an artist at heart! Now, ninety-nine women out of a hundred would have chosen one of those stupid blue things, just because I am fair. And the stones—what shall I wear with it?"

"Diamonds," says Signa, unhesitatingly, picturing the glittering gems on the purple bloom and on the golden hair.

"Mademoiselle's taste is perfect," remarks the maid, sententiously.

"Of course it is," echoes Lady Derwent, enraptured. "And now, you must let me choose your dress."

"It won't take you a moment," says Signa, laughing, "for I have only one."

Laura Derwent colors, but she says, quickly,

"Then I am sure that will be delightful, and nicer than all mine put together."

There is a very nice dinner, notwithstanding Lady Rookwell's warning, and soon after the meal—during which Laura talks as unflaggingly as if she had not travelled several hundred miles—they go up to dress.

The carriage had been ordered for nine o'clock, and at that hour Signa goes down into the drawing-room in her simple Egyptian gauze, to find Lady Rookwell waiting impatiently. But she smiles as Signa enters, and putting a hand on her arm, turns her to the light. Then she nods approvingly.

"At any rate, dear, you won't be the plainest girl in the room. And how long are we to wait for that madcap creature? Here are you quite ready, though you have only shared my maid, and she has had Jeanette, and went up an hour before either of us—"

"Here I am!" exclaims Laura Derwent, and as she glides into the room Signa admits that her taste was correct. The beauty deserves her title to-night if ever she did, and Signa, ever ready to admire another woman's charms, utters a faint exclamation of pleasure.

"Do you like it? Really?" exclaims Laura. "It is nice, isn't it? Aunt, she chose it, so you can admire it safely. I think it is nice myself. Do you know I've half a mind to cut you out with your admirable Mr. Warren. But I suppose it would be of no use."

"Not the least in the world," says Lady Rookwell, quietly. "Hector Warren worships the ground she treads on!"

"So he ought!" retorts Laura Derwent, "and so should I if I were a man!" and she eyes Signa with so frank and candid an admiration that Signa finds herself blushing and laughing.

"I may thank my stars that you were not in town last season, my dear," says the beauty, curtly, "or my reign would have been short. If you come to London next year, I shall remain on the Continent."

"Poor Continent!" says Lady Rookwell, curtly.

Then the carriage is announced, and with an attendant throng of maids to arrange their dresses, so that they may not be crushed, the three ladies enter the old and stately chariot.

"My heart beats so loudly that you could hear it," says Laura Derwent.

"If you were to remain silent for a moment, perhaps," retorts Lady Rookwell.

Signa's heart is beating, too, and it gives a leap when a few minutes afterward Laura Derwent, who had been looking through the window, utters a low scream.

"What is that?" she demands.

Signa looks out of the window and starts.

That is the Grange, not dark and silent and deserted, but streaming with lights from every window, and with lights that extend down through the long avenued drive lined on both sides, with vari-colored lamps.

"Is this it? This! Really and truly?" demands the beauty. "Why, it is Aladdin's Palace! Heavens, what a magnificent place! Aunt, stop them and let me get out and fly away somewhere where I can hide my head! Why, this must have cost—"

"Wait until you get inside," says Lady Rookwell, grimly. "You'll be better able to appreciate the costliness of your freak!"

Laura Derwent utters a faint moan of alarm, and leans back, but she leans forward again the next minute, and stares speechless at the vast outline of the place, made doubly vast by the brilliant light that streams through the many windows, and the huge lamps that stretch along the whole length of the broad terrace.

"I didn't mean all this!" she says, in a tone of genuine awe and alarm. "And Mr. Warren did this! I'm half inclined to be afraid of your lover, my dear; he must be a magician!"

"Wait until you get inside!" says Lady Rookwell again, gloating over her discomfiture.

"I am simply terrified!" responds the willful beauty.

The carriage draws up at the entrance steps, and a couple of footmen in the Delamere livery come, with stately gait, to open the door, and Signa, alighting first, sees that since she was last here a broad piece of scarlet cloth and an awning have been placed from the bottom step to the hall-door, and that costly shrubs and flowers line the path, and she understands now why Hector Warren was so late.

In silence Laura Derwent follows her into the hall; her amazement is too great even for words. The hall seems to be lined with footmen and maids, the former in the plain but imposing Delamere livery, the latter in black dresses and white caps. The hall itself seemed subdued in light, after the blaze and glare of the lamps, and looks very grand and awe-inspiring, such, as Signa thinks, it may have looked when the king crossed its marble floor on his way to dine with the Delamere of Charles the Second's reign.

Two of the maids came forward to conduct them to the rooms, and still Laura Derwent, the cause of all this pageant, is silent. It is not until they have traversed the long corridor, and are safe in their rooms, that she exclaims in hushed accents:

"Aunt, I am really frightened! On my honor, I did not mean anything of this kind. Why, the whole place seems to have been redecorated for this one night. What—what on earth will Lord Delamere think of me?"

"There is time for vain reproaches," says Lady Rookwell, impatiently. "The people will be here directly."

"You haven't seen the ballroom yet," says Signa, feeling a vague satisfaction in the beauty's amazement and embarrassment.

"I am afraid to see it!" exclaims Laura Derwent. "I am, indeed. What's that?"

"The first carriage! Come!" replies Lady Rookwell, dropping her cloak and gathering her fan and smelling-bottle in her hand. "Come along; it is no time for idle repentance over your foolhardy whim."

"No," says the beauty, with sudden vigor; "we must go through it. Signa, dear, you must keep near me and help me. I feel so strange, so bewildered!"

They go down into the ballroom, and Signa, with a pleased satisfaction, sees Laura Derwent start as she looks around the magnificent salon, which, notwithstanding the short notice, presents—thanks to Hector Warren—an appearance of tasteful magnificence which might have taken months to produce, rather than three short weeks.

The first guests have arrived, and as carriage after carriage sets down fresh arrivals, the beauty of three seasons regains her composure and self-possession. With Lady Rookwell at her elbow, she receives her guests with the stately yet perfectly calm manner which has so charmed Signa. At a few minutes before ten the Duchess of Deerford arrives—a stately, middle-aged woman in black velvet and diamonds, who is enough to awe even Laura Derwent, Signa thinks, but the beauty receives her with a self-possessed ease, and hands her over to Lady Rookwell as easily as she has handed over the smaller fry.

As the duchess passes to her seat, the band, with a popular conductor at its head, strikes into a sort of overture. The magnificent room—which Signa had looked down upon only a few weeks ago with Hector Warren at her elbow—is one blaze of light and color. There is half the county present—that is, as represented by its notabilities, and the murmur of conversation of the nearly two hundred people almost overbears the soft strains of the music.

Moving among the mass with perfect ease, Laura Derwent passes to and fro, with a word or a smile for each of her guests, and with an eye to all. Lady Rookwell, seated near the duchess, is surrounded by a small group of the elite, who are curious to know the real truth of this strange gathering. And Signa, who stands near her, smiles as she listens to the disjointed and almost irritable explanations which the old lady vouchsafes.

"Will Lord Delamere really come?" is the question which Signa hears in a hundred different tones, but all of intense curiosity.

The band still plays the overture, though the time has arrived for the first waltz, and the rector, who stands beside Signa, and who has done nothing since he arrived but murmur, amidst much coughing and chin-rubbing, his amazement at the splendor, asks: "What are they waiting for and where is Mr. Warren?"

"I don't know," says Signa, answering both questions, but at that moment a footman approaches them, and with that deep respect which a well-trained servant can throw into his voice, says:

"Mr. Warren is in the library, miss, and would be obliged if ——"

Without waiting for the finish, Signa follows him to the library, the door of which the footman opens with obsequious humility, and Hector Warren comes forward.

"My darling!" he says, taking her into his arms and kissing her, then holding her at arms' length that he may feast his eyes on her loveliness. "How beautiful you look!"

With a pleased smile she nestles close to him, then she raises her head.

"Hector, I am glad you have come. There seems some hitch. They are all waiting to begin the first dance, and the band is still playing the overture."

"Never mind," he says, coolly; "let them wait a few minutes. How beautiful you look, my darling! And Miss Laura Derwent—is she here?"

Signa nods.

"Yes. And do you know, Hector, I like her very much. She is awfully overcome at all you have done."

"Really?" and he smiles. "I thought nothing would daunt that young lady."

"But she is daunted at this," says Signa, laughing. "And, Hector"—reluctantly freeing herself from his embrace—"you must go now; they seem to be waiting for something."

"Let them wait," he says, with a strange ring in his voice. "Signa"—he pauses, and a shadow crosses his brow—"Signa, my darling, I am sure of your love?"

She looks up at him, and to the imminent danger of his dress-shirt front, she nestles to his heart.

"Why do you ask me that now?"

"Why? Because I am going to put it to the test," he answers, gravely.

"No test can be too strong," she says. "You know I love you!" And she raises her head to meet the kiss which he bends to give her. Then she starts, and touches with the points of her fingers a band of blue ribbon which crosses his breast. "What is this, Hector?"

"This?" he says, with a smile, and looking down at the ribbon. "This is—never mind, Signa. I belong to an order which permits me to wear this token of its power and might."

She laughs, having no idea that it is the Order of the Knight of the Garter.

Gypsum Has an Affinity.

An early and for many years the principal use of gypsum in this country was its application by farmers to the land, with a view to make non-porous clay soils more pervious to water, to make sandy soils less pervious, and to sweeten sour and acid soils. A characteristic of ground gypsum is that it has an affinity for water, and will draw moisture from the atmosphere. This quality is a great factor in keeping moisture in the soil, and is of value to the farmer in starting the growth of grain and grass, as it holds moisture where the roots of the small plants most need it. The application of ground gypsum or land plaster to the foliage of many plants in a dry, hot season, it is declared, will draw the necessary moisture from the atmosphere and often save a crop from being damaged by drought. It is commonly applied to peanut vines to insure a crop.

The production of gypsum, according to the United States Geological Survey, Department of the Interior, has increased from 594,462 short tons in 1900 to 2,447,671 short tons in 1915.—U. S. Exchange.

INSECT STRENGTH.

Tiny Creatures Far Outdo Man in Muscular Power.

Recent experiments with insects have demonstrated their remarkable muscular power. A wood beetle weighing 1.86 grammes and less than two inches long can pull a little wagon loaded with fifty-six grammes, or thirty times its own weight. When a load of eighty-four grammes was piled on the wagon the beetle pulled it an inch; this was forty-five times its own weight. When its leg were attached to a small dynamometer the insect exerted a force of fifteen grammes, which is as if a man weighing 200 pounds were able to raise a ton.

A Hercules beetle earned his right to the appellation, for though he weighed only 6[illegible] grammes and was only three inches long, he pulled 115 grammes and walked off with a weight of five pounds on his back. If a proportionate weight were put on a man he would be crushed to death.

A butterfly, held by the wings and brought close to a match, lifted it [illegible] by its feet; to perform a proportionate feat a man would have to lift a beam twenty-six feet long and thirteen inches thick.

It is [illegible] known that a flea can jump 200 times its own height in the air. A man would have to jump over a 1,000-foot high Eiffel Tower to equal that feat.

The muscles in insects are actually much larger proportionately than in man. Prof. A. Schmidt estimates that if a ant can pull an object of ten times its own weight a man would equal the task if he lifted a weight [illegible] that of his body. This is explainable on the basis of the far greater muscular equipment of the ant as compared with man.

SPRING IMPURITIES IN THE BLOOD

A TONIC MEDICINE IS A NECESSITY AT THIS SEASON.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People are an all year round tonic, blood-builder and nerve-restorer. But they are especially valuable in the spring when the system is loaded with impurities as a result of the indoor life of the winter months. There is no other season when the blood is so much in need of purifying and enriching, and every dose of these pills helps to make new, rich, red blood. In the spring one feels weak and tired. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills give strength. In the spring the appetite is often poor. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills develop the appetite, tone the stomach and aid weak digestion. It is in the spring that poisons in the blood find an outlet in disfiguring pimples, eruptions and boils. Dr. Williams' Pink Pills speedily clear the skin because they go to the root of the trouble in the blood. In the spring anaemia, rheumatism, indigestion, neuralgia, erysipelas and many other troubles are most persistent because of poor, weak blood, and it is at this time when all nature takes on new life that the blood most seriously needs attention. Some people dose themselves with purgatives at this season, but these only further weaken themselves. A purgative merely gallops through the system, emptying the bowels, but it does not cure anything. On the other hand Dr. Williams' Pink Pills actually make new blood which reaches every nerve and organ in the body, bringing new strength, new health and vigor to weak, easily tired men, women and children. Try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills this spring—they will not disappoint you.

BISQUE OF OYSTERS.

A Very Good Recipe Which Leaves Nothing Unsaid.

To make bisque of oysters take one pint of oysters, one tablespoonful of butter, yolk of one egg, one pint of milk, one tablespoonful of flour, salt and pepper to taste.

Drain the oysters free from their liquor, adding sufficient cold water to make one cup of liquid. Chop half the oysters fine. Drink the oysters liquor to a boil, skim, add the chopped oysters and simmer 10 minutes.

Scald the milk; rub the butter and flour together until smooth, add to the milk and stir until it thickens. Add the whole oysters to the oyster liquor, and as soon as their edges curl remove all from the fire. Add the beaten yolk of the egg to the milk, take at once from the fire and mix with the oysters and their liquor. Season and serve at once.

Perhaps the man who makes a fortune in the glue business has some cause to feel stuck up about it.

TRACING LOST CARS.

Detectives of Railroads Have Work Following Runaways.

At times when the scarcity of freight cars causes the railroads to place an embargo upon certain classes of goods, the problem of keeping track of its cars to see that they do not run away and become wanderers upon the face of the earth is a stupendous one for each company.

When a freight car is built, it is given a number before it leaves the shop, and therefore it is always known by that number until it is worn out and scrapped. When a new car receives its number, and starts out upon its business career, it is entered in the record book, and a careful account of its wanderings and earning power are kept there. This record book is a history of the car, and by consulting it one can learn how many trips it has made, what cities it has visited, how many times it has been to the repair shop, and also where it is supposed to be at any given time.

But in spite of all this care in keeping a record of each car now and then, for some unexplained reason, one disappears from sight—literally running away. Some of the big companies employ car tracers, but as a rule a printed tracer is first sent after the car to bring it back home. This printed tracer in a blue envelope is sent to the person in whose jurisdiction the car was last supposed to be, and if it had passed out of his district the tracer is sent on to the next one to whom the car was consigned. This little printed tracer failing to bring the car home in a reasonable length of time, a man known as a tracer is sent after it. The tracer is really a railroad car detective.

And sometimes it is more difficult to trace a runaway freight car than a criminal. There are tens of thousands of miles of railways, and hundreds of thousands of freight cars, and to find the one carrying a certain number is often like hunting for a needle in a haystack. The tracer may arrive in a city where the runaway car is supposed to be at the very moment when the car is leaving it in the opposite direction. It may cross this track on a parallel line, or dodge around him on a short line. It may be headed north, or rolling merrily toward the Pacific while he is going toward the Atlantic.

A runaway car apparently is as depraved as any criminal. It hides on a lonely siding or gets lost in a short swamp line. One such runaway rested nearly a year on a siding in Southern Texas simply because it got lost, and no one seemed to know just what to do with it. The nearest freight agent had no record of it and no tracer had requested its return. Going on the principle that what is "everybody's business is nobody's business," this local agent made no effort to hunt up the owners. If the order had been received by him to return it he would have obeyed, but lacking such orders he left it in the siding. In the course of time, it was occupied by a family of squatters, who lived quite comfortably in it for six months, and were routed out only when quite by accident the car tracer discovered it.—Popular Mechanics.

A Great Chess Player.

Sir Walter Parratt had an extraordinary memory. Some eight or ten men were assembled one evening in one of the lodges attached to St. Michael's college, Tenbury. Sir Walter Parratt and Herr von Holst played in turn upon the piano such music as was asked for. This went on for some time until at last the chessboard was brought out. Sir Walter then proposed to play two men at chess in consultation, still remaining at the piano and playing from memory what was demanded either from Bach, Beethoven, Mozart, Chopin or Mendelssohn. Without even a glance at the chessboard he won the game in an hour.—London Globe.

They who in July do wed
Must always labor for their bread.

Whoever wed in August be
Many a change is sure to see.

Marry in September's shine,
Your living will be rich and fine.

If in October you do marry,
Love will come, but riches tarry.

If you wed in bleak November
Only joy will come, remember.

When December's snows fall fast,
Marry, and true love will last.

So much for the proper months, but if the bride-elect seeks to know what color she should choose, these lines may help her:

Married in grey, you will go far away;
Married in black, you will wish your self back;
Married in brown, you will live out of town;
Married in red, you will wish yourself dead;
Married in pearl, you will live in a whirl;
Married in green, ashamed to be seen;
Married in yellow, ashamed of your fellow;
Married in blue, he will always be true;
Married in pink your spirits will sink;
Married in white, you have chosen aright.

Says She Suffered For Many Years
THEN DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HER KIDNEY TROUBLES.
Mrs. Felix Ascah Found No Relief in Doctors or Hospital Treatment, but Dodd's Kidney Pills Brought a Speedy Cure.
Haldimand, Gaspe, Co., Quebec, April 12—(Special)—Mrs. Felix Ascah is telling her numerous friends here that her complete recovery from kidney disease, from which she suffered for years is due to the splendid work of Dodd's Kidney Pills.
"My trouble started from a strain," Mrs. Ascah says. "I suffered for years. I was attended by a doctor and was also treated at a hospital. I suffered from stiffness of the joints. I had a bitter taste, especially in the morning, and at times was subject to severe headaches. I had a pressure and often a sharp pain at the top of my head and my skin itched and burned at night.
"Neither from the doctor nor at the hospital did I get any permanent relief. Then I started to use Dodd's Kidney Pills, and two boxes did me so much good I feel like recommending them to everyone who has kidney trouble."
Dodd's Kidney Pills cure sick kidneys. Cured kidneys strain all the impurities, all the seeds of disease out of the blood. That makes good health all over the body. That's why those cured are so enthusiastic in regard to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

No human being has ever been known positively to be killed by the fall of a meteorite. Probably the narrowest escape was that of three children in Braunau, at the time of the fall of an iron meteorite in 1847. This object, weighing 40 pounds, fell in a room where the children were sleeping, and covered them with debris but they were not injured. In each of two celebrated meteoric showers—those of Pultusk and Mocs—more than 100,000 stones fell. All other showers were of stones, but the finding of numerous individuals of iron in single localities, such as Toluca and Canon Diablo, indicates that showers of iron meteorites sometimes occur. The largest known meteorite is one brought from Cape York, Greenland, by Peary, weighing 36½ tons. It is in the American Museum of Natural History, New York. Twenty-nine chemical elements have been found in meteorites in quantities sufficient for accurate study.—Scientific American.

)o Dairy Cows Pay On Dear Land?

hey Do When They Are Given a Reasonable Chance—Our Expert Tells How to Do It.

(BY PROFESSOR R. H. DEAN).

While it is admitted that for the an with rough pasture land the iry cow is one of the most economi- l animal producers of human food hat a farmer can own, some have oubted her ability to make profit on high-priced land. These doubters rgue that the returns from dairying n soil suitable for market gardening nd located near a good market or 'nvenient' for shipping are not to be compared with the returns from growing vegetables, small fruits, etc. This is doubtless true as far as gross returns are concerned, but the operating expenses for truck farming are so heavy and the cost of fertili- zers is such that these two items cut large hole in the money received e vegetables and fruits. On re- stricted areas of land, say from 5 to 5 acres, and where natural and mar- ing conditions are favorable, we admit that truck farming is like- be more profitable than dairy- ing in Canada, largely for the on that Canadian dairymen find ficult to get away from the idea a cow requires a considerable of land to roam over in order roduce milk economically. In respect our farmers have much arn from European dairymen, seem to have solved the problem eping cows on small farms. In of these countries the standard e cow per acre, and very little is purchased, except concen- . The probabilities are that hief factor in Canada which nts intensive dairy farming is but with improved machinery ght to be able to solve this m as satisfactorily as the Euro- farmer has done.

NE COW TO TEN ACRES.

Ontario the average number of n the best dairy counties, is ten to one hundred acres of land. This appears to be area land for the most eco- results. However, we need in mind that most Ontario armers are also "mixed" farm- y keep a number of other of live stock in addition to they grow some grain or other r a cash crop, and have part farm in orchard, and vegetable such as potatoes. In this way ndeavor to have something for that will be profitable in case more of the other crops fail. eturns from the dairy are the of any, because there is al- a good demand for dairy pro- at paying prices, no matter the conditions of trade. Peo- must have milk, butter and cheese dless of the price.

e only doubtful factor in the business, assuming good cows ept, is that of feed. In a dry n like that of 1916, many cows not properly fed, and conse- ly the milk flow was lessened derably below that of a normal , although the high prices paid milk and its products stimulated ers to feed as much as possible, icularly of hay, which was a good But hay is not a satisfactory ement for dry pastures. A cow ires succulent feed to produce in paying quantities. It is, efore, very important that dairy ers on high-priced land shall be red for off-seasons in grass pro- n. So long as we remain wed- the pasturing idea for feeding in summer there are three which need special attention.

ORE GRASS AND CLOVER PASTURE.

e Ontario farmer is too much to the use of timothy and red r only, when seeding his land. re are a great many mixtures of es and clovers much more suit- for Ontario farms than the old of timothy and red clover. The Husbandry Department of the College recommends per acre the following, where land is to be pastured two or more years: Red clover, 6 lbs.; alsike, 3 lbs.; orchard grass, 3 lbs.; meadow fescue, 3 lbs.; timothy, 3 lbs.

Pasture is likely to be short in 1917 as a result of the very dry season of last year, which burnt the new and old seeding and because the crops were eaten more closely than usual in the fall, which is not a favorable condition for satisfactory wintering. This means a slow start and late grass next spring, unless the weather conditions are extremely favorable.

In such cases it would be good policy to sow one of the annual pasture crops recommended, such as one and a half bushels of oats, thirty pounds of Early Amber sugar cane and seven pounds of red clover seed per acre; or, the one-one-one mixture of oats, barley and wheat, with six to eight pounds of red clover seed added.

Peas and oats, or vetches and oats, or alfalfa may be cut for a soiling crop, but the labor of cutting and hauling green crops for cows makes these rather expensive cow-feed. It is a good plan to sow at least a small piece of land to some soiling crop for emergencies, and, if not needed, it may be cured as hay. A dairy farmer seldom has too much hay, as cows are able to consume enormous quantities, if not getting sufficient roughage in other forms of feed.

PROVIDE SUMMER SILAGE.

We have frequently referred to the fact that one of the best insurance policies a dairy farmer can carry is a summer silo filled with good corn silage. If it is not needed this year, it may be carried over for the next year, or for several years, and will be ready whenever needed to help out short feed, summer or winter.

Where corn can be grown successfully, as it can in practically all parts of old Ontario, farmers who keep cows should grow an extra two or three acres of corn for each five or six cows that will be milking. A cheap stave silo will preserve this crop in a satisfactory manner. In this way the capital outlay is small and the risks of short feed are thereby very much reduced. We need to bear in mind that cows without plenty of feed are a poor paying proposition. A few good cows well fed, pay much better than a larger number improperly fed. While we believe that a man should carry [illegible] his farm—good cows particularly [illegible] poorer cows rather than [illegible]—it does not pay to stint the feed to a good milker.

A very good motto in feeding cows is: [illegible] you feed, and feed all you grow. Thus you save freight and commission charges on bulky [illegible] such as is the nature of most feeds for cows. While it is advisable to buy feed at times it is much better to grow feed as far as possible on one's own dairy farm, especially the bulky feeds.

Can the cow hold her own on high-priced land? The writer thinks she can, if we have the right kind of cows and pay special attention to the [illegible] of the right kind of feed. [illegible] selling for about two [illegible] a hundred pounds, butter at [illegible] cents a pound, and cheese at 24 to 25 cents a pound wholesale, there is no reason why the cow should not continue to be, as in the past, the most profitable [illegible] on the farm.

Our Butter Must Be Graded

I do not believe [illegible] John H. Scott [illegible] for Ontario, at the Western Dairymen's Convention [illegible] prices will fall to normal or perhaps go lower."

And this, Mr. Scott explained, would bring a mighty serious problem to the door of the Ontario dairyman. The western provinces were producing enough butter for their own uses and had become exporters. Due to the fact that their butter was graded and was superior to the general run of Ontario butter, it would beat us in our own home markets. And, of course, it would lead to foreign markets also. Therefore, when the demand falls off after the war, and the Canadian markets being supplied by new competitors, the only solution of the Ontario butter trade will be the manufacture of butter of the finest quality, properly graded, and suitably guaranteed.

The first, Mr. Scott pointed out, began with the farmer himself. Unless cream of the proper quality was sent to the creamery, butter of the finest quality certainly could not be manufactured.

FOOLING HURTS INDUSTRY.

At the same time, Mr. Scott was not inclined to blame the dairyman for present conditions. Rather he blamed the system of buying cream by pooling methods. When a man realized that his good cream was mixing with poorer grades and all paid for alike, he was rather inclined to [illegible] "The system brings the best down to the average and raises the poorest to the average," said the speaker. "It is a kind of socialistic system which is not popular with our good farmers who do produce cream of a high quality."

In order to commence preparatory work leading to the grading and standardization of our butter, Mr. Scott was given a commission to study the conditions of butter being shipped from our creameries and to assist the creamery men in improving the quality. He found that 57 per cent. of butter inspected by him graded No. 1 and 41 per cent. No. 2. The June butter was excellent, but after that when the "hot weather goods" began to arrive, not half was No. 1. On the other hand, certain creameries shipped nothing but first class butter in every season.

IMPROVE MARKETING CONDITIONS.

"The system of marketing butter might be greatly improved," said Mr. Scott. "An organized system of co-operative marketing might be introduced with great benefit to the trade, an official organization of buyers and sellers representing both ends of the trade, with the object in view of paying for butter on a basis of quality.

"The system of marketing butter at present is generally the following: The creamery sells to the dealer by shipping, or ships on consignment to some commission merchant. The butter is bought as good marketable [illegible] and supposed to be of first quality, unless otherwise mentioned. It is usually shipped in government refrigerator cars during the hot months. On arriving at the storage it is inspected. The buyer governs his inspection a good deal by the market. If the market has advanced since he bought, its defects will be lightly passed over. If the market, on the other hand, has declined, quality will take a large place from the buyer's viewpoint.

[illegible] strongly [illegible] We must practise better [illegible] all along the line. Cream [illegible] paid for upon a quality basis. [illegible] way of encouraging good practice and discouraging poor practice. Butter must be [illegible] manufactured, carefully [illegible] as directly as possible to the [illegible] And we can do this only on a quality basis. Every dairyman [illegible]

Bagdad-Mitteleuropa

e fall of Bagdad is one of the interesting incidents in the whole One may exaggerate the imme- military effect, and the ultimate al consequences, but not the le results, for it may be the first n a new orientation of Islam, the of the Arabian supremacy and legation of the Osmanli Turk place outside the walls of the mmedan world.

taking Bagdad the British have ly and with reasonable prompti- regained the prestige lost in the Near East by the surrender at Kut-el-Amara a year ago. This surrender, coupled with the failure at Gallipoli, seriously, if not momentarily, endangered British prestige from Egypt to Siam. It was the kind of failure that could not be permitted to stand, and its effect east of Suez could be compared only to that of the Roumanian collapse in Europe.

A year ago the Russians had taken Erzerum and were pressing west through Armenia and southward through Persia. There was a moment when it seemed possible that the threefold allied thrust at the different [illegible] might fuse into a single drive across the upper waters of the Euphrates and the Tigris, and that the Turk would be pushed out of Mesopotamia and threatened, if not attacked, in Syria. The British failure ended this possibility. After taking Erzingan and Trebizond, Russian operations came to a dead halt and presently the Turks began to advance in Persia. Now the Russians are again reported to be moving west out of Hamadan in Persia, and the position of the Turk facing them will become exceedingly difficult as British pursuit from Bagdad reaches their communications.

So much for the immediate military effect. Granted that the British army is capable of further efforts after its recent exhausting campaign, it seems probable that the Turks will be driven as far as Mosul, along a section of the Bagdad Railroad which has been completed. At Mosul the British will be able to join hands with the Russians, advancing from Lake Van. A resumption of the Russian advance from Erzerum westward upon Diarbekr and Kharput is also conceivable. Such a campaign would inevitably compel a Turkish retirement out of most of Syria, and this retirement may be appreciably hastened by the pressure now being exerted by a British army coming out of Egypt and recently reported at the gates of Jerusalem.

But underlying the military is the political [illegible] of the new turn in the war. If you draw a line from the Gulf of Alexandretta on the Mediterranean straight east to the Tigris River you will, roughly speaking, indicate the northern frontier of the Arab. Mohammedans, like the Turk, the Arabs have never reconciled themselves to the supremacy of the Osmanli; the traditions of the great days of the prophet and his successors who carried the green banner from Bagdad to the Loire have survived, and the decline of Islam in the world remains for the Arab a consequence of Turkish supremacy.

[illegible]

Egypt and east to India. The German plans included the arrival of the Bagdad railroad at Suez and at the Persian Gulf, this railroad to be linked up ultimately with the railroads in Egypt and in India.

When Turkey entered the war a Holy War was proclaimed against the infidel and the Germans planned to [illegible] the fanaticism of the Mohammedan [illegible] world [illegible] of the Teuton and conquer British and Russian territories by Turkish armies, trained, officered and equipped by Germans. Nor did the German scheme pause at Egypt. It dreamed a further extension along the African shores to the Mediterranean and contemplated re[illegible] the triumph of the Arab successors of the Prophet, who carried Islam from the Arabian Desert to the shores of the Atlantic facing Gibraltar. To expel the Turk from Islam [illegible]

[illegible] the Austrian Serbs, Bosnia, Herzegovina and Southern Dalmatia, together with Montenegro.

After all, war is in a measure a thing of omens still, and it must be a real augury of greater successes to come for the British to open 1917 with a victory precisely at the point at which they suffered disaster a year ago. And once more the East discovers that the Briton, sometimes defeated, does come back. As for the Turk, at the best he will now have to recall the divisions he has lent the two Kaisers in Galicia, Lithuania and the Balkans and send them to Asia to hold his Arab dominions.

A DARING FEAT.

Marvelous Swordsmanship of an Indian Sergeant.

Indian swordsmen are acknowledged to be unrivalled. An extraordinary performer, who was a sergeant in one of the native regiments is thus spoken of in Colonel Barras' book, "India and Tiger Hunting": "He was a fine-looking fellow, in the prime of life, and, notwithstanding the frightfully critical nature of what he was going to do, he moved about with perfect ease and calmness. In one hand he held a very long double-edged sword, sharp at the point and with edges like razors. With the other hand he led his little son, a child aged about six years, who was also clearly accustomed to what was about to follow.

"From the little fellow's evident enjoyment of the scene it was plain that failure on the part of his father was quite beyond the limits of his imagination. As soon as the usual preliminaries had been gone through, such as walking around and salaaming to the commanding officer and principal officers, the father placed his little boy in the centre of a circle, with a small lime (a kind of lemon), about twice the size of a walnut, under his heel.

"Then, taking up his stand at a few feet from the child, he grasped firmly the hilt of the sword and began brandishing it rapidly in the air. The blade was thin and finely tempered, so that it could be seen to quiver and undulate throughout its entire length as it flashed in the rays of the setting sun. Suddenly the muscles of the athlete might be seen to stiffen themselves; an instant's pause, then a sudden and lightning-like swoop, and the lime under the boy's heel was safely severed.

"Then, the boy having taken up his position as before, a small open box, about the size of those we use for tooth powder, was placed on the ground at his feet. It was filled with a black powder called soorma, used by the natives for darkening eyelashes. Round this little box and about the boy's head the sword was now made to play with redoubled velocity. In the midst of the most dazzling passes the weapon would dart towards the little box, and then reappear, steadily poised at the full stretch of the professor's eyes, in front of the eyes of the child; then a sudden turn of the wrist, and a very dark line of powder was lying on one of the boy's lower eyelashes, placed there by the sharp point of the long sword. The same was then done to the other eye. This feat was performed weekly, always with undeviating success, and was the most wonderful instance of nerve and steadiness ever witnessed."

LAMPS OF ALL AGES

A collection of all the various illuminating devices used throughout the history of the world is now being prepared by Dr. Walter Hough, of the National Museum, Washington, and will be placed on exhibition.

Stowed away in large airtight cabinets in Dr. Hough's office is the complete record of man's development as shown by his lighting appliances from the days of the primitive camp fire to the present Tungsten filament. Here is the firebrand by which our aboriginal ancestor transferred fire from tribe to tribe; here is the animal's skull which constituted the first attempt at a lamp, and the greased stick that was superseded by the candle. A part of the collection is already occupying three cases in the museum, where it attracts a great deal of attention among visitors.

The story told by this collection is a most unusual one. According to the museum authorities, it was some time before men began to pay any attention to fire at all. It was all about them—in the volcanoes, in the lightning, and in the friction of the tree branches—but they took no more account of it than did the animals. Then some one man, a little more intelligent than the rest, recognized its power, undertook to conserve a supply of fire from one of these sources, and finally distributed it by firebrands throughout the land. Thus began the camp fire age, which is represented in the museum collection by a picture, and by firebrands of every description belonging to every period.

Toward the end of this camp fire period man began to display ingenuity. He got tired of travelling long distances with blazing sticks that often burned his fingers, and he got tired of going to war with other tribes who stole his fire. He tried dipping the sticks in resin and fat, which made them burn longer, but even this was unsatisfactory. The age demanded an invention and it came at last. Some ancient Edison discovered that by putting a lot of fat in a hollow stone or seashell or animal's skull, and placing a wick in it he had a device which would burn for a long time. This was the primitive beginning of the lamp. Often the whole body of a fish or bird was used. In the part of the collection now on exhibit in the museum there is a stormy petrel with a piece of fibre in its mouth, which acted in the nature of a wick. This bird's body was composed largely of fat and would burn for hours.

"The next step in man's development is represented in the collection by a number of odd curved stone slabs, supposed to be lamps which were used in the stone age. Fat or grease was poured into these stone dishes and a circle of moss strewn around the edge to act as a wick. Lamps of this kind are still found in use among primitive

By this time man had become familiar with fire and had even tried a few experiments with it. One of these resulted in pottery, and pottery lamps became the rage. At first they were simple little bowls with a slight twist in the edge to hold the wick, but gradually they developed elaborate patterns with the growing talent of the potters, until they somewhat resemble tiny teapots, with a spout in the side for a wick and a hole at the top where the oil was poured in. The museum's specimens of this type of lamp are especially remarkable, many having been sent in from all parts of Europe and Asia, displaying the most ancient craftsmanship and design. A hundred or more such lamps were sometimes required to light one room, and although the people were ingenious enough to invent a perfume for the oil, according to Dr. Hough, the place must have smelled like a butcher shop on fire. A dilapidated oil lamp containing some of this early perfumed oil is one of the most prized specimens in the museum's collection.

Then came copper and bronze, and the lamps assumed a new symmetry and design as civilization and mechanic arts progressed. Pottery lamps were soon out of date, and brass and copper lamps began to ornament the houses and churches.

The next step in lamp architecture was the use of iron, and many were the curious designs wrought in this metal. On occasional iron lamp from Italy or Spain is always being discovered by some explorer for antiques, who sends it to the museum. But all this time, although various metals had been discovered and applied to lamps, there was no improvement whatever in the mechanism itself. The glass age had superseded iron for some time before Argand discovered the method of putting oil in a small reservoir and forcing it up through a wick and then covering it with a chimney. This, which was the first real lamp, as we know it to-day, made its appearance about 1784.

Following this invention came the discovery of kerosene and gas, and new fixtures were developed along new lines. So far the collection ends with the Welsbach burner, which is the most recent improvement for gas illumination, and the Tungsten filament for electricity. In the one case now on exhibition in the museum there are more than twenty-four different specimens of lamps representing the various stages of civilization, but these are only the beginning of a collection which is to be one of the most extensive in the world. The number of candles and candlesticks alone would probably fill five or six cases, for there were improvements in this type of illumination throughout the ages the same as in lamps. The origin of the word candlestick is shown in two or three of these specimens, which are carved sticks of wood, with a small brass dish at the top.

One time, in travelling through a street in Mexico, Dr. Hough came upon a peddler who had a singular little tin lamp among his goods. Dr. Hough immediately bought it and later inquired into its use. It turned out to be the type of lamp used by the Mexicans in hunting snails. Another time the doctor was travelling through a railroad tunnel in Italy when the train was held up while some repair was being made. He observed that the laborers used a peculiar kind of torch, different from any he had seen before. He quietly got out of the train, and, it must be admitted, stole one of the torches. Later, when he was able to look the matter up, he discovered that the torch, which was made of a greased piece of twisted rope, was the same kind that was carried by the link boys of early English history. It is now a valued specimen of the collection.

In nothing else, perhaps, is the progress of the race from the dawn of understanding to the present day so evident as in the history of illumination. After all, the race is very young. Our grandmothers used the same sort of lamp, with very little difference, that was used in the days of the pyramids, and as late as 1876, when the Centennial Exposition was held in Philadelphia, a kerosene lamp of a common type, with a liberty bell at its base, was pronounced the highest triumph of modern illumination. Apparently, the greatest progress has been made in the last ten or fifteen years, but who knows what another ten years may bring forth. The Tungsten filament may yet look medieval.—Philadelphia Public Ledger.

Camels and Dromedaries.

No matter to what extent the railway may be constructed in certain parts of the world, the camel will probably never cease to be the principal means of transportation in the desert, over the greater portion of Egypt and the Soudan.

The desert would, of course, be absolutely impossible without this animal. He was created for it and thrives in it better than anywhere else. His broad, soft foot enables him to traverse deep sands where the horse would sink to its knees and quickly perish.

The camel lives on almost nothing, the scanty herbage of the desert and the twigs of the thorny mimosa being his favorite food; but, as everyone knows, his most valuable quality in this relation is his ability to travel many days during the fiercest days of summer without drinking.

The African camel is a native of Arabia and has only one hump.

The camel and the dromedary differ only in breed, just as the draught horse differs from the racer. The burden camel, called gamal by the Arabs, never changes his regular walk of two and a half miles an hour under a load which never exceeds 500 pounds for a long journey, for his strength must be estimated by what he can carry when exhausted by hardship and privation.

The dromedary, or riding camel, is much swifter. With no other load than his rider, a bag of bread, dates and a skin of water, he can accomplish 100 miles a day in an emergency.

FOR THE AVERAGE PERSON

The stationary character of the war has allowed a number of legends and superstitions to be born and spread, some of which can be traced and explained, while others remain obscure. The story of the "Mons angels" last year was proved to have arisen from a newspaper story in which the vision was described but not as an account of the fact.

The superstitions that declares that it is unlucky to light three cigarettes or cigars with a single match has become very widespread. Guillaume Apollinaire, the poet, in writing about it in the current number of the Mercure de France says that it has been introduced into France by the English army, although the present writer first met with it in France long before the war, but had never heard of it in England.

Apollinaire tells how he was invited to mess with a friend, Second Lieut. Francois V——, how this superstition was discussed and laughed at by all present except himself and Francois V——, and how Francois V—— happened to be the third to light his cigarette with the same match.

The next morning Francois V—— was killed five or six miles from the front lines by a German shell. It appears that the superstition is that the death is always of this nature, as Apollinaire quotes a captain of a mixed Trailleur and zouave regiment as saying:

"It is not so much the death that follows, as death no longer is a dread to any one, but it has been noticed that it is always a useless form of death. A shell splinter in the trenches or at rest in the rear, which has nothing heroic about it, if there is anything in this war which is not heroic."

To dream of an autobus has become a token of death. Apollinaire has found this superstition in four different regiments, and gives a story of a sergeant who succeeded in averting the omen in the case of a corporal who said he had dreamed of an autobus. "How can that be," the sergeant asked, "when you have never been to Paris or seen an autobus?" The corporal described the vision. "That an autobus," declared the sergeant. "Why, that's one of those new machines that the English are using. Don't let that worry you."

A regiment from the south has the same belief about an automobile lorry instead of an autobus and can quote many examples of the truth of such dreams.

Gold coins as a talisman in the front lines, a superstition not difficult to explain. It was at first believed that wounded men on whom some gold was found would be better looked after by those who found them, and by degrees the belief grew up, especially among artillery, that a gold coin was a talisman against being mutilated if they were taken prisoners whether wounded or not.

Apollinaire knew of a certain battery which in May, 1915, had come to live in gold among its men, thanks chiefly to their commerce in rings, paper knives and other souvenirs, made by them from cartridge cases and aluminum and sold to foot soldiers.

The government's appeals to have gold sent to the Bank of France and not to let it fall into enemy hands in case of capture have since reduced the amount of gold at the front, but many keep some coins as a charm. Many men sew coins touching one another in such a way as to make a shield over the heart.

A story that is believed in the ranks shows how gold can attract the Germans. A sergeant made a gold coin glitter in the sun and some thirsty German soldiers walked right up to the French trench, charmed by its dazzle, and were easily captured.

"Every man has his own particular star," a Breton farm hand said to Apollinaire, "but he must know it. A gold coin is the only means to put you in communication with your star, so that its protecting virtue can be exercised. I have a piece of gold and so am easy in my mind I shall never be touched." As a matter of fact he was seriously wounded later.

NEW BOOKS

Sidney Whitman, in "Things I Remember" (Stokes), has some interesting anecdotes of James Gordon Bennett, proprietor of the New York Herald. Mr. Bennett is a "Colossus" of the journalistic world. As the Herald's London correspondent, Whitman has had for many years an intimate touch with the great editor. He found Bennett a man with an extraordinary scent for coming news, which has been responsible for many a big "scoop" his paper has enjoyed. Mr. Bennett is not, however, afflicted with "swelled head." On one occasion he cabled to New York ordering the discharge of a member of the staff. The manager replied asking him to reconsider, as the employee in question was "indispensable." "Discharge every indispensable man on the paper," was the reply; "I myself am not indispensable."

Hyphenated Americans, who, in the present war, attempted to intimidate the Herald out of its pro-ally policy, by threatening to withdraw their advertising, found themselves face to face with a man who was "constitutionally fearless." Mr. Bennett's reply in regard to the ads. was: "Take them all out; let them go to —— and be ——."

Though he is one of the biggest figures in the newspaper world to-day, Bennett seldom permits his name to appear in his own paper. Nevertheless, his editorials are well known for their sagacity, their breadth of vision, and occasionally their brilliant humor and sly irony. Some of the choicest of them are quoted in the present book.

H. M. Queen Mary, H. M. Queen Alexandra and H. R. H. the Duke of Connaught have been graciously pleased to accept copies of "The Flaming Sword," by Mrs. St. Clair Stobart (the Lady of the Black Horse.) "The Flaming Sword" is described as "an heroic tale—as noble and absorbing a story of fine work, finely done, as any that the war has produced."

When Robert Hichens was in Greece absorbing atmosphere for "In the Wilderness" (Briggs) at the beginning of the last Balkan war he was arrested on suspicion of being a Turkish spy, found guilty, and sent under guard to Athens, where he finally proved his identity and was set free.

Dr. Maria Montessori, the famous Italian educator, has been in the United States for about three months, and expects to remain for some time, instructing American teachers in her methods for children in the elementary schools. A new book, in two volumes, by Madam Montessori, will be published by Stokes this spring, "The Advanced Montessori Method."

THE STAGE

To Bayard Veiler, who established records with his "Within the Law," and who has this season produced "The Thirteenth Chair," at the Forty-eighth Street Theatre, New York which bids fair to eclipse the "Within the Law" record, the task of the playwright is not in knowing what it is that will make a play have a long run, but in so presenting that thing that the public recognizes it.

To put it more concretely, the play must deal with some big human emotion, and the problem which confronts the play's characters must be a problem that might well confront the play's audience collectively and individually.

"The best way I can answer your question so far as 'The Thirteenth Chair' is concerned," said Mr. Veiller, "would be to tell you that people come back to see the play or send others to see it for the exact same reason that a man, when he kicks a hat that is lying on the sidewalk, and finds there is something in it, goes back, turns it over and finds the brick some enterprising youngster has concealed beneath it. It is really a mixture of curiosity and surprise.

"In 'Within the Law' I sought to write up to the greatest of human emotions, revenge. If I had to give one lone reason for the success of the play I should say it was because I aroused that spirit of revenge in every audience that saw the play. They sympathized with Mary Turner, and they were with her and for her every minute of the time that she was striving to wreak vengeance on the man she blamed for her troubles.

"Please don't think, though, that I'm setting it forth as a short cut to success as a dramatist. It's quite all right to point out the thing you ought to do—it's quite another matter to do it."

"Eileen," a new romantic comic opera of Ireland in the period of 1798, of which Henry Blossom is the librettist and Victor Herbert the composer, will be presented by Joe Weber at the Shubert Theatre, New York. The story is of the vicissitudes of a young officer of an Irish brigade which fought with the French against the British in France, who returns to Ireland to raise more recruits and is captured, and is only saved from being shot by the order of general amnesty for all political prisoners. A company of more than one hundred people will be seen.

POETRY

THE FOG

Up from the heaving swamp of March
Still sheeting vale and hill
The thick white fog, the ghostly fog,
Arises damp and chill
It wraps the wood and laps the field
And folds the weather vane,
And hangs thick on every bush
Along the country lane.

A thing we see but cannot grasp,
It glides along the ground,
And hovers in the sunless air,
And all without a sound.
'Tis fitting from the lighthouse tower
The warning bell should toll,
For lo! this pale and clammy mist
Is winter's passing soul.

THE MOVIES

Rainbows, in natural colors, shot through the gray mist of Niagara Falls will be an exceptional feature included in the showing of Prizma pictures at New York in the near future.

These are some of the few rainbows ever to be caught and held by a color camera and will be the first of their kind that have been seen in New York.

The rainbow, which is due to refraction, reflection and dispersion of light in drops of water falling through the air, cannot, of course, be registered in black and white cinemetography. The Prizma natural color process, capable of exhibiting the spectrum colors in their order, has brought the iridescent rainbows of Niagara Falls, in addition to the majestic beauty of the falls itself, to the motion picture screen.

With only a few more months of his Mutual Film Co. contract to run, Charlie Chaplin is being approached and sought after by almost every big film manufacturer in the country. As the eccentric film star has placed a valuation of $1,000,000 upon his services for the next year, however, there is likely to be a considerable amount of negotiation before he affixes his signature to a new contract. His income for the present year, with a bonus given him by the Mutual concern, amounts to $670,000.

Inquiries revealed the fact that the Mutual is still desirous of retaining the services of Chaplin. Recently John R. Freuler, president of the company, made a trip to the coast, where he conferred with Chaplin regarding the renewal of his contract at an advance which would aggregate a revenue of close to a million dollars for the comedian. Several conferences took place, but no decided answer was given by Chaplin.

Adolph Zukor, head of the Famous Players and other film concerns, recently returned to New York from a trip to the coast, where, it is said, he also went for the purpose of consulting Chaplin. His idea, it is said, concerned the establishment of a special company to release films through the Artcraft. However it was learned that no final or definite arrangements have been entered into.

George Spoor, head of the Essanay Co., was also in California during the past month, and is said to have opened negotiations with the eccentric comedian. It is rumored that he offered Chaplin a flat salary of $750,000 a year with a percentage of the profits of the films manufactured. There were several other offers made to Chaplin by other manufacturers all with salaries said to be close to a million dollars. But it is understood Chaplin has a tentative agreement with the Mutual concern, whereby he will accept their offer, providing no better or more profitable proposition is made.

Chaplin, it is understood, has two more releases to make prior to his present contract expiring with the Mutual concern.

"Blank's wife fines him a dollar for every hour he stays away from home after office hours. I wonder why he stands for it." "He probably figures that it is cheaper than paying alimony."—Boston Transcript.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

PORT Hope Town Council is memorializing the Government to increase the limit of the poll-tax from $5 to $10.

THE Windsor Record advises girls to tie up the "man with the line," but the man with the 'dough' will still remain a warm favorite.

WHAT a lot of people there are who can arrive with lightning rapidity at the conclusion that something ought to be done.

IN the Walkerton papers this week we see where the town council has called for a meeting in the Town Hall to be conducted by the Ministerial Association. Such a service conducted by the council themselves would be more impressive.—Guelph Herald.

GUELPH Herald.—A wild steer broke loose in Toronto the other day, and before it was captured half the trees in the city were occupied by members of the police force. And yet this is the gang they are trying to coax to go out farming this year.

BY an amendment to the Municipal Act introduced by the member for North Bruce the County Council of any county may pass a by-law fixing the hour of meeting at 7.30 instead of 2 p. m. This will likely be done at the Dec. session of Bruce County Council.

THE seven multi-millionaires who control the manufacture of newsprint paper on the North American continent have been indicted under the Sherman Anti-trust law at New York. These men have advanced the price of newsprint to such an extent that many newspaper publishers in U. S. and Canada have been driven out of business.

THE Kaiser hasn't licked the world, but he has accomplished some wonderful feats. He has almost federated the British Empire; he has given the women of Great Britain the vote; he has brought about in Russia the most remarkable revolution in the history of the world; and it begins to look as if, over the job of putting him out of the way of doing harm, John Bull and Brother Jonathan may come to be real friends. The Lord sometimes uses queer instruments to work His Will. —Simcoe Reformer.

SOMEBODY was asking a week or two ago for a definition of "gall". Perhaps a concrete example will be more satisfactory. It is supplied by the Burks Falls Arrow: "A man wrote us last week, enclosing a 'little poem' describing the merits of certain articles for which he is agent, and asking us to publish it in the Arrow because it would interest our readers. He said he did not take the Arrow himself and he wanted us to send him a copy of our paper containg the aforesaid 'little poem'. He did not even enclose a one cent stamp, to pay the postage, much less the price of the paper".

DEPARTMENT STORES are making their advertising count more and more since the rural mail routes opened the way to the back concessions. Town merchants could get just as good results in proportion through their local newspapers if they would wake up and put some "pep" into their ads. A few good advertisers in every town write ads. that appeal, but there are too many that simply buy a bit of space in the local papers and let it go to weeds like a neglected garden. The town merchant who can afford to laugh at mail order competition nowadays is the man who is adopting modern business ideas and making the most of his local advertising opportunities. There is a big field for men of that stamp.

+ + +

A speaker at a farmers meeting recently expressed the opinion that the prosperity of the country town is just as important to the farmer and as much a part of his life and pleasure and comfort as good roads, telephone and rural mail delivery. On the basis of service alone the country town merchant can justify his place in society, but as long as he is rendering service to the farmers, fairness demands, said he that the merchant should be permitted to make his expenses and a reasonable profit. He thinks that the team spirit can be planted, grown and cultivated in a community as a farmer grows his corn and that making the most of one's neighbourhood means co-operation between the town and the farm, based upon a recognition of their common interests and dependence upon each other. "Not out of sympathy for the merchant" "but from pure selfishness from cold, hard business necessity, the farmer must save his town".

Council Passes Milk By-law

Chief Ferguson Appointed as Milk Inspector and Dr. A. G. Fortune as Sanitary Inspector—Milk Must Test 3.00 at Least.

The regular monthly meeting of the town council was held in the council chamber on Thursday evening. Those present were:—Mayor Johnston, and Councillors Russel, McKinnon, Sanderson, Vogan, McCarter and McGregor, and Clerk Collins.

The minutes of former meetings were read and adopted and the council adjourned to allow the several committees to prepare their reports.

The report of the finance committee included the recommending of the payment of the usual budget of accounts and asked that the request of the Ladies' Hospital Aid for a refund of $10.00 which was paid for the use of the Town Hall for the Ebony Lady Minstrels concert, be granted. The council adopted the report of the committee.

The Streets Committee had two communications to consider. Street Inspector Smith wrote the council asking for an increase in wages from 2?c an hour to 25c. an hour owing to the increased cost of living the committee considered Mr. Smith's request justifiable and granted him the increase. Mr. J. E. McGregor wrote asking permission to install a gasoline pump on Durham Street at his garage. This was also granted providing Mr. McGregor installs the apparatus in compliance with the provisions of the goverment regulations. The matter of oiling the streets this year was held over until next meeting.

The special committee composed of Councillors McGregor, McCarter and Timax, appointed to prepare and draft the proposed milk by-law submitted their report and the by-law was given its three readings and passed by the council, and will be submitted to the Minister of Agriculture for approval. Similar by-laws are already in force in many cities and towns. It makes regulations as to the care of the milk, health of the cows, food and water of the cows, sanitary condition of the stables, cleanliness and sterilizing of utensils such as milk cans, milk pumps, pails, cooling tanks, etc. The model by-law drafted by the committee placed the lowest percentage of butterfat to be in the milk sold in Walkerton at 3.25, but Reeve Russell considered this too high and objected stating that the local milkmen could not live up to that regulation throughout the year, and suggested that it be dropped to 3. Councillor Sanderson fell in with the Reeve and although the Mayor suggested that it be made 3.10, the council dropped it to 3.00 which is the lowest at which milk can be sold under the Provincial law. All vendors of milk, including those who deliver it in the small tin pail are liable under this by-law. The Council appointed Chief R. B. Ferguson as inspector of the milk to take the test when he deems necessary and to enforce the provisions of the by-law, and A. G. Fortune, V. S., inspector of the herds and stables where milk is obtained by the milk vendors. The penalty for any infringement of the by-law was placed at a fine of not more than $50.00 or less than $1.00.

Tax collector N. Crawford submitted a summary statement of his collections to date:—

Placed in bank	$25950 38
Poll taxes	165 00
Cash on hand	21 14
Taxes due	708 70
Uncollectable	530 62
Allowed off by council	63 15
	$27441 53

Included in uncollectable taxes are those of the Canada Saddlery amounting to $27.72, having a balance of [illegible].

A by-law was passed appointing Chief Ferguson an officer to enforce the provisions of the Ontario Temperance Act in Walkerton. Formerly any monies derived from fines for infringements of this Act, had to be paid over to the Provincial treasury but with the special officer now appointed these fines will in future be turned over to the town treasurer and used by the town.

Clerk Collins was instructed to write Hydro Commission asking them to proceed at once and secure estimates of the cost of Hydro power in Walkerton, so that the by-law could be put before the people at as early a date as possible.

Council adjourned at 10.10.

THE NEW FRANCHISE ACT

The Ontario Franchise Act is now in force. By it every woman over 21 years of age, every soldier of whatever age, and any other man over 21 years left off the Municipal list, will be prepared by a Board in each County or separated city, composed of five members as follows: 2 judges, Clerk of the County and Surrogate Courts, the Sheriff, and the Clerk of the County and Surrogate Courts, the Sheriff and Clerk of the Peace.

In Bruce County, the Board will consist of Judge Klein, Judge Greig, Dr. Clapp, Sheriff Jermyn and Thos. Dixon. This Board will name the registrars who will act as enumerators for each Municipality.

The new Act has nothing whatever to do with Municipal voters. If a man who has property is left off the Municipal list he will have only a Parliamentary vote if put on by the Registrar. Part 3 of the Municipal list will disappear. There will be only parts one and two of the Municipal lists: Part one for voters at Parliamentary and Municipal elections; part two for absentees who have votes at Municipal elections only. The lists printed in the local Municipalities will, in consequence, be much smaller than heretofore, as the names of no young men without property will appear thereon.

The only qualifications to be put on the list by the registrars is to be 21 and a British subject, excepting with soldiers who will be entered on the lists regardless of their ages.

The chairman of the Board of Five shall give public notice of the date on which registrars shall commence their work, and when completed he sends his lists to one of the board to be known as the Clerk of the Board, and he orders 200 copies to be printed, which are to be sent to the same parties as the present municipal lists are sent to, also a notice is to be inserted in some newspaper in or near the municipality that the lists have been prepared and one of the Board shall hold sittings in the municipalities for hearing appeals. The decision of this revising officer shall be final.

The entire cost of this list will be borne by the government, and, of course, these lists will be prepared only every four years or whenever a bye-election is held. The polling places will be arranged in every municipality to accommodate the larger vote, and this will have nothing to do with the municipal polling subdivisions which under the new Franchise Bill will not have to be changed

The Censor's Humor

The censor is not without a sense of humor surely. A soldier recently writing home to his people, describing how he had been buried alive for a couple of hours in a demolished dugout, but eventually was extricated by his comrades. He added, by way of consolation, "I had the satisfaction of sending five of the Germans to Hell." The Censor, in passing the letter had drawn a line through the sentence, but wrote underneath: "It is not permitted to refer to the whereabouts of the enemy."

Miss Jean Reddon of Walkerton spent the week-end with her parents Mr. and Mrs. James Reddon, Brownlee St.—Teeswater News.

Larger Heads—Ripened Earlier

A. NERDEN, Dorchester, Ontario, says:

"I used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on oats this Spring, leaving one drill width across the field unfertilized, and could see a difference of about a foot in the length of straw, and much larger heads. The grain on the fertilized part of the field ripened one week earlier than on the unfertilized part and was much better quality.

This was my first year using fertilizer and after getting such satisfactory results I intend using fertilizer again this coming Spring."

Larger, Stouter Oats

M. J. SCHLABACH, Petersburg, Ontario, says:—

"The Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer which I purchased from N. M. Steinman, at Baden, was used on my oats. The fertilized oats were all of from 4 to 5 inches higher than the unfertilized."

40 Bushels Wheat Per Acre

J. SERCOMBE, Thedford, Ontario, says:

"I am sending a photo of my wheat field as it was a very good crop. It yielded twenty-one loads of sheaves on nine acres and threshed forty bushels to the acre. We used 200 pound of Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer on it without other manure. If this photo is of any value to you you may use it and also my name."

The foundation is not the most important thing

True, you can't have a good barn without a good foundation but don't forget either that the roof has to stand most of the punishment. Upon it falls the burden of resisting the destructive influences of weather and changing seasons.

Now, the question is "Where am I going to find a roof which will meet these conditions?" Certainly not in wooden shingles which have rapidly deteriorated during the past few years. Not in anything so perishable as wood, nor yet iron, which lets in driving rain, but rather in a permanent mineral composition such as Brantford Roofing.

Now, let us look at a section of Brantford Roofing. First, you notice it has a pure, long-fibred felt base. This is thoroughly saturated with a filler coat of asphalt or mineral pitch. Then it is given another coat. Finally, the surface is thickly covered with crushed slate. You can imagine what a job rain, snow, fire or heat would have penetrating a roof like that. As for comparing

Brantford

Nature's Water-proofing Roofing

with shingles on the score of permanency, or protection, or appearance, or even economy, there is no comparison. You put a Brantford Roof on once, and it will last as long as the building; it will always look well and it will never need repairing.

Why not let us send you samples, also our illustrated booklet which explains how Brantford Roofing is "always on the job". Or if you will give us the dimensions of your barn or house roof we will gladly submit estimate without charge or obligation.

To Improve Party-Line Service

We suggest consideration for the persons who may be talking on your party-line. Do not interrupt their conversation. It is discourteous and unfair.

1. Answer only your own signal. If there is any confusion about the rings, report the fact promptly to the Chief Operator.
2. When you wish to call, remove the receiver and listen. If the line is in use hang up the receiver and wait until the conversation is finished.
3. Do not allow children or others to listen on the line when it is in use or to play with the telephone at any time.
4. Make your calls as brief as possible. Short conversations will keep the line open and make the service of most value to everyone.

The Overland Big Four—again improved and refined—is the car that built Overland.

This car for nine years has undergone steady development and refinement with the help and advice of an army of owners which now totals over three hundred thousand.

The unprecedented accumulated experience in building this type of car has taught us true balance as nothing else could—the value of right weight—the true tire, gasoline and oil economy—the utmost attainable riding comfort—the lines that truly express refinement and beauty.

The price is $1190 until May 1st—thereafter $1250.

The Light Six is the same model with changes conforming to approved six-cylinder construction and is likewise an excess value car at the price, $1380 until May 1st—thereafter $1435.

These cars represent a safe purchase at a very considerable saving on a basis of comparative values.

Our April deliveries are limited.

DIG!

If you have a plot of ground
Use for which you've never found,
Go ahead—
Take a spade, a rake, a hoe,
Purchase seeds with which to sow
In a bed.
Lay out squares or rows, or both,
Leaving lots of room for growth,
Plant your seed;
Lettuce, cress and potatoes,
Cabbages and tomatoes—
Things you need.
Add beets and carrots to the throng,
Radishes—you can't go wrong—
Use 'em all:
Cultivate and cut the weeds,
You will reap these little deeds
In the fall.
Water when the sun's strong rays,
Beating down on summer days,
Dry the ground.
Give attention, care, and then
Great will be your harvest when

April Rod and Gun

Rod and Gun for April is on the news-stands and its table of contents reveals much of interest to the devotee of rod and gun. Bonnycastle Dale writes in this issue of "Laddie the Boy Trapper." A. H. Haines contributes a story "The Big Buck of Bald Knolls," descriptive of a deer hunt under unusual circumstances in B. C. There are other tales of hunting, fishing and canoeing equally interesting to the lover of the out of doors. "Fishing Notes" edited by Robert Page Lincoln, is replete with up-to-date articles for the disciple of the Immortal Izaac while such well known writers as Lieut. Townsend Whelen and Chas. Askins contribute splendid articles to the Guns and Ammunition department of this issue. W. J. Taylor, Ltd., Woodstock, Ont., is the publisher.

Over in U. S. A.

Art Schuurr writes from Cleveland:—Nearly everyone you hear speak of the latest Allied Victory here, comments on the great tenacity of the Canadian soldiers at Vimy Ridge and a good many think the Canucks will be the outstanding heroes of this war. By the tone of the Canadian press, those old corner lots, and empty plots, should surely prove a source of production. It takes the Canadians to set the example for the Americans who are agitating the same course, and this week saw definite action here in the city along those lines, by the mercantile trade, making exhibitions in the store windows, relative to garden production, and a look at some of the displays would lead one to infer that three two-foot square yards adjacent to these houses around here were going to supply the tenants with a winter's consumption of food.

Dr. and Mrs. Hall attended the funeral at Chesley on Thursday of their niece, Miss Nellie Russ, a bright young lady, well-known in Walkerton, who died of peritonitis on the previous Saturday following an operation for appendicitis. She was a winner of the Carter Scholarship and had obtained her Senior Leaving at the last examination. Deep sympathy is felt for the bereaved family.

Fined Fifty Dollars

Samuel Palmer, postmaster at Dereboro, was fined $50 for writing a letter for a farmer named Schwartz, ordering a case of whiskey from Hull, P. Q. Schwartz cannot write, and the postmaster wrote the letter for him, and thus, innocently enough, became the agent for the booze dispensary. Mr. Palmer is a highly respected citizen and feels his position keenly. The fine will likely be remitted.

About Entertainment Notices

There are some very estimable people who cannot understand why a newspaper should not give free space to every entertainment which is held for patriotic, benevolent and religious purposes, and they are apt to think, even if they do not always say, very mean things when their requests have to be refused. This misconception is due to a very prevalent belief that newspaper space costs nothing, and to a failure to realize that advertising is the principal source of revenue to the publisher and there is no more reason why he should give away his goods, even for a worthy cause, than a hardware merchant or grocer. His space should be dealt with on a business basis and he should be left free to make his contributions in the form which he prefers, and not have others make them for him.

Real Travel Comfort

Spring is here, and Patrons of the Canadian Northern Railway will find renewed pleasure in the Compartment Library Observation cars on all its Transcontinental trains, which not only allow the Passenger to gain the full benefit of the wonderful scenery along the route, but also to take advantage of the many new comfort features which have created so much favorable comment among cross country travellers.

A magazine and Library bureau which contains the latest and most popular literature; writing desks with attractive stationery; a "Travellers' Shop" with a stock of articles the traveller is likely to forget or overlook in packing up for the trip such as collar buttons, shoe laces, etc., are a few instances, while tasty teas, and light refreshments may be obtained at very small cost.

Kincardine Comment

Last week's Kincardine Reporter had the following.—John Rowland and Otto Klein locked horns at the Bruce Preparedness League in Walkerton when the matter of recruiting for the 160th Battalion came up. Mr. Rowland wanted to know why some of the men who were officers in the 32nd Regiment had not been on the platform and assisted in recruiting. He was taking a slap at Major Tom Hay and Capt. Otto Klein. The day may come when these two officers will be able to open their lips and expose Tory manipulation which forced them aside. Rowland knows they dare not speak now, hence his nasty insinuation. Capt. Klein's quiet counter about bringing men from the front and getting them commissions must have stung a little. His son was Pte. Bobby Rowland in France. He left here Lieut. Robert Rowland.

If you cannot carry a rifle, you can serve your country on the farm.

"The plow is our hope," declared Right Hon. David Lloyd George, the Prime Minister of Great Britain. The tremendous significance of these words in the face of a world shortage of food must be a matter of concern to all. It points out the path of duty to men and boys unable to enlist in the army but capable of helping to increase production.

Help the farmer increase production

At this supreme hour when ample food production is one of the indispensable means of victory, the country faces a serious shortage of men and boys on the farms. The Department of Agriculture emphasizes the urgency of every man and boy taking to heart this splendid opportunity for patriotic service.

Boys Decide now to help in the war. If you are between the ages of 14 and 18, and have good term record, you can secure promotion at school by enlisting for farm service any time between April 20th and May 20th.

Parents are urged to encourage their boys to enlist for farm service. The physical and moral welfare of your boy will be advanced by a summer spent close to Nature; an interest will be awakened in an important industry of the country that will be a help to him in his whole future.

Men The Department appeals to retired farmers, to men following no occupation (retired), to business men who can spare at least a portion of their time, to all men who can arrange their affairs so as to help some farmer. Every man is invited to enlist for farm service.

UZZLING CASE

...s, it sounds ridiculous, I admit, ...t look at the facts of the case ... is a man who has invented a ... carnation, and has not let even ... out of his hands—at least so ... Mrs. Lanster. Well, Dallas as ... have found out from his valet, sent ... letter from Paris to Madame Mazzucata; that letter, as Gilbert proved, contained a black carnation. Now, in order to get that flower, Dallas must have gone to Maxwell, therefore Maxwell must know something about this ..."

"But Dallas might have stolen the flower."

"True, but that is what you have to find out, and it is as well to be on ... guard. Now, if Maxwell does ... to know anything about this ... which, going by the above ten... is not improbable if you ask ... out to see that black carnation, he will immediately become ... and say nothing. Whereas ... dexterous diplomacy, you ... the plant and find out all ..."

"... difficult thing to do."

"...ut I am sure you can do it. ... a detective, Maxwell may find ... [illegible] ... the plant, but you ... gentleman wishing to buy plants, ... therefore, Maxwell will be off his guard."

"But why should Maxwell be on his guard?"

"Because I feel sure he is mixed up in this matter."

"And why?"

"Why," echoed Tancred, with a significant smile, "why, my dear major, just think over all the evidence we have collected in connection with this case. Mazzucata herself said she had seen a black carnation long before Dallas sent her one. In fact, he sent her that particular flower, so to speak, on her own suggestion."

"Well?"

"Well," reiterated Tancred, impatiently, "don't you see that Mazzucata must have known Maxwell in order to have seen a black carnation?"

"That's true enough."

"Of course it is. I tell you what, major, I should not be surprised to find out that Dallas had nothing to do with the death at all."

"What, did he not send that black carnation from Paris?"

"Yes."

"And did he not buy a bouquet similar to that of Gilbert's on the sixteenth?"

"He did. I found that out from Phillis & Co. On the morning of the sixteenth Dallas went to Phillis & Co and asked if a bouquet was being made up for Mazzucata. They told him yes, and described the bouquet."

"Which they had no business to do."

"Of course they hadn't, but what can you expect from a parcel of chattering girls such as Mrs. Lanster employs. Well, Dallas had a bouquet made up all white flowers."

"With a black rose in the centre."

"No, all white. He put in the centre piece himself; not a black rose, but a Black Carnation."

"And changed the bouquets at the Hotel Europa."

"I think so; but at all events, he ordered the bouquet as I told you."

"And with all this you think Dallas is innocent," I asked, ironically.

"I can't say that for certain. We have an admirable case against him still——"

"Still what?"

"I wish to find out why Mazzucata knew that her death would be preceded by the appearance of a Black Carnation."

"And you think Maxwell knows?"

"My dear major, as Maxwell is the only man in possession of such an unique flower, it stands to reason that he must know."

"Well, I will try and find out all about that to-morrow," I said, clutching my sherry.

"Be very careful, major," said Tancred, rising to his feet and putting on his hat—"by the way, major, I am a bit of a prophet, and I prophesy you will see someone down at Lippleton, or hear that someone has been down there whom you little expect either to see or hear of."

"And this someone?"

"Guess."

"Dallas?"

"No."

"Ilma Celinski?"

"No."

"Then I can't think who it can be."

"What do you say to Signor Ivan?"

"The tenor! But why?"

"He handed Mazzucata the fatal bouquet. It was rather curious that such a bouquet should have been picked up by Signor Ivan from among so many bunches of flowers."

"Then you think——"

"I don't think anything for certain. However, wait till I hear your report and I will give my opinion."

"Regarding Signor Ivan?"

"Yes, and others. Look at the people mixed up in this affair, major—a list which is growing longer every day. Tressinger, Dallas, Ilma Celinski, Maxwell, and Ivan. Five of them."

"Which of the five do you think guilty?"

"I don't know. There may be a sixth for all I know."

"And that sixth?"

"Will doubtless be a woman."

CHAPTER VIII.

I was so much excited by my interview with Tancred that I had but little sleep that night. Truly, the mystery was assuming romantic proportions, for as soon as one problem was solved, another more difficult than the last presented itself. At first it had been hard to find anyone who had a motive in removing Madame Mazzucata, but now it seemed as though there were five people mixed up in the affair. Tressinger was innocent I knew, in spite of appearances being so much against him, and as to Dallas notwithstanding that Tancred had constructed such a subtle case, it appeared as though, owing to the discovery of Maxwell, he also was guiltless. Ilma Celinski I suspected myself, and Tancred seemed to regard Signor Ivan as a probable accomplice in the tragedy. Five people, against whom suspicion could be directed, and, in the words of the barrister, a possible sixth.

Certainly, it was no easy task from among this number to find the guilty person, but the solution of the whole mystery was doubtless to be found at Lippleton; so for that village I left next morning by the mid-day train.

In this difficult matter I was somewhat puzzled how to proceed, as, according to Tancred, the slightest hint of my true errand might arouse the suspicions of Simon Maxwell and spoil everything. But then I did not agree with the lawyer in his surmise about Maxwell being involved in the affair, as it was absolutely ridiculous to suppose that an obscure market gardener could be connected in any way with a world-famous prima-donna. True, Maxwell possessed the celebrated Black Carnation plant, but that did not argue that he himself sent a bud to Mazzucata, as he would have no reason for such a proceeding, and my theory was, that someone had stolen the flower for the purpose to which it was applied. Therefore, arguing in this way, Maxwell had nothing to do with the tragedy, and would not be in the least suspicious of my unexpected visit. Nevertheless, I determined to be careful and find out all I could about the unique plant, without mentioning either the black carnation or Mazzucata.

In due time, I arrived at Lippleton, which is a pretty rustic village, situated not far from Barrow, and had no difficulty in finding Maxwell, who seemed to be very well known in the neighborhood. Flower gardening is a graceful occupation, and should suggest graceful ideas, but apparently, this was not the case with Mr. Maxwell, as the exterior of his house had a most forbidding appearance. While of no great size, it was severely plain; and was built of white stone, with a black-painted door, which seemed like the entrance to an undertaker's establishment. No garden in front, no flower boxes in the windows; it faced the dusty road in aggressive ugliness, flanked by two pretty little houses on either side, which accentuated the black appearance of their starved looking neighbor.

"I suppose the garden is at the back," I murmured to myself, as I rang the bell. "It is to be hoped that it is more inviting than the front view. Judging by the house, Simon Maxwell, Florist, must be a singularly unpleasant person."

In answer to my summons, a neatly attired maid-servant appeared, who forthwith conducted me through a passage to a courtyard at the back of the house. Roofed with glass, it resembled a hot-house in temperature, and was filled with a profusion of tropical plants which bloomed radiantly in the moist air. The wall at the end of the courtyard was also glass half way up, that is, from the centre to the roof, and through this transparent screen I could see the gardens stretching far into the distance. The walks, laid out at right angles to one another, gave this scene a certain resemblance to a chess board, and here and there were long rows of greenhouses, their glass roofs glittering in the sun. At these, however, I cast but a casual glance, being fully occupied in admiring the wonderful beauty of the flowers growing under the glass dome of the courtyard. This latter was covered with a kind of green glaze, which produced a certain twilight effect, and on all sides, I saw masses of rainbow tints, while the odor of the flowers in the warm air was almost insupportable.

Unfortunately, I know nothing about flowers, my knowledge being confined to a few common specimens, such as a daisy, a marigold, a sunflower, therefore, I am unable to describe the plants in any correct fashion. However, remembering the object of my visit, I sought everywhere in vain for the black carnation, but that unique flower was conspicuous by its absence. It was the veiled odalisque of this botanical seraglio, and its jealous master doubtless, kept it under lock and key.

At this moment of my reflections, a man entered the greenhouse from the nursery garden, and it did not take me long to come to the conclusion that this was Simon Maxwell. I am no stickler for beauty in a man, provided his appearance is passable, but I must say, that Maxwell was the most perfect type of a Caliban, which it has ever been my fortune to see. Short in stature, crooked in figure, with a sullen heavy face and enormous hands and feet, he was more like a gorilla than a man; nor did his voice, language or demeanor prepossess me at all in his favor.

"Major Granby," he said, in a harsh tone, looking at my card which he held in his hairy paw. I cannot call it a hand. "Well, sir, and what can I do for you?"

"Mr. Maxwell, I presume?" I remarked, affably, deeming it wise to get into the good graces of this monster.

"Yes, what is it?"

"I wish to look at some flowers."

"They are all around you, sir. Is there any particular flower you wished to see?"

Upon my word, I felt inclined to ask for the black carnation, but such a proceeding would have been abrupt, so I came to the subject in a roundabout fashion, which I judged to be eminently diplomatic.

"The fact is, Mr. Maxwell, I am fond of unusual flowers and wish to procure some unique specimens."

"I can give you what you [illegible], sir, [illegible]," the [illegible] was [illegible], "but the prices will be large."

"Oh, that will be no bar to our dealings, I assure you."

When I made this last remark he smiled in a gratified manner, and, taking me around the courtyard, began pointing out the beauties of the various flowers, and explaining the peculiar excellence of each. To these explanations I listened attentively enough—at least to all appearances, for in reality I was closely examining the face of this strange individual. I flatter myself, and not without reason, that I am something of a physiognomist, but, to tell the truth, the countenance of this man puzzled me greatly. He had a harsh, set mouth, an obstinate chin, but his eyes were singularly beautiful, and at times gleamed with a soft expression, though at others they glittered like steel. His well formed head was badly poised on his shoulders, and his stumpy fingers ended in club-shaped nails, always a bad sign. While thus surveying him in a furtive fashion, I noticed that his eyes were blue and his hair dark, an association which is peculiarly Irish. The name Maxwell was distinctly Scotch, but the man himself I took to be Irish, a fact which I determined to make sure of. My reason for doing [illegible] a [illegible] one, nevertheless, strong enough for me to persist in finding out his nationality.

"You have certainly a wonderful show of flowers here, Mr. Maxwell," I said, artfully. "I have only seen one nursery garden as good as this."

"And where may that be, sir?" he demanded, curtly, not very pleased at the insinuation.

"In Ireland."

Maxwell shook his head.

"No, I know Ireland thoroughly, and never yet saw a show of blossoms equal to mine."

"Perhaps you are right," I answered, carelessly, "no Irishman was ever a gardener."

"You think so, sir?"

"I'm convinced of it."

"Then you don't call me a gardener, sir?"

"Oh, yes, I do; but then you are a Scotchman."

"No, sir," he answered, promptly, "I am Irish."

I inwardly rejoiced at having my belief thus confirmed, but with a view to obtain more information, continued carelessly.

"But the name Maxwell is Scotch."

"Aye, but the man Maxwell is Irish. It's this way, sir. My ancestors crossed from Scotland to the north of Ireland some hundred and fifty years ago, so I am Scotch by descent, but Irish by nationality."

"Oh, then I am correct in assuming that you are a Londonderry man?"

"Yes, from Omagh."

"Ah, the wearing of the green."

"No, sir, no," he replied, violently; "I am an Orangeman. My forbears were Presbyterians, and I am so also, [illegible] God shall continue so till I die."

"A fanatic," I thought, being now confirmed in my idea. "I wonder ——"

"But this is not to the point, sir," he said, hastily cutting short my meditations; "come with me and I'll show you some very rare flowers."

He opened the door which led into the grounds, and we passed out into the sunshine.

"You send a great many flowers into town, I suppose, Mr. Maxwell," I observed, as we strolled along the sandy path.

"A great many. Phillis & Co. are my best customers."

"So I believe. It was Phillis & Co that recommended you to me."

"They do a great business, sir, but not a pious one."

The strangeness of this observation struck me so forcibly that I stopped short in my walk and looked at him in amazement.

"A pious one," I reiterated, wondering what was his meaning.

"Aye, they make up flowers and wreaths for the opera."

"Well, why shouldn't they? It's not a sin."

"In my eyes it is a sin," he said, sternly. "I have a hatred of all such iniquitous doings, such as singing and dancing. Never would I send flowers to the opera from this place."

"Yet, you do so."

"I do business with Phillis & Co., so when I send flowers to them, my business ceases with delivery of the same. If they choose to make up flowers for singing women, it is none of my affair."

"You don't seem well disposed towards singers, Mr. Maxwell."

"I am not, and I have good reasons for it."

I made no comment on this last speech, though it did a great deal to confirm the suspicions I entertained when discovering his nationality.

"I am sorry to hear you have such a poor opinion of artistes, Mr. Maxwell. There are good and bad people in all professions."

"All those connected with the stage are bad."

"You speak rather wildly. Have you ever known any singers?"

Maxwell looked at me keenly for a few moments, then let his chin sink on his breast, with a heavy sigh.

"Aye. One or two."

"You shouldn't judge the whole profession by one or two samples."

"By the one, we know the many, Major Granby, sir," he answered, coldly. "I detest the whole pack of them, and will do no business with stage players of any kind."

"Well, I don't suppose they ever wish to do business with you."

"Don't they," retorted Maxwell, grimly. "Why, one was down here the other day—Signor Ivan."

"Signor Ivan!" I echoed, in amazement, as I thought of Tancred's suspicions. "The tenor now singing at Covent Garden?"

"I don't know where he is singing, sir. He came down here a week or so ago to select some flowers, but I refused to give him a single one."

"Did he steal any?"

"Steal any? I dare say he would have been quite capable of it, but, so far as I know, he did not."

"Not even a black carnation?"

It was imprudent, I know, to thus betray the purpose of my visit; but I was hardly prepared for the effect which my observation had on Maxwell. His face changed to a grayish pallor, his mouth closed like a vice, and his eyes glittered ominously.

"The Black Carnation," he repeated, slowly, with suppressed savagery. "May I ask, sir, what you know about the Black Carnation?"

"Nothing more than I have learned from the papers."

"What have the papers to say about it?"

"Have you not read the account of Mazzucata's murder."

"I never read the papers," said Maxwell, in a hard tone. "When I require reading, I open my Bible, and neither know nor care to know, what iniquity is being practised in London."

"Mazzucata," I explained, keeping my eyes intently fastened on his face, "was a prima-donna at the opera, who was killed on the night of the sixteenth of May, by the explosion of a dynamite cartridge hidden in a bouquet."

"Is that so?" replied Maxwell, indifferently. "The ways of iniquity are hard. But why do you tell me this?"

"Because in the fatal bouquet there was a Black Carnation."

"Impossible. I alone possess that plant; and I have never yet sold or given away a flower."

"Nevertheless, such is the case."

"I tell you such cannot be the case. I have invented and grown this flower. The bud in that bouquet must have been dyed."

"No, it was not dyed. It was a real flower, for I saw it myself."

"Are you sure?"

"Perfectly sure."

Lesson IV. April 22, 1917.

Jesus Anointed at Bethany.—John 12: 1-11.

Commentary.—I. Mary's expression of devotion (vs. 1-3). 1. Six days before the passover—It is probable that Jesus and his disciples reached Bethany on Friday evening. The Passover commemorated the departure of the Israelites from Egypt, the place of their enslavement, and the nation was commanded to observe the feast of the Passover year by year. All the males of Israel were expected to be present at Jerusalem on this occasion, and many women came of choice to the feast; hence great crowds of visitors were present in the city at the time of the feast. Bethany—This village was situated on the eastern slope of the Mount of Olives, about two miles east of Jerusalem. Where Lazarus was—The account of the raising of Lazarus from the dead is given in John 11: 1-46. It had been one or two months since Jesus performed this miracle when he came to the place again. 2. There they made him a supper—From Matt. 26: 6 and Mark 14: 3 we learn that the feast was given in the home of "Simon the leper." It is reasonable to suppose that Jesus had healed him of his leprosy; however, the name still clung to him. Attempts have been made to trace some sort of kinship between Lazarus and his sisters and Simon, but there is no definite basis for the opinions that have been expressed. The fact that "Martha served" shows a friendly relation between the two families. Jesus had often been in the home of Martha, Mary and Lazarus. Lazarus is mentioned because of the great interest centering in him on account of his having been raised from the dead. Sat at the table—The manner of sitting at the table at meals there was very different from our customs. There were low couches upon which persons reclined with their heads toward the table. 3. Mary—The sister of Lazarus. Her devotion to Jesus was great (Luke 10. 39, 42. A pound—An amount equal to about twelve ounces. Ointment of spikenard—This was a fragrant and costly perfume procured from the spikenard plant that grows in India. Very costly—In Mark 14: 5 and in v. 5 its value is given. It is about one-third as costly as the attar of roses. Anointed the feet of Jesus—Matthew and Mark speak of Mary's anointing of Jesus's head, but do not mention the anointing of his feet. She anointed both his head and his feet, thus showing the highest devotion to him. This rare devotion was emphasized by her wiping his feet with her hair. The Oriental custom of reclining at meals with the head toward the table gave free access to the feet, which were bare, as the sandals were left outside the house. House was filled with the odor—The ointment was contained in a vessel made of alabaster, a semi-transparent stone, found in abundance in parts of Egypt. She broke the box, and as the ointment was poured forth its fragrance filled the place where the feast was held. The fragrance of that act of devotion was not confined to that house in Bethany. It has gone far beyond those walls and it still being wafted through the preaching of the gospel, to all the world.

II. Her act criticised (vs. 4-6). 4. One of his disciples, Judas Iscariot was the spokesman, and was, in reality, the one most responsible for the criticism, yet some of the disciples (Mark 14: 4) "had indignation" (Matt. 26: 8). Which should betray him—Directly after this feast Judas began to bargain with the chief priests with regard to betraying Jesus. 5. Why—Judas could see no virtue or merit in Mary's act of devotion. His spiritual vision was clouded with avarice. He represents a great multitude today who can see only loss and folly in making sacrifice of time and money to carry the gospel to the degraded in every land. They examine every act from the spiritual values. In Judas' estimation Mary's use of the costly ointment was merely wasteful. Three hundred pence—Three hundred denarii would constitute the ordinary wages for three hundred days' work, or almost a year. The denarius was a Roman silver coin equivalent to about fifteen cents. In purchasing power the three hundred pence would be equal to that of three hundred dollars at the present time. Given to the poor—To give to the poor is a worthy act, but Judas was trying to mask his greed with a suggestion of benevolence. He would have been glad of the privilege of handling the value of the ointment. 6. Not that he cared for the poor—Judas knew how Jesus regarded the poor and would relieve them, and hypocritically expressed his interest in them, but this verse tears off the mask and shows him in his selfishness. He was a thief—We may suppose that it was because of his business turn of mind that Judas was appointed to have charge of the money of this devoted company. His greed got the better of him, and John does not hesitate to brand him as a thief. Had the bag—He was the treasurer. The margin of the Revised Version has "box" instead of "bag." Bare what was put therein—"Took away what was put therein" R. V. It is remarkable that two such characters as Mary and Judas should be connected with the anointing of Jesus for his burial. Mary's devotion to the Master led her to believe that no sacrifice was too great for her to make for him. The avarice of Judas led him to think that nothing was too sacred for him to violate, if only he could get personal gain. His course was a prophecy of his act of betraying Christ for money. Only a basely selfish and wicked person could look upon Mary's sacrifice with disfavor. Judas may have fancied that it was his superior financial insight that called her sacrifice a mere waste, but it was his greed that prompted his criticism.

III. Jesus' approval of her act (vs. 7, 8). 7. Let her alone—Jesus would not have her deed criticised. He came to her defence against those who were disposed to find fault with her, and he gave his approval to her act for all time. Against the day of my burying—Jesus knew what Mary did not, that his death was close at hand. He regarded her act as an anointing for burial. Some think she had an impression that this was her last opportunity to show her devotion for him. 8. For the poor always ye have with you—There was no waste at all, no waste as regards the poor, for there were abundant opportunities to help them; no waste as regards the disciples, for they could help the poor at any time, no waste as regards the woman, for this deed would be told as a memorial of her; no waste as regards the Lord, for he was pleased to regard it as a burial gift." The poor will form a greater or less part of the world until the end of time. Jesus did not in this remark discourage in any sense charity toward the needy. The Lord has special regard for the poor and places the duty of helping them upon those who are able. Me ye have not always—His death was but a few days off, and within forty-eight days he was to ascend to his Father. Mary had improved her opportunity, and there was no ground for Judas' complaint. Matthew's words are expressive, "She has wrought a good work upon me" (26: 10), and Mark's are wonderful, "She hath done what she could" (14: 8). This is a remarkable tribute to be paid by any one. There are too many who content themselves with doing practically nothing for the Lord. They think they can do little, and do not put forth an effort to do their best.

IV. Interest in Lazarus (vs. 9-11). 9. Much people—"The common people." R. V. They came—The works wrought by Jesus had made a profound impression upon the common people, and many were ready to believe in him. They came to him because of their high regard for him, and not wholly out of curiosity, but that they might see Lazarus also. An additional reason why they came was to see the man whom Jesus had raised from the dead a few months before this. 10. The chief priests—While the common people were eager to see Jesus and Lazarus, the high officials of the Jews desired to put them both to death. They would accomplish the death of Jesus to save the Jewish system from crumbling to pieces, for they reasoned that if this new leader should be slain, his teachings would find no followers. They wished to put Lazarus to death to prevent the people from believing in him who had raised him from the dead. 11. By reason of him—Lazarus, alive from the dead, was a powerful testimony to the Messiahship of Jesus, and this testimony could not be ignored or refuted.

Questions.—Name some of the parables spoken by our Lord after Lazarus was raised from the dead. What did the feast of the Passover commemorate? Where is Bethany? What took place at the feast in Simon's house? On what ground was Mary's act criticised? How did Jesus regard her act? Why did many Jews come to the place where Jesus was? What did the chief priests consult to do? Why were they disposed to put Lazarus to death?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Love Vindicated.

I. By an everlasting memorial.

II. By an exposure of hypocrisy.

I. By an everlasting memorial. The miracle of Bethany had stirred Jerusalem. The restoration to life of Lazarus was Christ's immediate and undeniable work. He was a living monument of a most benevolent and divine power, the power of Jesus of Nazareth. Attention was fixed upon him because of what Jesus had done for him. In connection with Jesus, Lazarus had become intolerable. The determination to murder Jesus led to the determination to murder Lazarus. The chief priests would rather consent to murder than confess themselves in the wrong or endure the loss of position or power. The miracle which led many to believe in Jesus led the authorities to hate and oppose him. They revealed the power of the human heart to become utterly blinded to truth. While hostility and bitter opposition from the leaders of the nation increased daily, the devotion of Jesus' friends was more manifest. The feast of Bethany was their answer to the edict of the authorities at Jerusalem concerning Jesus. Mary was determined that Jesus should taste the sweets of human kindness and, as if inspired with the thought that it might be her last opportunity, with a noble impulse she poured out her choicest gift at his feet. Because her whole soul was in the deed, money value had nothing to do with it. To Jesus she was indebted for many precious lessons in spiritual knowledge and for a brother restored to life. Her act was an expression of profound gratitude and personal esteem for the life and character of Jesus. Her offering was too excellent in quality, too costly in value, too great in quantity to satisfy the loving impulse of Mary's heart. It was not in vain that she had sat at Jesus' feet, and heard his words of wisdom, comfort and guidance. She knew that he was the Christ, the Saviour of the world. Jesus rejoiced over a love which had antedated its purpose and given to the living Lord what had been intended for his burial.

II. By an exposure of hypocrisy. While the house was filled with the odor of the ointment, a murmur of dissatisfaction arose. It came from the lips of Judas, the traitor. His self-seeking heart turned a joyous feast into an hour of temptation, and the perfect love-offering into an offence. He was blind to the moral loveliness of Mary's action. He had a false estimate of values. He was hypocritical in philanthropy. He ventured a heartless intrusion upon the devotions of a pious soul. His avarice, his jealousy, and, worse than all, his mask so readily assumed, of zeal for the cause of the poor, proved him ready for Satan's last temptation to confer with the chief priests for the betrayal of his Master. Judas would have had Mary entrust the value of her offering to his keeping. Its value in the market gave to the spikenard its only worth in his eyes. His protest was dictated in no degree by a genuine regard for the poor. It was most selfish and insincere, yet he ventured to make it with a confidence of being justified in the eyes of the Master. There was in him an utter incapacity to appreciate the grandeur of true piety. A false motive prompted his remonstrance. Mary's act of love opened and revealed his character. Instead of directly rebuking Judas, Jesus vindicated Mary. He distinguished at once between love and avarice, between worldly wisdom and genuine devotion, between godlessness, spontaneous, open conduct and pretended charity. Jesus not only vindicated Mary's devotion, but explained its meaning. Mary had provided for the honor of the dead. Judas made himself the instrument to bring about his death. Mary's act was acceptable to Christ as revealing a love over which death had no power. He recognized it as a noble act, a virtual consecration of himself to a divine work involving death, a befitting preparation for his burial. It was with a contrite and renewed heart that Mary poured her precious ointment on the feet of her Lord, in love's generous and original way, while Judas evidenced his unchanged nature regardless of companionship with Jesus and the unsuspecting disciples. Mary was sustained by divine love. Judas became the companion of murderers. Her record inspires to worship, while the record of Judas provides warning. T.R.A.

Food Conditions In Germany Described

An English family just exchanged out of Germany and now in London has given the New York Sun an account of the actual food conditions in Germany.

"It was impossible for us to remain longer," said the head of the family, "because the problem of living long ago passed the point where it was a matter of having the money to buy food with. Money will not buy necessaries now. We have for months past been going hungry much of the time, we never were plentifully fed.

"You have heard of the care with which people must break a long fast in order to avoid overtaxing digestive systems utterly disarranged. Well when we reached Holland and found ourselves able to get plenty of meat, gravies, all the butter we wanted, pastries, in short the variety of foods we had long craved, we discovered that we dare not indulge ourselves. At first our weakened stomachs revolted at the sight and smell of unaccustomed food, and when by strictly limiting our indulgence we began to recover normal appetites a very little would overtax digestive capacity.

"The munition factories in Germany take just about all the butter and other fats to make explosives; the people get almost none. Sugar also goes to the factories, where the glycerine is taken from it for explosives. So we had almost forgotten what those staples were like. In these Government works they discovered when the era of restriction was entered that the workers simply could not live with the supplies of these articles with which they had to work and be denied the use of them. It became a feast of Tantalus, plenty flaunted before the eye but denied to the palate. The men could not work under such conditions. At first there were rigid orders they must do so; but the time came when it was necessary to allow these workers to consume as regular rations all the sugar and fats they wanted.

"As to our family, none of us was compelled to perform heavy work, so that the draft on our powers was small. It was possible for us to live on far less than active working people would require. Yet because we had money to buy we were far better fed than most of the people in Hamburg, and Hamburg was one of the most generously supplied cities in the country from the beginning. The restrictions now in force were not applied there till long after they were in effect elsewhere.

"Thus you can understand the strain that is being inexorably applied to the mass of the German people. Their power to exert themselves is breaking down. In the last few months it has been going very fast. People underfed, under weight, ill nourished, lose their physical strength, and with it their [illegible]. With that goes their power to resist the encroachments of disease. Germany is on the brink of a new era in which physical deterioration of the nation back of the fighting line will prove an adverse factor in the war. The blockade is tightening all the time. The neighboring neutrals are now able to spare almost nothing to Germany, no matter what prices were offered."

"But," was suggested, "it has been reported that great quantities of food were captured when Roumania was overrun and that the situation in Germany was thus greatly relieved."

This was greeted with derision. "Well, we didn't see any of the Roumanian food," was the answer. "We didn't see or hear of anybody who got any of it. The food restrictions have been more severe since the Roumanian campaign than they were before. The truth, as nearly as we can judge it, is that the Roumanian campaign cost Germany more than it was worth. Almost all the country's supplies were destroyed before the invaders could get their hands on them. In a military way that campaign was brilliantly successful; but it failed utterly to produce the supplies that Germany needed and hoped to obtain.

"Hamburg is one of the great fish markets of the world, and the fish supplies were not interrupted for a long time. If we couldn't have meat, fish would do. But last October, when the [illegible] rapidly [illegible] Hamburg; the entire supply was [illegible]. The Government was commandeering the supply [illegible] to Berlin to be tinned and stored away for the future. That was one of the hardest blows of all.

"After October we had chiefly [illegible] turnips, [illegible] and cabbage to eat. The supply of potatoes early began to be cut down, and then that of cabbage was reduced. People used to tell [illegible] it would be possible to live on fried potatoes and a little bread. But how could you fry potatoes when there was nothing to fry them in? And there was no grease to be had.

"The poorer people in the cities and towns are fed at municipal kitchens, everybody getting his portion for the proper coupons from his food ticket. For the greater part, their food consists of these various things cooked up into a soup. There is bitter complaint, and it is true that there have been food riots in Hamburg and many other places.

"One of the things that contributes to maintain the docility and patience of the people—and they are wonderfully patient—is the belief that people in England are suffering just as much for food, or even more. Misery loves company, and England being the enemy most hated, there is intense satisfaction in tightening the belt as long as it is supposed that England is still more hungry. The Government permits absolutely no publications about conditions in England except those which represent conditions as thoroughly bad. If the German people knew the truth about England, knew the plenty and the comparative cheapness that rule here, it would do more than a great military defeat to break down the morale of the nation.

"English newspapers, despite all this, are being brought into Germany and their sale is permitted. But people in Germany do not believe anything they see in the English papers. 'All lies,' they say. The hatred of England is holding the nation up in the dark now. The people vaguely wonder why, having been so long told that the war is won, the authorities don't stop the fighting and resume industry and peace. But now the people are nerved for another effort, because they have been told that the Kaiser offered peace and England would not let her allies accept.

"Yet there is one country the Germans hate worse than England; that is America. I could not give you an adequate idea of how intensely the Germans hate the United States. They believe it is American food, munitions, money, more than the resources and armies of the Entente that are keeping the war going. Everywhere is the burning wish to crush England, and then to find excuse to turn and punish America.

"Of course the people on the land are best fed; they hold back supplies for their own needs, in spite of all efforts at regulation. The munitions workers are also well fed. But the soldiers who come home on leave tell bitter stories of being underfed, and their physical weakness and thinness prove their stories. There is resentment because the officers are better fed than the men.

"This year will see desperate efforts to increase food production; but no matter how much land is brought under cultivation, the lack of manures, of commercial fertilizers, of horses and seeds, will make it impossible to save the situation. Smuggling through the neutral countries is about ended. Hoards are exhausted. Shops are almost empty. If the country gets through until the new crops are available, these crops, for the first time since the war began, will be the sole reliance of the country for a full year. It cannot possibly be enough. If the armies of the Entente Allies do not win this year, their blockade will win next year. That cannot be seriously doubted by one who knows the truth about Germany from the inside."

SUNDAY AT HOME

LIFE'S MIRROR.

There are loyal hearts, there are spirits brave,
There are souls that are pure and true;
Then give the world the best you have,
And the best shall come back to you.

Give love, and love to your heart will flow,
A strength in your utmost need;
Have faith, and a score of hearts will show
Their faith in your word and deed.

Give truth, and your gift will be paid in kind,
And honor will honor meet;
And a smile that is sweet will surely find
A smile that is just as sweet.

For life is a mirror for king and slave,
'Tis just what you are and do;
Then give to the world the best you have,
And the best will come back to you.

WE SHALL SEE HIM AS HE IS.

As many as received him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on his name. Whereby are given unto us exceeding great and precious promises: that by these ye might be partakers of the divine nature, having escaped the corruption that is in the world through lust.

Since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.

Now we see through a glass, darkly; but then face to face; now I know in part; but then shall I know even as also I am known. Christ . . . shall change our vile body, that it may be fashioned like unto his glorious body, according to the working whereby he is able even to subdue all things unto himself. As for me, I will behold thy face in righteousness: I shall be satisfied, when I awake, with thy likeness.

HARVEST OF JOY.

Human life is a voyage, and voyaging brings the unexpected. There are some things we never pray for, and they are unwelcome when they come; and yet they come freighted with good and they really multiply joy. O, the good that comes from sorrow, the sunshine born of tears, the harvests gathered from broken hearts! "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning."

Storms scatter and break in pieces, but they give occasion to bind and hold fast, and build. Come, let us walk in the wreck-strewn shore. The splinters, the outdrift, the spars, and cabin furniture, and broken children's toys from passenger ships. How can we count the tears, touch the fountain, ask why? What are tears? They are condensed agony, vitalized, crystallized essence of the heart. They are not water, they are jewels, treasures, living stones, stones to build with. Oh, palaces made of tears, [illegible], too! That God may see through them, dwell in them, and discern them. Think of the formative power of tears; they are parents. They raise beautiful children, verses, songs, echoes, alleluias, think of the food fruits, flowers, flavors, on the tables in the palaces of personality.

But for tears, I should never have tasted [illegible] for tears. I should [illegible] my Master's face, but for tears. I should never have had work for my hands to wipe them away. I did not wipe away; they did not go into vapor, they came back to me, heart treasures, rewards, more precious than earthly things. "Oh, ye tears, I am thankful that ye flow!" Tears of sympathy, sorrow, loss, darkness, desolation, but wait.

Time is for sorrowing, eternity for rejoicing. Ah, those return voyages of ships heavy laden, rewards, rewards! "With what measure ye mete, it shall be measured to you again." New Testament measure, pressed down, running over, shall men measure to you again. Here on earth, into your bosom. A crop of sin, of tears, tears that generated life, evoked sympathy, attracted the study of angels. How they explore the islands of the soul, how they go up the rivers to the fountain head and then pause, and ponder, and praise, and prostrate themselves in utter bewilderment of adoration.

BRONCHITIS WAS SO BAD

Coughed Every Few Minutes.

DR. WOOD'S NORWAY PINE SYRUP CURED HER.

Bronchitis starts with a short, painful, dry cough, accompanied with some wheezing, and a feeling of oppressive tightness through the chest. At first the expectoration is of a light color but as the trouble progresses the phlegm arising from the bronchial tubes becomes of a yellowish or greenish color, and is very often of a stringy nature.

Bronchitis should never be neglected. If it is some serious lung trouble will undoubtedly follow.

Get rid of it by using Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. This well known remedy has been on the market for the past 25 years.

It cures where others fail.

Mrs. Geo. Lotton, Uxbridge, Ont., writes:—"I have had bronchitis so bad I could not lie down at night; and had to cough every few minutes to get my breath. I had a doctor out to see me, but his medicine seemed to do me no good. I sent to the druggist for some good cough mixture, and got Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. One bottle helped me wonderfully. I stopped coughing, and could lie down, and rest well at night. I cannot praise it too much."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; 3 pine trees the trade mark; price 25c and 50c.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—While a majority of wholesalers report increases in turnover, this is due not to larger sales of goods but rather to enhanced prices. A number of retailers, including some department stores, have notified dry goods wholesalers that they do not care to book large orders at the high prices, but prefer to bring out some of the stock purchased at the lower levels. Collections are quite good. Dry goods firms are experiencing difficulty in getting deliveries of sheetings and flannelettes from the mills. Hardware lines are fairly active. Wholesalers are very busy shipping out their spring orders, which on the whole are vastly ahead of last year. Groceries are moderately active. The leather market is rather quiet, but prices are firm.

Montreal—Spring trade is showing a gradual improvement. City retail trade is firm and collections are improving with comparatively few failures. A fair volume of spring orders is reported by dry goods houses. The steel market is firmer, in sympathy with higher prices in American markets. Leather is quiet at firm prices.

Ottawa—The spring trade movement is gathering speed in wholesale circles, with liberal shipments. The grocery trade is moderately active. Hardware lines are moving out well, with large orders coming in from wholesalers for spring trade. Collections are fair to good.

Hamilton—Spring business is showing steady improvement, and retailers have taken liberal consignments of goods. Trade is broadening out with the coming of milder weather, and dry goods lines especially are showing a lively movement of spring goods. Hardware wholesalers are busy completing their spring shipments, which they declare are larger than those of last year, and a good retail business during the next two months is fairly well assured. Groceries are moderately active. The sugar market has seen some good buying recently, with a 20-cent advance on Canadian refined at midweek, following a similar advance at the close of last week, and the refiners' position is still a strong one, with the likelihood that raws will advance still further according to crop reports. Collections are quite good, with country payments showing a slight falling off, as many roads are in bad shape.

London—Wholesale trade is moderate, with most houses completing their spring shipments. Collections are good, and indications throughout Western Ontario are for an active spring trade.

Winnipeg—Retailers are preparing to meet an active enquiry for spring merchandise, and in spite of high prices orders are very satisfactory. Dry goods lines are showing activity, and wholesalers are still shipping out their spring orders. A firming of prices has been noted in hardware lines, especially in iron and brass their goods. The grocery trade is active, with advances in sugar and continued firmness in canned goods and dried fruits. The harness trade is quiet, but leather prices generally are firm on an inactive market. The spring movement of boots and shoes is fair. Business prospects for the coming months are good, and collections are well up to normal.

Vancouver—Prospects for a healthy business during the spring months are encouraging to retailers. Collections have shown improvement recently.

All things have their compensations. The beauty about being a failure is that you have plenty of company.

COULD NOT SWEEP BACK WAS SO SORE.

Women are coming to understand that weak, lame and aching backs from which they suffer so much excruciating pain and agony are due to wrong action of the kidneys.

On the first sign of any weakness in the back Doan's Kidney Pills should be taken.

Mrs. J. Goudaw, 683 Manning Ave., Toronto, Ont., writes:—"I take great pleasure in writing you, stating the benefit I have received by using Doan's Kidney Pills. About three years ago I was terribly afflicted with lame back, and was so bad I could not even sweep the floor. I was advised to use Doan's Kidney Pills, and before I had used one box there was a great improvement, and my back was completely cured. I highly recommend 'Doan's' for lame back."

Doan's Kidney Pills are put up in an oblong grey box, the trade-mark is a Maple Leaf, accept no other.

FARM AND GARDEN

WAR ON WEEDS

(Co-operative Experiments in Weed Eradication, 1917.)

These co-operative experiments have now been conducted for five successive years. The object of this work is to have carried on by men on their own farms experiments in the eradication of weeds, the results of which will furnish data from which definite statements may be made regarding the best methods of controlling the various injurious weeds. Each year early in the spring circulars are sent out inviting men who have any of the weeds included in the list of experiments on their farms to co-operate in the work. Those who sign the application forms for any of the weed experiments are furnished with detailed information concerning the carrying out of the work, and late in the fall they are supplied with blank forms on which to report the results.

Seven experiments in all have been tried, viz., 1. The use of rape in the destruction of Perennial Sow Thistle. 2. A system of intensive cropping and cultivation for the eradication of Perennial Sow Thistle. 3. The use of rape in the eradication of Twitch Grass. 4. A method of cultivation and cropping for the destruction of Twitch Grass. 5. Spraying with iron sulphate to destroy mustard in cereal crops. 6. A method of cultivation for the destruction of Ox-Eye Daisy. 7. A method for the eradication of Bladder Campion or Cow Bell.

These experiments have been carried on for five successive years in many parts of the Province, on various types of soil and under different climatic conditions. The results therefore should be a safe index for the whole Province. They may be briefly summarized as follows:

First, that good cultivation followed by rape sown in drills provides a means of eradicating both Perennial Sow Thistle and Twitch Grass; second, that rape is a more satisfactory crop to use in the destruction of Twitch Grass and Perennial Sow Thistle when sown in drills and culticast; fourth, that through deep cultivation in fall and spring followed by a well cared for hoed crop will destroy Bladder Campion; fifth, that mustard vated than it does when sown broadmay be prevented from seeding in oats, wheat and barley by spraying with a twenty per cent. solution of iron sulphate without any serious injury to the growing crop or to fresh seedlings of clover.

Points of interest brought out by the experiments in spraying with iron sulphate to destroy mustard were:

1. The necessity of spraying early, just when the plants are coming into bloom. If the spraying is left too late, the older plants will not be destroyed by the solution, and will form seed, and hence the experiment will not be entirely satisfactory.

2. To spray thoroughly, with a good pressure. In order to spray thoroughly with an ordinary broadcast attachment, it is necessary to keep the horses walking very slowly. If an attempt is made to cover the ground quickly some of the plants will be missed and the results will not be entirely satisfactory.

3. In regard to the cost of spraying with iron sulphate it was found that the cost of material per acre varied from $1.10 to $2.40. Iron Sulphate has advanced in price from $1 to $2 per cwt., so that it now costs from $2.50 to $3.50 per acre for material to spray mustard.

These co-operative experiments in weed eradication will be continued this year (1917), and it is hoped that a large number of men will take part in them in order that sufficient information may be gathered to warrant definite statements being made in regard to the best methods of controlling these pernicious weeds. The experiments for 1917 are as follows:

1. The use of rape in the destruction of Perennial Sow Thistle.
2. A system of intensive cropping and cultivation, using Winter Rye, followed by turnips, rape or buckwheat, for eradicating Perennial Sow Thistle.
3. The use of rape in the destruction of twitch grass.
4. A method of cultivation and cropping for the destruction of twitch grass.

LEY.

(Experimental Farm Note.)

This six-row barley is a selection made several years ago by the Dominion Cerealist from the old, commercial sort, Mensury, which has been favorably known in Canada for a long time and has been successfully grown in very many districts.

As the tests in regard to yield are still in progress, final conclusions cannot yet be drawn; but it may be stated that the new selection appears to be, for many sections of this country, the most productive barley known, among those sorts which have fairly satisfactory straw. The straw of this barley is of good length and strength, as compared with other popular six-row sorts; but it should be emphasized that even the best barleys have a tendency to lodge when sown on rich soil, in seasons when moisture is plentiful. The heads of this variety are exceptionally long and heavy, and herein, perhaps, lies the secret of its large yield. In very high winds it does not behave quite so well as some of the other sorts, as it shows a tendency for the heads to break off at the base, and for the kernels to thresh out on the ground. However, these objections, though worth considering in wind-swept prairie districts, are of no importance in most localities.

The foliage is good, and the plants are not particularly liable to attacks of rust. They will withstand a reasonable amount of drought and will grow well on a great variety of soils. It should be remembered, however, that, as a rule, barley does not succeed on soils which are badly in need of lime. While it is early in ripening—like nearly all barleys of this class—it does not mature exceptionally early, being perhaps a trifle later than the average.

The awns of this barley adhere somewhat firmly, so that, for best results, it should be in thoroughly dry condition when threshed. The grain is of a very good yellowish color, and quite free from the objectionable greenish or bluish shade which lessens the value of some barleys for exhibition purposes.

Considering all its characteristics, Manchurian Ottawa 50 is recommended by the Dominion Cerealist as the best variety of six-row barley for nearly all parts of Canada, except those districts where destructive winds are to be feared about harvest time.

NOTES.

The Pennsylvania Experiment Station has obtained excellent results in feeding hogs with a grain mixture of oatmeal, 4 parts; wheat middling, 3 parts, and tankage, 1 part. The addition of skim milk is fed with this grain mixture the amount of cornmeal may be increased to 6 parts. Other mixtures recommended are cornmeal, 8 parts, and tankage, 1 part. If possible, pasture crops should be used for growing pigs. For quick growth, 2 to 4 pounds of grain per 100 pounds of live weight daily in addition to pasture crops are required.

A forestry expert makes this suggestion: In going through your wood lot, cut the poor trees, the decaying and crooked ones, instead of the best ones. Do not take out the clover and leave the thistles.

Milk exposed to bad air or placed in unclean vessels absorbs [illegible] bad flavors and collects bacteria or germs.

MEXICAN NATIVE LIFE.

Picture of Richest of the South-Central States.

A striking picture of native life in Guanajuato, the treasure chest of mercurial Mexico, is given in a communication to the National Geographic Society by Frank H. Probert. Mr. Probert reveals the Mexican peons as they are known only to the American who has lived among them.

"Leaving the walled inclosure of the railroad yards," says the writer, "one looks down on the apparently cramped and crowded city of Guanajuato, capital of the richest of the south central states of Mexico. Hard by, to the right is the bull-ring, the scene on Sundays and fiestas of farcical combats between two-legged brutes and four-legged beasts.

"In the soft sunshine of summer days the first vista of the city is striking indeed. Churches of magnificent proportions, ancient and modern architectures, strangely blended in teh same edifice; stately buildings, imposing markets; stores of all descriptions and dwelling places, rudely bare, variously colored with neutral tints of calsomine; their grated windows and open doors exhibiting to all the sparsely furnished interior, where bird, beast and human eat and live together. The sordid squalor of the many contrasts strikingly with the oppressive opulence of the few.

"The cobblestone streets are crooked and narrow; so narrow, in fact, that caballeros must take to the sidewalk to permit the passing of any kind of vehicle. The dingy tramcars are drawn by relays of mules, three abreast, beaten into subjection by the stinging lash or coaxed into action by the curses of youthful drivers, whose vernacular is wonderfully expressive and effective; indeed, I doubt, if anything but a muleteer really appreciate the depth of feeling and irresistible persuasiveness of the expressions.

"What strange sights one can see in these main arteries of that city! I have set my camera on the balcony of my room at the hotel and will snap what passes by. At first a herd of patient plodding burros loaded down with slabs of pale green sandstone, quarried nearby and used for building purposes, a legless cripple shuffles along on a board, propelling himself with his hands; a cargador trots along tirelessly with his awkward burden, in this case a sewing machine; more burros overloaded with charcoal; another pack struggles under the weight of sacked ore from the mines; still another bearing grain to the market, and the street car demanding loudly a clear track; a funeral procession where laughing children carry a baby's casket, swaying from side to side to the accompaniment of anything but appropriate music, and behind the mourners in solemn solemnity.

"Strangely superstitious are these people. Grossly ignorant, constant in their faith, pathetic in their simplicity, kindly and respectful, their life is epitomized in the verse:

"'Let the world slide, let the world go;
A fig for care and a fig for woe!
If I can't pay, why I can owe,
And death makes equal the high and low.'

"'Tis Sunday morning. I am awakened at early dawn by the tooting of tin horns, accompanied by the sonorous stretches of bass violas and fiddles as sounds are sawn from their strings; by the shuffling of sandaled feet over the sands of the street, and the babel of voices of passing peons. Church bells clang, sirens scream, whistles wildly mingle in the melody of merriment; for is not this the day when Judas Iscariot is to be hung in effigy?

"Night falls on an exhausted though happy people. What matters it if the prison is overcrowded that night, or that the supply of pulque or mescal is depleted almost to the degree of exhaustion?

"To the casual visitor from the States the habits and customs of these lowly people are strange, but fascinating. They do not need our commiseration or sympathy; they are content in their mode of living, and who shall say that they are the less happy or human in their habitat than many of us?

"The Mexican peon knows that he's born to serve, as did the old southern darky, and caste or class distinction is emphasized on all occasions. The mozo rides silently behind the lordly caballero; the peon woman steps into the street, and bows her head as the padre passes; in the plaz on Sunday evenings, when the melody of martial music fills the air, the upper classes parade in one direction, while the peons gyrate as an outer ring in the opposite direction. As a class they are industrious and skillful if the time element is eliminated.

"The peon miner is a competent workman when unhampered by modern machines and has a 'nose' for ore that is truly remarkable. As tillers of the soil their methods are primitive but productive; they still use oxen and the wooden plowshare, and the fields are fenced with imperishable dry-dock walls. In the making of pottery and basketry they excel; in tanning hides, saddlery and the working of metals they are inimitable. The women, too, can grind corn on a metate, cook tortillas and frijoles, raise families, launder clothes on a rock near the creek, and make the most exquisite laces and the finest of drawn work with equal skill."

Poultry World

HATCH CHICKENS NOW.

The poultryman makes his greatest profit from the chickens which are hatched after May 1. The early hatched cockerels are sold as broilers when the broiler market is at its best. The flood of late hatched broilers brings prices down and congests the market. The greater returns received from early hatched broilers go far toward defraying the cost of raising the pullets. These pullets in turn begin laying when eggs are bringing the highest price and when there is the greatest shortage of strictly fresh eggs.

Still more important, early hatched chickens grow more rapidly than those hatched late in the season and are much less likely to become sick. The late hatched chickens always are the first to catch cold and spread disease throughout the flock. Chickens hatched late in the year will not mature before cold weather and usually will not lay until well into the winter or even toward spring. This means that they will have to be fed and carried over for several months at a constant expense, with no return, and this at a time when feed is at its highest.

The early hatched pullets can be developed to a large extent on range, and a saving in grain feed is possible in this way.

The highest producing pullets are those which begin laying early. To get into the 200-egg class a pullet must lay 60 or more eggs before March 1. In order to do this, pullets must be hatched before May 1, so that they will begin laying by Nov. 1.

The American breeds (Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, etc.) should be hatched earlier than the Mediterranean breeds, such as the Leghorns, Minorcas, etc., because they take about one month longer to mature. Pullets of the American breeds will begin laying at about seven months of age and those of the Mediterranean breeds at about six months.

It is often difficult to get enough broody hens to set the eggs early. This may be partly overcome by setting the earliest eggs in an incubator batch. A hen usually can brood from one and one-half to two times as many chickens as she will hatch, so that additional chicks hatched in the incubators can also be given to hens which are hatching eggs at the same time.

Early hatching will produce more eggs in the fall and winter while a larger proportion of hens will get broody early in the spring, thus completing the necessary circle for early fall egg production.

Early hatched chickens are by far the most profitable in every way.

PREPARING FOR MARKET.

"Putting the finishing touches on a product before offering it for sale yields the greatest proportionate return of any labor done on the average farm. This lack of 'finish' is nowhere so clearly seen as in our poultry products as shipped to market.

"Probably nine-tenths of all the eggs produced have found their way to market through what is sometimes called 'the system,' the outstanding feature of which has been the lack of system."

few days before they are ready to and putting those eggs under hens a

The foregoing are pithy sentences from Bulletin 85 of the Dominion Experimental Farms, written by F. C. Elford, Dominion poultry husbandman. That there is need for improvement is an admitted fact and indicated clearly in the quotations. To meet this need, this timely, well illustrated bulletin has been prepared for general distribution, pointing out, as it does, the correct way of preparing poultry produce for the market, so that the largest price may be obtained, thereby largely increasing the profits, for, as stated by Mr. Elford, "there seem to be few industries that promise brighter prospects to the farmer than poultry managed on a business basis."

This bulletin, which is replete with information of value, not only for the farmer, but for the poultry specialist, may be obtained, free of charge, upon application to the Publications Branch, Department of Agriculture, Ottawa.

NOTES.

There is a big difference in chick feeds. It pays to obtain, when possible, the best grade. No feed can be too good for the baby chick, and death rate in small chicks can at times be traced to feeds that have been spoiled, yet hard to detect until the damage has been done.

Poor hatches in incubators should not always be blamed on the breeders, or the machine but rather in the manner the eggs have been handled from the time they are laid until placed in the incubator, eggs chilled or overheated will not hatch well, or if the eggs have been roughly handled. They should for best results be placed under the hen or in the incubator within ten days after being laid.

Fresh eggs will maintain a higher price this year, due to the fact that it costs 50 per cent. more to produce them than in former years. Eggs for cold storage, secured when they are at their lowest spring prices, will bring figures above last year. This means that the coming winter will see even the stored hen fruit at a higher figure than last year.

SATISFIED MOTHERS

No other medicine gives as great satisfaction to mothers as does Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets are equally good for the newborn babe or the growing child. They are absolutely free from injurious drugs and cannot possibly do harm—always good. Concerning them, Mrs. Jos. Moreau, St. Pamphile, Que., writes: "I have used Baby's Own Tablets and am well satisfied with them and would use no other medicine for my little ones." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

James' Break.

Grown old in the service of his master and mistress, James was a privileged retainer.

He was waiting at table one day, when a guest asked for a fish fork, but the request was ignored.

Then the hostess noticed the episode, and remarked, in a most peremptory manner:

"James, Mrs. Jones hasn't any fish-fork. Get her one at once!"

"Madam," came the emphatic reply, "last time Mrs. Jones dined here we lost a fish fork."

James has now been relegated to the garden.—Tit-Bits.

Spring Neckwear.

It is of sports silk—the much talked of khaki-kool silk.

The weave is a heavy, crepey one, and the color is an oyster white.

The collars are unusually in square shape and rather broad.

Some are hand-embroidered, others lace-trimmed or finished with hemstitching.

It is rather too heavy to be dainty, this new neckwear, and, though not unattractive, one must confess that newness is its chief charm.

The Barbarians

(New York Tribune.)

If there remains any American who don't know exactly what Germany means to the world at the present time, who does not know exactly what German spirit and ideas are he should read the accounts that are now coming of what Germans are doing in France. We are seeing repeated the spectacle which has come down to us from ancient days, the spectacle of barbarism in the midst of civilization—of German barbarism in the Latin world. For two thousand years the German has remained at heart a barbarian. The outward semblance of civilization he has acquired; the mastery of the machinery of modern times is his. Civilization of the instrument he has grasped, but the civilization of the heart remains as foreign to him now as ever.

We saw this first when German armies burst into Belgium. We saw then not crime committed in hot blood; not the ancient brutalities and shameful attendings of war. We saw then the cool, calculating, ruthless spirit destroying, not in anger, not in excitement, but destroying in cold blood.

The Germans invaded Belgium in defiance of all international law and human right. Having invaded Belgium, he sought by murder, by rape, by destruction, to terrify the spirit and break the will of the people who stood between him and his purpose.

To-day, in the plains of Northern France, the German is destroying, not merely those things which are valuable to armies, not merely the roads and the bridges, not merely the farms, but he is ruthlessly destroying everything of beauty, everything of value that has descended to this generation from the past. He is turning northern France into a desert and into something more terrible, and he is doing it not for military purposes but in a desire to crush forever.

There can be no mistake about this. What the German is now doing, he said he would do. Long before the war came to illuminate for all mankind the barbarism existing beyond the Rhine, the German soldiers and German scholars and German editors warned mankind at large that unless the world submitted to the German will nations would be destroyed, countries would be ravaged, all that was beautiful, all that had historic value, would be destroyed.

It is this kind of thing that we are now at war with. It is this sort of barbarism that we have, in our turn, been forced to fight. It is the barbarism that murders children, rapes women, destroys churches, defiles homes, in the determination to impose its will on the world, and to obtain for Germany that "place in the sun" which has become a smoking ruin and a human desert. There are still Americans who in their folly and blindness protest that with such a thing in the world we have no duty to perform beyond that of protecting our ships upon the sea and our cities at home. There are Americans, who, in their ignorance and in their darkness, do not yet perceive that this German thing will destroy all that there is of civilization and of humanity unless it is itself destroyed; that it is nothing less than a common peril to humanity and that all civilized mankind must go in the trenches, must seek it out as one seeks a wild beast in its haunt and destroy it, that there may be an end of such things as have happened in Belgium and are taking place in France.

We must send American soldiers to Europe. We must send them to the firing line, which is the frontier of civilization, because what we love and what we believe in is imperilled so long as there exists in the world a nation given over to the idea and the ideals that the Germans pursue.

Looking backward over the three years of the present world struggle, no thoughtful man can now fail to perceive that what is being fought is not a war between nations, but a war between systems of thought, conceptions of life; between that thing which we believe to be civilization and that which, to all our training and all our vision, seems barbarous, and one of the two must prevail.

Abraham Lincoln said that this country could not exist half slave and half free. In exactly the same way we must perceive to-day that this world of ours cannot exist half German and half civilized. There is no compromise with a wild animal. There is no modus vivendi with a rattlesnake. There is no possibility of living on terms of peace, of amity, or safety, with a nation that has no regard for the written pledge, no respect for the honor of women, the lives of children, the monuments of the past, the simple materials of humble human life when it is out for world power and domination.

When will the truth be perceived by the American people? When will they at last learn to discover the meaning of Germany, not in the lying phrases, the ready deception, the clever artifices of those whose business it is to gild crime and decorate assassination, but in the actual deeds of Germany?

When will they learn to see that submarine slaughter is a virtue in the German code, that the raping of women and the murder of children by German soldiers under orders becomes a virtue in the eyes of the Germans when it serves a German purpose? When will they perceive that the things that Germany has done are not accidents, not incidents, but each and every one of them is in its own degree and measure an expression of exactly what Germany believes in, exactly what Germany means, and is as infallible an indication of the German spirit of to-day as the temperature is of the condition of the human body?

We are at war with barbarism, and we shall, at no distant time, see on our own shores and perhaps within our own borders illustrations of exactly what Germanism means. Has not the time come when we can all of us put away illusions, cease to imagine that we are dealing with men of our own sort, with a nation accepting our ideas, with a people holding to the same humanity as we hold to.

Reluctantly we have been drawn into a crusade against barbarism. We have been drawn into the world struggle to free civilization from the German peril. What the peril is we may see in the smoking fields and ravaged lands of France to-day. Must we wait until we see it in our own countryside? Must we wait until our own women suffer what the French women have suffered and our own children are subjected to what France and Belgium children have suffered before we awake to the fact and, awaking, resume our courage and reassert our will?

RHUBARB.

Rhubarb is coming into market now. Although some of it is "forced rhubarb," its rosy, dainty pink color shows, it is a pleasing addition to our list of fresh foods. Indeed some persons think the forced rhubarb is more choice than that grown naturally. Rhubarb has a laxative effect which makes it valuable, particularly when we have been eating the heavy foods cold weather demands. The following recipes for using rhubarb are from the Domestic Science Department of Cornell University.

RHUBARB PUFFS

One cupful flour, 1 teaspoonful baking powder, ¼ teaspoonful salt, ¼ cupful sugar, ½ cupful milk, 1 tablespoonful melted butter, 1 egg, beaten.

Rhubarb sauce (made by cooking rhubarb until tender in a heavy syrup, using twice as much sugar as water.)

Combine all the ingredients except the rhubarb in the order given, and beat the mixture until it is smooth. Grease individual moulds or cups, and into each put three tablespoonfuls of rhubarb sauce and then one tablespoonful of the batter. Steam the puffs for 25 minutes, and serve them warm, with cream and sugar or with foaming sauce.

FOAMING SAUCE

Two-thirds cupful rhubarb juice, 1 cupful sugar, whites of 2 eggs.

Boil the sugar and the juice until the syrup threads. Pour it over the well-beaten whites of the eggs and beat the mixture until it is smooth and thick. Serve the sauce cold.

RHUBARB PUDDING

One pint rhubarb sauce, 1 pint bread crumbs, ⅓ cupful melted butter.

Mix the butter with the crumbs. Arrange the rhubarb and the crumbs in alternate layers, having a layer of crumbs on top. Add cinnamon and nutmeg over the top, and bake the pudding until it is brown in a moderate oven.

Mrs. Johnston had reached the age of 93 and was quite active up to the time of her death. The funeral which took place on Monday was largely attended, Rev. Mr. Gale conducting the service. Among the friends from a distance who attended the funeral, were her three sons—George from Toronto, Alex. of Marlette, and Dan of Montana; also Mrs. Alex Johnstone, Mr. Melville Johnston of Toronto, Mrs. Wylker and Mrs. Smart of Park Head.

VESTA

(Intended for last week)

A very successful pie social was held by The Red Cross Society in the Orange Hall at Vesta Monday evening April 9th. The proceeds amounted to $71.00. Reeve Willoughby acted as chairman and filled his position to the admiration of the large crowd present. A fine programme was rendered by home talent consisting of instrumental music, songs and pantomimes. After the programme a very enjoyable evening was spent in dancing to music furnished by the Vesta Orchestra. Vesta has done marvellously well for the Red Cross, since its society has been organized and we all hope that we may be able to help them, in anything they may need, for the comfort of our Loyal Sons across the Seas. Special mention must be made of Mr. W. Miller, who gave his services free, in auctioning off the pies. We predict for him a bright future in his line of business.

Miss. Florence Connelly, spent Easter at the home of her childhood, Vesta.

We are sorry to report Mr. W. J. Fortune, ill, but hope soon for a speedy recovery.

Congratulations, to Jos. Connelly, having passed his Normal Entrance and Junior Matriculation exams. successfully.

We are very sorry to lose Mr. and Mrs. Dan. McGill Jr. who are moving to Chesley. We wish them health and prosperity in their new home.

Farmers are getting very anxious around here, to get at their seeding. Fine weather when the sun crosses the line is no sign of an early Spring.

KINLOSS

Spring will soon come now, as we see some Easter hats out.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Herde spent an evening last week at Mr. W. Abbott's.

Everyone is busy house cleaning now, not much visiting being done.

Mr. Clifford Armstrong has been helping Geo. Herde.

The Red Cross had their usual meeting and supper in the evening, the proceeds being almost $7.00.

We are pleased to see Mrs. D. S. Campbell out after her recent attack of measles.

Miss Annie Stanley is spending her Easter holidays at her home here.

Mr. D. Leesens sold a fine horse one day last week.

Born—To Mr. and Mrs. John Halliday of Teeswater (a daughter,) nee Miss Jennie Herde.

Mr. and Mrs. John Dagg of the north line visited at Geo. Herde's one day last week.

Miss Myrtle Stanley is visiting at her home here.

We were pleased to see Pte. Richard Portice here Saturday evening.

Miss Vera Huston visited Miss Sadie Nesbitt last week.

A jolly evening was spent at Mrs. Herd's on April 4th when a number of friends and neighbours gathered at her home and presented her with several pieces of silver consisting of half a dozen silver knives and forks, a silver cake basket, silver bread tray, pearl handled pie knife and meat fork. The following address was read:—

Dear Friend:—

It was with deep regret that your friends and neighbours learned of your intention of leaving here. The many years you have been in our midst has won many warm friends for you and your family. You have ever been found on the side of all that is good and upright, and we will miss you, not only in the social life of the community, but also by those with whom you have been allied in church work. However this testimony to you is not confined to one denomination but to people as a whole, and we feel as if we could not let you leave us without presenting you with some small token of our esteem.

We ask you, Mrs. Herde, to accept these small articles and from time to time as you see them, they may bring to memory the old times passed in our midst and that you may look back with joy upon the place which you long called home.

We can only wish you every prosperity in your future life and we trust that God's blessing will ever be yours.

Signed on behalf of the friends and neighbours.

Mrs. D. S. Campbell,
Mrs. P. McDonald.

OTTER CREEK

Seeding has commenced in this vicinity.

Miss Elsie Clendenning was visiting friends on the Twelfth.

Mrs. Walter Jasper was visiting at Owen Sound at her daughters, Mrs. E. Donell.

Quite a number from here attended the sale of Mr. J. Haughan's of Brant.

Rev. J. D. Fenner arrived home from Chippewa and also attending the Evangelical Conference held in Mildmay, commencing April 17th, 1917.

While working in a valley in one of our neighbouring bushes Mr. Edward Farmer on looking up saw two hounds, one having the head and the other the tail of a ground-hog. It looks as if the people would soon do the same thing with our high priced ground hog.

SEED POTATOES CHEAP

Preparedness League Will Make an Effort to bring Vacant Lots in Walkerton Under Cultivation—Meeting To-morrow Night

The Preparedness League have arranged with Irwin Bros., who are having a carload of potatoes shipped from the West, to get a supply of seed potatoes which Irwin Bros. have kindly consented to sell to the League at cost. The League propose to let out these potatoes to anyone wishing to plant them on 50% basis, and will furnish land if necessary. All parties wishing to take advantage of this should at once notify the President, Mr. Rowland or the Secretary, Rev. R. Perdue or Mr. D. McKerracher of the amount they will require. A public meeting will be held at the Town Hall to-night to deal with the potato situation. In the meantime a canvass of the town is being made to see what vacant land can be brought under cultivation. Everybody, ladies especially, is urged to attend the meeting to-night.

Soldiers' Shower

A successful shower for the Soldiers was held by the Ladies of the Methodist congregation at the home of Mrs. L. C. Benton last Thursday. Parcels containing tempting "eats" have since been despatched to the soldiers at the Front.

Death Of Will Weiler

A promising young life was removed from its earthly sphere in the death at the County Hospital on Tuesday morning of William Weiler, second son of Mr. Frank Weiler. The young man, who was in his twentieth year, had shown special aptitude for his studies at school and two years ago obtained his Normal teacher's certificate at Stratford Normal College. The first year after graduation, he taught at the Elora Road School and the past year at Enterprise. He was a young man of lively temperament and it is thought that between his studies and his athletic activities he overexerted himself. Deep sympathy is felt for Mr. Weiler and family in their sad bereavement.

Transferred to England

The University of Toronto Hospital with which Sergt. Wilbur Cryderman has been serving at Salonika the past two years, is to be transferred to England and will be located at Bathingstoke near Southampton, Eng. The hospital has handled a tremendous amount of work under adverse conditions in the trying climate of Southern Greece and their removal to Eng. before the arrival of the hot season again should be a welcome change to the staff. Sergt. Cryderman is probably on the water at the present and his sister, Miss Ethel Cryderman who is going Overseas as a nurse is also on the ocean and as neither knows that the other is heading towards England a pleasant surprise awaits them. It is not an improbable thing that the sisters who are now on their way to England may be sent to the University Hospital, which is an immense affair with a ground space of one hundred acres, and requires a very large staff.

ODDFELLOWS AT CHURCH

Hear Inspiring Message at Knox Church by Rev. Thos. Wilson on Sunday Night.

Walkerton Oddfellows held their Annual Church parade on Sunday night and attended divine service at Knox Church. The brethren turned out in large numbers under the marshalship of Bro. John Wallace and occupied seats which had been reserved for them in the centre aisle of the church. Rev. Thos. Wilson preached an inspiring and helpful sermon from James 2, 18; "Show me Thy faith without thy works and I will show thee my faith by my works." The speaker showed that Oddfellowship meant the working out of practical Christianity and pointed out that Oddfellows by living up to their opportunities would be following in the footsteps of their Master when he went about doing good (1) By caring for the sick (2) By caring for those in distress, (3) By burying the dead. (4) By caring for the orphans, of which there will be more and more as the war goes on. (5), Caring for the widows. The Choir of the Church, which has attained a high degree of perfection under the direction of Mr. Leeson, rendered two appropriate anthems which were much appreciated.

On returning to the lodge room, N. G., N. Hiscox took the chair, and a resolution was passed on motion of Bros. C. Petteplace and F. W. Lippert Jr. heartily thanking Rev. Thos. Wilson for his able and helpful discourse, also the choir, church officials, and all who had contributed to the success of the occasion.

Killed In Action

A message was received here Monday night for Miss Tillie Elliott, formerly housemaid at the late K. M. Taylor's, announcing that her brother Archie had been killed in action. The message was forwarded to her present address at Belleville.

Home From New York

Miss Mabel Garner arrived home on Thursday from New York where she has been taking her final year in nursing at the Gouverneur Hospital, a branch of the famous Bellevue Hospital. Miss Garner's term as nurse-in-training at the County Hospital here will be concluded in a few weeks, when she will receive her diploma.

Still Winter Up There

Sleighbells are still tinkling in Northern Ontario and the ground is still well covered with snow says a letter received by Mr. John T. Lamb of Brant last week from his sister, Mrs. Fred Kirstine of Haileybury. The farmers of Bruce have apparently something to be thankful for in the weather line after all.

MADE SUPREME SACRIFICE

Telegram States That Private George Cunningham of Walkerton was Killed in Action in France on April 9th.

The saddest news that came over wires from Ottawa this week was that Pte. George Cunningham of Walkerton had been killed in action. The despatch to his bereaved wife read: Deeply regret inform you No 126,317 Private George Cunningham, infantry, officially reported killed in action on April ninth, 1917.

Pte Cunningham, who was in his 28th year, was the youngest son of the late Mr. and Mrs. John Cunningham of Maple Hill. He leaves a wife and three small children, Mrs. Cunningham being the eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. T. H. Tanner, South Line, Brant.

"Doc" was a genial, good-natured chap and was well-liked by everybody. The memory of his heroic death in defence of Freedom will be something for the little tots he leaves to cherish in after years.

Just a few days before receiving the telegram, Mrs. Cunningham had one of her letters returned to her from the Front bearing the words, "Killed in Action" in small letters in one corner of the envelope but she did not notice them until after the telegram came. The last word from George was a service card written to his wife three days before his death saying that he was well.

George enlisted with the 71st Batt. and had been only a couple of months in France, when he fell on the field of battle.

Wounded In Head And Arm

Mrs. William Mortimer, Yonge St. received a telegram from Ottawa on Sunday announcing that her husband had been admitted to the General Hospital at Wimereux, France, on April 22nd, with gunshot wounds in his left arm and head. Pte. Mortimer went to England with the 3rd Pioneer Battalion.

Lecture On Chinese Work.

Rev. H. P. S. Luttrell, returned missionary from China gave an interesting lecture on his work at Honan in Knox Church Monday evening. His talk was illustrated by some good lantern views. The audience, while not large, was highly appreciative. Mr. Luttrell, who is home on furlough, intends to purchase lantern equipment for use in the mission work with the funds raised by lectures of this kind.

Col. Fraser Wounded.

A telegram received here on Sunday stated that Lt.-Col. (Dr.) J. J. Fraser had been slightly wounded in the ear and is now in the Canadian Hospital at Orpington, England. Col. Fraser has been at the Front since the beginning of the war in 1914 when he closed his office here to enlist and this is the first time he has appeared among the casualties. Latterly he has been in Command of No. 2 Field Ambulance Corps, 2nd. Canadian Division.

Brant Well Represented.

S. S. No. 3, Brant, has been well represented in the casualty lists lately. Within the last few weeks, three boys from this school section have made the Supreme Sacrifice. Howard J. Scales, who enlisted in the West, a brother of Thos. Scales, con. 2, was reported killed in action in Saturday's lists. Arthur Zimmerman, who used to work for David Frook was lately killed in action. The third from this section is Pte. (Doc.) George Cunningham, whose death in action on April 9th is reported in another column.

GIVE! GIVE!

Walkerton citizens will have an opportunity next Tuesday of showing their appreciation of the invaluable service which is being rendered our soldier boys away from home by the Overseas organization of the Y. M. C. A. The letters which come to Walkerton every week from England and France bearing the Y. M. C. A. crest on the envelope and letterhead are constant reminders of the benefits that the boys from this town and neighbourhood are receiving and we believe that it will be a pleasure for most of our citizens to rise to the occasion and contribute liberally of the "sinews of war" to this noble organization.

The work of the Y. M. C. A. at the Front is too well-known to require any extended explanation here. It carries the good influence of home to the military camp, provides for the physical comfort, and moral and spiritual welfare of the boys, and is aggressive in winning men in a manly way which appeals to the best that is in them. A good many towns and cities are raising a dollar per citizen. The Walkerton Committee asks for only two thousand dollars. By contributing this amount and more if possible next Tuesday, the people of this community, (town and country) will be contributing to the best interests of our boys. A generous subscription next Tuesday will, we believe, arouse an echoing cheer in France!

LOST $12,000 IN LAKE?

Dr. Minifie Announced That His Purse is Missing Since the Drowning Accident Last Week.

KINCARDINE, April 30th —Capt. Wm. C. Minifie left here this morning with the remains of Mrs. Minifie, who was drowned off the north pier. The body was taken to a crematory in Buffalo, and the ashes will be forwarded to England.

The town has been bubbling with excitement ever since the accident. Dr. Minifie claimed he lost a purse containing $12,000 in securities. This was investigated by Detective Reburn of the Ontario provincial force. If Dr. Minifie lost the purse no suspicion attaches to anyone in Kincardine, as he signed a statement that the last time he had actual knowledge of having the purse in his possession was in Walkerton. With reference to the funds collected for Belgian relief there was a rumor that he had not turned these in to the proper authorities. This is false, as the funds were turned over to R. W. Greer of the Royal Bank, and are in his possession, and when all payments and promises are made will be forwarded to the Brotherhood in Toronto, which is the Government-authorized parties to receive same.

As to Dr. Minifie's military standing, Major Baron Osborne, London, came here and took the doctor's credentials to London to be looked into. Rumor certainly played a large part in shaking public confidence in Dr. Minifie's standing here, but he claims that there was no ground for many unjust suspicions. One thing is certain, he was able to convince the authorities that he was straight.

Battery Decimated

Louis Dippel writes home that out of 35 in his battery only 12 are left for duty. Of the original men in the Battery few are left to tell the tale of the desperate fighting the Battery has seen the past two years.

Wins Military Medal

Lewis Honey, son of Rev. George E. Honey, Methodist minister at Southampton, has been awarded the "Military Medal" for efficiency and gallantry in leading his party in two trench raids. Lewis was a student at the Walkerton High School before enlisting and is well-known among the younger people here.

Ill Health Forces Resignation

Rev. D. A. Walker B. A. recently pastor of the Walkerton Methodist Church, has resigned his pastorate at Preston owing to ill-health. Rev. Mr. Walker suffered a nervous breakdown a few months ago, and also has heart trouble. It was hoped that a few months' rest might restore him sufficiently to enable him to resume his work but such has not proven to be the case. By his resignation the Hamilton Conference loses one of its most promising members. Mr. Walker will engage in other work but has not formed plans for the future as yet.

Gets Suspended Sentence

Tony Zuber appeared before Judge Greig at County Court Monday morning on the conspiracy charge arising out of his letter-writing activities of last Fall. He pleaded guilty and was allowed by the Judge to go on suspended sentence. His housekeeper, Emma Helwig, who was a partner with him in an endeavour to blackmail prominent citizens, was let go on a similar charge last month, on condition that she get out of town at once. At the first trial some months ago Zuber was found guilty of writing a blackmailing letter and served 5 days in gaol besides paying a $50 fine.

A Stalwart Family

Three members of the Briggs family had a reunion at Paisley last week. They were:—County Constable E. Briggs of Walkerton, his nephew, Mr. W. F. Briggs, travelling passenger and freight agent of the G. T. R. of Charlotte, Mich. and another relative, Mr. Chas. Briggs of Elderslie. When the three of them stood at the street corner they looked big enough to "lick" any police force on the map. W. F. Briggs weighs 310 lbs. but is so tall that he is not more than ordinarily stout. The combined weight of the three men was no less than 740 lbs. Broad shoulders and big frames seem to be a common heritage of the Briggs family who are all big men.

Given Public Welcome

A large crowd of citizens turned out Thursday night to publicly welcome Pte Alex Gross, one of Walkerton's returned heroes, who is home on two months leave, after having been through some of the worst fighting of the war. John Rowland, Chairman of the Local Preparedness League occupied, the chair, and Rev. R. Perdue read an official address of welcome while Mayor Johnston presented to him a piece of gold on behalf of the town. Patriotic speeches were given by Ex-Warden McNab, Inspector McCool, Rev. J. W. Sanderson, Reeve Russell, Major Henderson, Rev. R. Perdue. The program enlivened by patriotic solos by Misses Ernsel, Dippel, Leithwaite and Seiler.

HYDRO WILL GET BUSY

Promises Walkerton a Proposition Very Soon—Kincardine, Wingham, and Chesley Will Likely Join the Proposed Saugeen System

Chief Engineer Gaby of the Hydro Electric Power Commission writes Town Clerk Arthur Collins that his engineers have been so busy arranging for power supply for munitions plants that they have been unable to take up the Walkerton proposition up to the present time but are now prepared to go ahead and deal with the situation here right away. The Hydro Engineers have mapped out a scheme which includes not only the towns on the Saugeen but municipalities as far west as Wingham and Kincardine. It is understood that Chesley will be taken off the Eugenia System, the power for all the towns of this district being supplied from three power plants on the Saugeen. The ad of Wingham, Kincardine and venlng places will have the effect of further reducing power costs in Walkerton and in all the towns in the proposed system. Chief Engineer Gaby's letter was written in reply to a letter from the Town Clerk, asking information as to what progress was being made towards bringing hydro to Walkerton.

Fighting Is Desperate.

The fighting is perfect hell now and it will be like this all summer, Jim Russell writes to his father, Reeve Robert Russell. Jim was well and fit at time of writing.

Dr. McCrimmon Coming

The Ladies' Aid of the Baptist Church have been fortunate in securing an eminent speaker, Dr. A. L. McCrimmon, Chancellor of McMaster University, to give his lecture on the Menace of Prussianism on Friday, May 18th.

Leaving For Overseas

Miss Annie Ferguson, daughter of Chief of Police R. B. Ferguson, is home on last leave this week. On Thursday she has to report at London and expects to go Overseas as a Nursing Sister at once. On Tuesday night a large crowd of citizens gathered at the Town Hall to give Miss Ferguson a fitting farewell. A number of speeches were made, congratulating Miss Ferguson on the step she had taken, and wishing her bon voyage and a safe return. With a single exception the Chief's family has now the largest number in khaki of any Walkerton family. Three of the Chief's sons and one daughter are now on Active Service.

Let Townships Help!

A prominent citizen suggests that the Campaign to raise funds for the Overseas work of the Y. M. C. A. be extended to all the rural sections of the County and that the people of the various townships be given an opportunity to subscribe to this worthy work. All sections of the County benefit from the work and everywhere where the needs of the situation have been presented to the people there has been a ready response. Possibly the "Y"'s greatest work is yet to come. Looking after the welfare of the men during the period between the end of the fighting and their arrival home will be a big proposition. The needs of the situation might be presented to the people of the various municipalities throughout Bruce by a few local men well-posted in regard to the work that the Y. M. C. A. is doing.

Death of W. H. Clement

William H. Clement, a well-known Walkerton resident, passed away at the County Hospital Thursday night following a lengthy illness. The deceased had been very poorly since last June when he was laid up with blood-poisoning. His condition gradually became weaker, dropsy setting in six weeks ago. Mr. Clement was born in Brampton but came in infancy with his parents to Brant, settling at Maple Hill. As a youth Mr. Clement had the distinction of being the first printer's devil on the Bruce Herald. Shortly afterwards he went sailing and for a number of years followed the course from Montreal to Minneapolis. Later he returned to Maple Hill and for a time kept hotel at Ellengowan. In 1882 he went to Manitoba where he lived and farmed about twenty-five years. There his children still make their homes in the neighborhood of Melita. Nine years ago, Mr. Clement came to Walkerton to retire. He was a man of genial personality and his has been a familiar figure on the streets. Of a family of nine sons and two daughters, he is the last survivor but one, his brother Wesley, of Waskada, Man. still living. His brother, Robt. ran the flour mill here for many years. Besides his widow, three children by a former wife survive:—Fred of Waskada, Man; Charlie of Melita, Man; and Mrs. Houch of Napinka, Man. The funeral was held on Tuesday afternoon from his late residence to Hanover Cemetery, Rev. G. C. Rock, pastor of the Baptist Church, conducting the service. The pall-bearers were:—Robt. Goode, J. A. McGill, J. L. Brillinger, Robt. Simpson, J. Chappel of Southampton, and E. Streit of Fergus.

CURRENT COMMENT

FORCED INTO WAR.

For over two years and a half the President of the United States has labored to keep his country out of war. He saw the invasion of Belgium, her cities and towns put to the flames and her inhabitants, helpless and innocent, put to the sword. He saw her people banished into slavery. He saw all this, yet he felt it his duty to keep his country out of the struggle. The President saw the Lusitania, with American men, women and children, ruthlessly and cruelly sent to the bottom of the sea, and yet he temporized and reasoned and wrote notes. He wished to keep his country out of war. We do not blame him for this. His was a great responsibility, and if he could honorably keep the nation out of the awful struggle it was his right and his duty to do so.

But the more the President hesitated and the more notes he wrote to Germany, the more emboldened she became. Seeing defeat facing her, the German Government went one step farther, and declared war against neutrality. It proposed to snatch victory from defeat by waging submarine [illegible] against the whole world. It warned all neutral nations, the United States included, to keep off the waters that were declared closed seas to [illegible] German submarines. [illegible] this order meant that all [illegible] found within the barred zone would be sent to the bottom of the deep without warning, and the Germans lost no time in putting their threat into operation. American vessels being torpedoed without warning and American citizens allowed to drown in midocean.

Up to this time President Wilson had borne with infinite patience the attacks of Germany upon the lives and property of the people of the United States. But he could no longer ignore the fact that a "state of war" existed between Germany and the United States. What must have nerved him at the decisive moment was the German Chancellor's arrogant statement that, no matter what happened, Germany would continue to sink and drown American citizens if caught within the barred zone. It was a dramatic and historic occasion when President Wilson appeared before Congress [illegible] evening, and after reciting the wrongs his country had suffered at the hands of Germany, advised "that the Congress declare the recent course of the Imperial German Government to be in fact nothing less than war against the Government and formally accept the status of belliger- people of the United States, that it ent which has thus been thrust upon it, and that it take immediate steps not only to put the country in a more thorough state of defence, but also to exert all its power and employ all its resources to bring the Government of the German Empire to terms and end the war."

This statement, which is tantamount to a declaration of war, although the President was careful not to ask for such a declaration, was received with cheers by the Congressmen and others present. The President followed this up by stating the determination of the Government to co-operate with the Allies in their prosecution of the war. He said: "What this will involve is clear. It will involve the utmost practicable co-operation in counsel and action with the Governments now at war with Germany, and, as incident to that, the extension to those Governments of the most liberal financial credits, in order that our resources may, so far as possible, be added to theirs." We have here a grim determination to prosecute the war with the whole force and strength of the United States. She will not confine herself merely to a defensive war. She will fight for a speedy overthrow of the German military octopus, and an early termination of the war. We [illegible] the belief a day or two ago [illegible] that would be the course mapped out by the President.

President Wilson and Mr. Asquith are agreed on what they are fighting for. The President declared: "We shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts—for democracy, for the right of those who submit to authority to have a voice in their own government; for the rights and liberties of small nations; for a universal dominion of right by such a concert of free peoples as shall bring peace and safety to all nations and make the world itself at last free." Mr. Asquith's declaration still stands: "We shall never sheathe the sword until Belgium recovers in full measure all, and more than all, that she has sacrificed, until France is adequately secured against the menace of aggression, until the rights of the smaller nationalities of Europe are placed upon an unassailable foundation, and until the military domination of Prussia is wholly and finally destroyed."

It will take perhaps a day or two before the Senate passes the necessary measures to carry out the President's request. But in the meantime nothing is being lost. All the departments are busy preparing for whatever may be the eventualities. The American people, with their known patriotism and thoroughness, will give the Government every encouragement, and we imagine that the action of the American nation will have a most depressing effect on the Central Powers. The end cannot now be far off. Whom the gods wish to destroy they first make mad, and the Kaiser and his advisers have acted like madmen in thus throwing down the gauntlet to the American people.

St. Cecilia's Bird.

When Spring is weaving tapestry
Of vivid emerald hue,
All patterned o'er with arbutus
And violets darkly blue,
The wood thrush on a breezy bough
Still jewelled with the rain
In ecstasy immortal trills
The rapturous refrain:
"Cecilia."

Entranced we listen to the swell
Of every golden note
And marvel at such melody
From such a tiny throat.
But lo! one morning to the wood
The saint of music came
And taught the bird to sing, for hark!
He still repeats her name:
"Cecilia."

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"Yes, it is true! I thought you, as I still think you the most beautiful girl I have ever seen; but it was not only that—it was—I can scarcely say what it was, but your manner to Archie completed the spell. I was yours from that moment. Then the idea occurred to me that I would remain plain Hector Warren, and, if I should be so fortunate, woo you, just as a plain, poor unknown man might do. I set to work, and thank Heaven, I succeeded! I should have kept my identity hidden until we were married, but unfortunately, in a moment of carelessness I had given Laura Derwent the permission she has so well used, and unless I had stayed away to-night, which I could not have done, I was forced to discover myself."

"And Lady Rookwell knew it all the time!" says Signa, smiling.

"Knew it or guessed it!" he assents, smiling. "And has been amusing herself by telling the most awful stories about me before my very face, hoping that I should, in a moment of unguardedness, reveal myself; but I think I baffled her!" and he smiles as he smooths the silken hair which has got ruffled by his embrace. "And as for Miss Laura Derwent—"

"She will be broken-hearted!" says Signa, smiling.

He laughs.

"I think not. I will put it all right with her. She is a lady not easily daunted or embarrassed."

"And Uncle Podswell?" says Signa, with arched brows.

"He shall have the living he wants," he says, smiling. "The curate is a very good fellow, and I will give him a couple of hundred a year out of my privy purse. I will do anything to make things smooth and easy, for I feel that I have caused a good deal of—well, inconvenience. To-night I am so happy that I would wish every one else to be. If I could make them! And you, my darling, my own true love, what shall I say to you?"

"Only that you love me!" she whispers. "Let us go back now," she says, after a few minutes, "they will be waiting. I do not hear any music."

"And you want to dance?" he adds.

Signa shakes her head.

"No! You must not dance again with me to-night. It was all very well while you were only Hector Warren, but as Lord Delamere you owe a duty to half the room of unmarried girls, and you must dance with Laura!"

"Alas!" he says, with a smile and a sigh, "already do I regret the loss of my plain misterhood."

They go back to the ballroom, and Signa, determined that he shall do his duty, slips her hand from his arm and joins the group at the farther end of the room.

Her reappearance creates a sensation, and it would amuse a philosopher, given to weighing the motives of humanity, to observe the changed manner with which she is greeted. She is no longer Signa Grenville, engaged to plain Hector Warren, but the affianced of the Earl of Delamere.

Her grace the duchess greets her with a smile, and sweeps her own satin skirts off the couch upon which she sits to make room for the future Countess of Delamere.

"Come and sit down, Miss Grenville," she says graciously, "you must be tired. We must be great friends; the Towers"—which is the ducal residence—"is not far from here, and we must see a great deal of each other."

And only half an hour ago she would not bestow more than her fingers upon this same Signa Grenville!

Laura Derwent, coming up on the arm of her partner, dismisses him with a word and a smile, and seats herself beside Signa for a moment or two.

"Tell me, my dear, candidly, did you know it?"

Signa blushes and shakes her head.

"No—if you mean that Hector Warren and Lord Delamere were one and the same person."

"Yes, I know you did not, although that odious Mrs. Podswell—I beg your pardon, my dear, I forgot she was your aunt—declared that you did. Of course you didn't know it. But how extraordinary it is! And you will be the Countess of Delamere! Isn't your head quite turned? There isn't a girl in the room, including myself, who wouldn't give her head to be what you will be! And I am so angry at least I should be if the ball weren't going so splendidly. And it is going splendidly. Lord Delamere—I was nearly calling him Mr. Warren!—is doing his duty tremendously. I haven't spoken to him yet, I dare not! But I will say this that he is doing his utmost to make the thing a success. What a delightful man he is! My dear, you ought to be a very happy girl!"

"I think I am very happy!" says Signa, with a smile.

Then there creeps up the rector—there is no other word for it—he simply creeps up, rubbing his chin, and coughing apologetically.

"My dear Signa," he says, with a sickly smile, "this is, indeed a surprise! I cannot—er—say how much your aunt and I ahem—delight in your—er future prospects; and if we have a regret, which, I trust, we have not, it is—er—that you did not confide in us more fully than you have done."

"But I didn't know it!" says Signa, candidly. "I didn't know anything about it! Tell my aunt that I was as much surprised as anyone," and the crimson flushes her face.

"Miss Grenville, will you give me the next dance?" asks the duke himself, a heavy, more than middle-aged man, who goes in for breeding shorthorns, and who is never so happy as when he is in his turnip fields.

Signa smiles an assent, and gives him her fan to hold while she gathers up the train of the Egyptian gauze. The duke dances atrociously, and launches at once into his favorite topic; but all the women in the room glance at the couple, and know that the duke has received his orders to dance with Miss Grenville from the duchess, and understand what it means. It means that Signa Grenville will be the highest lady in that part of the shire, and that she will go out of the room before anyone excepting the duchess herself.

"Humph!" says his grace, after a short—happily for Signa's gauze—a short plunge or two. "Not much of a dancer, Miss Grenville; rather too much of the bear on hot bricks for a good stepper like yourself. Been staying here long? Oh, I beg your pardon, I forgot: The duchess just told me you were to marry Delamere; remember him when he was a boy in drawers; awful pickle he was. When he came home from school he used to poach my preserves, though he had plenty of game in his own. Hope he's grown up steadier, and not taken to poaching other people's game of all kinds, eh?"

Signa, amused and not quite clearly understanding, smiles, and says she hopes so, and the jolly farmer—for his grace is really not much higher, and would be rather flattered than otherwise if any one called him a farmer—chuckles, and nods and grunts.

"Going to marry him, aren't you? By George, lucky young dog!"

"Do you mean me or Mr.—Lord Delamere, your grace?" says Signa, with a twinkle in her violet eyes.

"Delamere—Delamere!" replies his grace, laughing, and staring at the beautiful face, now alight with a subtle witchery; she is so happy, you see, that she is half-inclined to flirt even with his grace the duke!

"And so he is!" he reiterates, heartily. "I say, I hope he'll settle down. No more philanderings. Make him go in for farming; nothing like farming to settle a man."

"It settles too many, I have heard," says Signa, with the same twinkle.

The duke chuckles.

"Gad! so it does, by George!—But that won't affect Delamere, got plenty of money. Richer man than I am, by George!"

"Perhaps that's because you have gone in for farming," says Signa.

He chuckles again.

"Perhaps so. But never mind. You persuade him to run a home farm and anything that keeps a man steadier than shorthorns; by George! if he attends to them properly, he'll be able to think of nothing else!"

"I don't fancy I should like him to go in for shorthorns then," says Signa, demurely.

His grace laughs out loud this time, so that those near them turn with smiling curiosity.

"Ha! don't I see! Want him to think of you?"

"Sometimes," says Signa.

It is not a very brilliant conversation, yet those near strain their ears to catch fragments of it, for is it not a duke who is talking?

"I don't think we'd better dance any more," he says, looking down at her dress. "I should be sorry to tear that pretty frock of yours, and then my wife would scold me. I'll take you back, unless you'll be kind enough to sit down and talk to me."

Signa seats herself and talks to him—about his beloved shorthorns, and when the duke takes her back, he confides to her grace, loud enough to be heard a dozen yards off, that—

"By George! that girl is the most sensible girl in the room, and pretty as well as sensible. Knows something about everything, and ain't afraid of saying it!"

If anything were wanting to secure Signa's success, the duke's expressed approval would supply it. Every one in the room is now prepared to go into ecstacies over her. From a little distance, where he is making himself pleasant and doing his duty as the host, Lord Delamere sees the little ducal incident, and smiles with pride and satisfaction.

"My darling"—he thinks—"not fit to be a countess. There is no one here who is half as fit!"

No sooner has the duke resigned his partner than half a dozen men come forward eager to inscribe their names on her ball programme, and Signa is soon whirling round the room with a young marquis who is fortunate enough to find a dance disengaged.

Laura Derwent looks on with a smile.

"She deserves it all!" she says, almost to herself. "I never saw a girl take her honors more quietly! Ninety-nine women out of a hundred would have their heads turned."

"Signa is the hundredth!" says Lady Rookwell, with a smile which for once is not sarcastic. "Think of it! She has just discovered, only an hour or two ago, that instead of a poor, unknown man, her future husband is an earl, that instead of living in a poky cottage on a hundred a year or so, she will be mistress of half a dozen such places as this, and forty or fifty thousand a year! And yet she takes it as meekly and quietly as you see. Laura, you are fond of a phenomenon; there is one for you!"

"I shall be very fond of her, at any rate," says Laura Derwent.

"Though she has deprived you of all chance of being Lady Delamere!" says the terrible old lady.

The beauty flushes, then laughs.

"Yes, even so! Wonderful, isn't it, aunt? What's that?"

"That is the signal for supper," says Lady Rookwell. "Thank Heaven, there will be no scrambling and fighting to-night," and she gathers her skirts round her with a sigh of relief.

There is no need for either fighting or scrambling. The supper which comes up to even Lady Rookwell and Laura Derwent's standard, is laid in the spacious banqueting-room, and there is a seat and a plate and a knife and fork for everyone, a rare thing at a ball! The contractors have fulfilled their glowing promise, and it is a banquet rather than the usual flimsy ball supper, which awaits two hundred guests.

Lord Delamere, as in duty bound, takes in the duchess, and Signa finds herself allotted to a young captain of dragoons, as handsome as Apollo, and with all the fine tones of a man of fashion.

He is a lady-killer of the most advanced type, and would give much to be able to lay siege to the heart of the beautiful girl in his charge, but he knows in a moment that all his blandishments are in vain, as he sees the glance which Signa exchanges with Lord Delamere, as he happens to pass her on his way to the head of the table.

"These blessed earls always have the best of it!" mutters the handsome captain to himself. He is as poor as a church mouse and must "marry money" sooner or later. But, nevertheless, he makes himself very pleasant and amusing, and choosing the subject which he thinks will be most welcome, talks about Lord Delamere.

"Plenty of game here," he says, as the footman helps them to pigeon pie. "Delamere is a magnificent shot! I was shooting with him ten years ago in America. I have seen him bring down a buffalo as neat as a whistle. Indeed, he is what we call an all-round man; can do almost anything, and do it well. He ought to have been in the service; he would have made a first-rate officer."

Signa's smile rewards him for his praise.

"Delamere has got no end of pluck, you see, and a man who has got that is sure to get on. I remember a tremendously plucky thing he did; it was out in the west—Canada, I mean—we, our party, you know, were going down river in canoes, and one of the canoes got upset at one of the rapids. It would have been all up for the Englishman on board, who couldn't swim a morsel, but Lord Delamere went for him, and after a hard fight brought him to land. I never saw a neater thing, or a harder swim!"

Signa glances at the handsome face of the man whom he is praising, and her heart throbs with pride.

"You have known Lord Delamere for some time?" she says.

"Oh, years. We were at Eton together. We haven't seen much of each other lately, because he has been wandering about. He was always a lucky boy; I think he is a lucky man also!"

Signa blushes at the rather broad compliment, but forgives it, and the captain fills his glass with champagne and goes on with his supper, feeling that he has earned it.

The supper is a great success, one expects to be crowded and pushed about on such occasions, but here there is plenty of room, and when they return to the ballroom there is plenty of laughter to denote that the guests of this strange party are enjoying themselves.

"It is going beautifully," exclaims Laura Derwent, coming up to Signa. "My dear, this night will be talked of in the shire, ah! in the town too, for quite a year, which is a long time, let me tell you! It is such a magnificent place, you see, and everything has been done so well, and Lord Delamere—I never knew a man exert himself with more willingness or greater success. Signa, I envy you!"

"Don't do that!" says Signa, with a smile and a flush.

"But I do! I can't help it! To think that you will have all this," and she looks round, "and him thus the bargain. Why, my dear, I'm in love with him myself. You don't mind, do you?"

"Not in the least!" says Signa smiling, "so that he be not in love with you!"

Laura Derwent laughs.

"You need not be afraid of that! I think he thoroughly detests me for being the cause of his discovering himself. Would you believe it, I haven't spoken to him since we first came in?"

"Miss Derwent," says Delamere, at her elbow, "if you have a dance left, I shall be very grateful."

She turns with a smile—she couldn't start to save her life—and gives him her card.

"You can see. I'm afraid not."

"No!" he says. "But this, I see, is given to the marquis; he will let me have it, I have no doubt."

"Very well," she says. "You must make your peace with him."

He leads her off, as Signa is taken away by her partner. For a minute or two Delamere and Laura Derwent dance in silence, then he pulls up and stands looking down at her with a curious expression, then he says:

"Miss Derwent, I wanted a word with you."

"Yes," she says, looking up. "And I am glad to find an opportunity of speaking to you, Lord Delamere. I don't know what to say now that I have gained the opportunity! But I feel that I ought to beg your pardon for my—I should like to say 'cheek'; it is the only word that will fit it!"

He smiles.

"You have done nothing to beg my pardon for," he says in his quiet way, a way that told more with those who came in contact with it than the most emphatic verbal expressions. "You have given me an opportunity of meeting my friends and neighbors and gaining, I trust, their good-will—that is all."

"That is not all!" she says, moving her fan restlessly. "I have made myself awfully objectionable, I feel it! Lord Delamere, why did you not tell me that you were Hector Warren—I mean, Lord Delamere?"

"Why?" he says. "Well, I did not tell Signa, who is my affianced wife!"

"I am answered," she says, with a shrug. "But nevertheless I shall never forgive myself, never! I felt I was doing wrong that night at Cwmlline, do you remember that night? What a strange place it was for us to meet in!"

"I remember," he says, and as he speaks a shade crosses his brow, and his eyes droop in a way peculiar to him when he is very much in earnest. "Yes, I remember! Miss Derwent?"

"Yes," she says, bending her brown eyes upon him waitingly.

He is silent a moment; then, with an effort, that is scarcely perceptible, he goes on:

"We met, if you remember, at Cwmlline?"

"Yes."

CANADA'S NATURAL RESOURCES

An important survey of the natural resources of Canada is being undertaken in connection with the Canadian Pacific Railway, which has for its purpose the co-ordination of the work which has been so well done by many government departments and with it other data which the government has not collected, thereby making easily accessible to those qualified to utilize the information as much data as possible relative to the natural resources of Canada. Great care will be taken not to do work that has already been well done, and the effort is one which distinctly calls for co-operation. Arthur D. Little, Limited, the Canadian branch of a Boston organization of analytical chemists, are the directors of the work and will do their part of the work with the same altruistic spirit they hope to find among those who assist. The information now available is to be collected on standard forms, is to be transferred to cards in a manner to make it possible to quickly separate the cards according to required classification at the moment. Thus if one desires to know all the places in Canada where deposits of iron ore can be found in proximity with limestone, water power, or some other resource, the list of localities can be supplied very quickly. To accomplish this work, which is in the interest of the whole Dominion, it will be necessary to have part time assistance from a great many people who will be willing to devote a very small fraction of their spare time to the work because of self interest, patriotism, local pride, and in some cases nominal remuneration. Those to whom the plan has been explained have offered their co-operation, and have been enthusiastic over the possibilities of the work and the advantage to the country at large in having such information thus brought together and classified for the free use of those interested. A bulletin is now being compiled setting forth in greater detail the plan and purpose of the survey, and this will be sent out especially to those whose co-operation is desired.

THE STORY OF GLASS.

How Made and What Used for in Electrical Industry.

Glass is older than the arts. Volcanic glass was in use in the stone age. The cave man made from it arrow points, spears, knives, etc., because it could be chipped to a razor cutting edge. Obsidian, or volcanic glass, was extensively used by the Aztecs of Mexico and the Incas of Peru for the same purpose. Many a doughty Spaniard fell beneath the great two-handed wooden swords, with serrated teeth of volcanic glass, in the hands of Montezuma's warriors. It is to be inferred that the earlier civilization would act on this suggestion from nature and endeavor to make glass by the fusion of certain rocks and sands. Glass is very old. Its manufacture was common in ancient times.

Chemically, any vitreous compound is called glass. Commercially, glass is a fused mixture of two or more silicates and is often named from the predominant base, as "soda glass," "potash glass," "lime glass" and "lead glass." It is usually transparent, or at least translucent and is brittle at ordinary temperatures. Sand is now generally used for obtaining the silicates which form the base of glass. The sand for the finer qualities of the glass is quarried. The principal deposits of sand for glass-making in the United States are in Massachusetts, Illinois, Ohio, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, West Virginia, Indiana, Mis[illegible] part of the country.

There are innumerable kinds of glass. Some are named for their uses as bottle glass, mirror glass, optical glass, window glass. Others, according to the process of manufacture, as blown glass, pressed glass, cast glass, cut glass, ground glass. Other are named according to the localities from which they are obtained, as are Blar, Bohemian, Murano, Venetian of Venice and Gobala glass. Still other names are given to glass, according to finish and form, as kinkled, corrugated, fluted and spun glass. Then there is agate, mathiaized, rose aventurine, aventurine, favrile, bronzed, silvered and platinized glass. The commonest kind of glass, however, is flint glass, and this includes all the myriad forms of glass and bottle glass. Besides all those, there are stained, painted, colored and mosaic glass.

The principal bases used for making all glasses are sodium, potassium, calcium and lead. A host of other ingredients are used in making glass, for coloring, etc., but these vary greatly with the many different glass companies and no definite information can be given as to their use. Very often colored glass is made ordinarily like any other glass, the coloring being accomplished by the addition of dyes (generally metal oxides) to the molten charge. The same metal produces several different colors at various temperatures. More often, however, colored glass is stained, painted or enameled, and when joined by lead so as to form a pattern, is called mosaic.

Probably the largest use for glass in the electrical trade is in connection with the lighting fixture business. For this class of trade the glass that is most used is milky white opaque glass called bone, milk, opal, alabaster or rich stone glass. Colored or stained glass, cut glass and glass that is green on one side and white on the other, are often used for lighting fixtures. Colored glass is principally used for domes, cut glass for flowers and chandeliers, and the white and green glass principally for half shades and parabola reflectors. Mirror glass, too, is used to a large extent for reflectors.

While it is impossible to state definitely the kind of glass that is used for each electrical device that contains glass in its make up the following list of devices will serve to give an adequate idea of where and for what glass is used by manufacturers of electrical appliances and devices: Annunciators, arc lamps, bath light cabinets, beads insulating, carriage rails, clocks, car headlights, current rectifiers, color caps, domes, drink mixers, electro-medical apparatus, electroscopes, figures, fire alarms, electric fountains, flashlight lens, hydrometers, house numbers, insulators, illuminate columns, instruments, incubators, lamp bulbs, luminous radiators, lighting fixtures, marine fixtures, mirror shades, projectors, portables, showcase fixtures, shaving mirrors, signals, stage lights, static machines, [illegible], regulators and wet bateries.

Glass is an insulator, a non-conductor of electricity and is largely used for insulating purposes, principally in the form of insulators for pole line distribution of electrical energy, generally, however, for voltages of less than [illegible].—Troy Times.

Where the Niles Meet.

At the junction of the White and the Blue Niles, 1,400 miles from Alexandria and 1,000 miles from Uganda, stands the capital of the Soudan, which but for the life and death of General Gordon might still be a struggling Soudanese village. Khartoum means elephant's trunk, and may well designate the long strip of land which separates the turbid waters of the White Nile from the clear and more rapid streams that come from the mountains of Abyssinia. Across the White Nile stretches the straggling, ancient dervish capital, Omdurman, with a population of over 60,000, and it is practically a part of Khartoum, as Brooklyn is of Greater New York.

The quays, streets, gardens and public buildings present the picture of a civilized town, as regular and a good deal more ambitious than some metropolis in the growing west. The majority of the streets are wide, macadamized and lined with splendid trees. There is an efficient system of lighting, and tram cars connect Khartoum with the suburbs, from Gordon College on the east to Omdurman on the west, as well as with North Khartoum across the Blue Nile. Luxurious express trains, with dining and sleeping cars, run twice a week from Khartoum to Cairo.—Christian Herald.

REPLENISH
YOUR BLOOD
IN THE SPRING

Just now you are feeling out of sorts—not your usual self. Quite exhausted at times and cannot devote real energy to your work. Sleep does not rest you and you wake up feeling "all tired out." Perhaps rheumatism is flying through your muscles and joints, or maybe your skin is disfigured by rashes, boils or pimples. Headaches, twinges of neuralgia, fits of nervousness, irritability of temper and a disordered stomach often increase your discomfort in the spring. The cause—winter has left its marks on you. These troubles are signs that your blood is thin and watery, that your nerves are exhausted. You must renew and enrich your blood at once and restore tone to your tired nerves, or there may be a complete breakdown. The most powerful remedy for these spring ailments in men, women and children is Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, because these Pills cleanse bad blood and strengthen weak nerves.

New, rich, red blood—your greatest need at spring—is plentifully created by Dr. Williams Pink Pills, and with this new, pure blood in your veins you quickly regain health and increase your strength. Then your skin becomes strong, and you feel better, eat better, sleep better, and are able to do your work.

Begin your spring tonic treatment to-day for the blood and nerves with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills—the Pills that strengthen.

These Pills are sold by most dealers, but do not be persuaded to take "something just the same." If you can't get the genuine Pills from your dealer they will be sent you by mail, post paid, at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 by writing The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

HIGH PRICED EGGS.

A correspondent writes:

The Dominion Live Stock Department draws attention to the extremely high price paid for eggs and poultry last winter, and there does not appear to be any prospects of lower prices next winter. So many farmers and poultrymen sold heavily at the prevailing high prices for market poultry, thereby making a decided scarcity in the breeding stock for the present season, as the continued scarcity of eggs shows. To relieve the threatened shortage next winter, it has been strongly recommended that city dwellers raise their own hens to produce the necessary eggs. This can be done at lowest cost by feeding all table scraps and kitchen waste to the hens; cook no food for them, as modern poultry practise shows nothing is gained by cooking. The fowls can and will eat raw anything you may give them.

The city man's best investment is in day old chicks. These are easily raised, as a chick can eat right from its start in life. The chicks can be placed under a setting hen at night and she will usually take to them, or they may be placed in a comfortable box with a hot water bottle, renewed frequently, or an electric lamp kept burning will provide sufficient heat, till they are five or six weeks old, depending on the kind of weather at the time. The best breed for the city man is, without doubt, the white Leghorn, justly called "the egg machine." It will give more eggs on less feed than any other breed of fowl. More chicks can be obtained from one hundred white Leghorn eggs than from any other breed, and a higher percentage of [illegible] chicks live than of any other breed. More Leghorns can be kept in [illegible] space than any other class of poultry.

The world's egg-laying record is held by a white Leghorn, and in practically all egg-laying competitions white Leghorns win three out of the first six prizes. They are now excelling as winter layers, even when kept in open front houses. The modern white Leghorn is not to be confused with the Leghorn of some years back, as the laying strains are now developed into nice, plump birds, well fitted for the family table, some of the males weigh about five pounds. The city man cannot go wrong in getting some Leghorn chicks now, as the early hatched chicks are the sure winter layers. Be sure and get the laying strain, and have strictly new laid eggs at low cost, all winter and summer and a nice fowl on the table whenever you want it. If this matter is taken up as earnestly as it should be, it will relieve a large quantity of farm produce for export to Britain, where it is needed now, more than ever before.

SMART NEW BLOUSES

Some of the Favorites of the In coming Season

Spring and summer blouses show [illegible] worn by smart women.

Smocks for this summer [illegible] to be made up in fancy materials [illegible] rather than the plain solid colors of last year.

A separate blouse featured by the exclusive shops for the first time is the riding shirt. It is made up in soft wash silks and in linens, but in each instance has a fancy pleated bosom of [illegible].

Cotton fabrics promise to be more popular than the usual silk blouse fabrics, such as crepe de chine, silk shirtings and georgettes. Cotton "leaders" are voile, batiste and organdy. Suit blouses for the spring and early summer are to [illegible] the color of the suit or in one that [illegible] contrasts, and are to have touches of the suit fabric for trimming, thus making in effect three-piece suits.

While women may have a choice of [illegible] styles in blouses, that which most of the new models emphasize is practical [illegible] such as the sailor and the round cape effect. Some times [illegible] blouses are quite collarless, the neck finish consisting of simple stitching or cording, and in such instances usually being cut square or in a shallow [illegible]. A few blouses have high collars and an occasional flare collar is seen.

Thousands of voices were singing "Brighten the Corner Where You Are." Presently all one could hear was:

"Oh, Billy, it's fine to see you. Things are starting with a rush. Wait till you get a look at the Tabernacle. Wait till you see the crowd. You've got New York going already."

Then the police, a dozen big fellows especially detailed by Commissioner Woods to see to it that Billy didn't get all of his pep squeezed out of him in the progress from train to automobile, charged down the stairway, parted the crowd, ringed about the evangelist and fairly rushed him up the stairway to the gates of the rotunda. They took Billy across the immense room so fast that at first he didn't comprehend what a whopper of a reception New York was giving him. They fairly lifted him up the next flight of stairs, but there Billy halted them and turned to glance down upon the mass in the rotunda. His face was worth seeing at that moment, for probably he never looked happier in his life. The waiting crowd, packed so tightly that the vast concourse could scarcely have held another man or woman, was the tonic that Billy's nervousness needed. His spirit bloomed.

If the police hadn't been so intent on rushing him to his motor car, and if Ma Sunday, always intent on seeing that Billy doesn't squander energy unnecessarily, hadn't plucked at his elbow, he would have made a speech then and there. One could see a big talk forming on his lips. Down on the floor the crowd was saluting Chautauqualy and with regular, old fashioned yells, and Billy was Chautauqualing back and throwing kisses and dancing [illegible], regretting out loud that the police were [illegible] him away from "that good bunch."

In and around the Pennsylvania station there were probably 6,000 persons, crowded not only in the rotunda, but in the galleries and wherever footroom could be wrested from encroaching toes, and out in Seventh avenue and Thirty-second street. Presidents of the United States visiting New York seldom get the sort of reception that was accorded to the Rev. William Ashley Sunday.

NEW BOOKS

The Southern Society of New York has established as a permanent institution an annual prize of $500 for the best literary production by a Southerner.

The exact details of the competition have not yet been determined. They are now under consideration by a committee composed of Dr. John A. Wyeth, William A. Barber, and Walter L. McCorkle. It has already been decided that Dr. C. Alphonso Smith, a native of North Carolina, and now professor of English literature at the University of Virginia, will advise the society as to the qualifications of contestants, the judging of manuscripts, etc. Dr. Smith is an authority on Southern literature and is the author of the recently published biography of O. Henry.

Whether the competition will be opened to all natives of the South or only to those who actually reside there is one of the questions before the committee. Another one is: Must the contestants be under a certain age? It has been suggested that for the first year the selection for the prize winning production should be made from stories, poems and essays already published in reputable magazines and newspapers.

The amount of the prize for the first year has been donated by S. E. Herron, president of the New York Southern Society.

People who seek an interpretation of the sacrifice of youth and genius to the butchery of war had best read what Marice Rutledge has to say in her powerful novel, "Children of Fate." It is essentially the woman's point of view that is embodied in this story of war-stricken France—the idea of the conservation of human beings and the futility of destroying life. An American girl and her French lover, students in a Paris school of Architecture, are suddenly swept into the maelstrom of war, which seeks to turn their constructive energies into destructive vengeance. The working out of their destinies makes a story of gripping interest, in the telling of which the glamor of arms and the brilliancy of military uniform lose something of their splendor.

Capt. C. F. J. Galloway, whose interesting book on the Canadian Northwest, entitled "The Call of the West," has lately been published, has just written to his publishers from somewhere in France." He is captain of engineers and has a company doing good service on the western front. It is a far cry from his present dangerous duties to the free, happy days so well described in "The Call of the West."

THE MOVIES

Billie Burke has signed a two years' contract with the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and her first moving picture under this contract will be "The Mysterious Miss Terry," by Gelett Burgess. She will pose for the pictures during the summer and in the winter will appear on the regular stage in a new play under the direction of her husband and manager, F. Ziegfeld, jun.

The title of the new five-reel feature being made under the direction of Christie Cabanne, with Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the stellar roles, has changed from "The Voice of One" to "Cyclone Higgins, D. D." Bushman is playing the part of a travelling evangelist.

The suit of the Mutual Film Corporation against Abram Goodside for breach of contract has begun in the Supreme Court. According to the plaintiff company, Goodside entered into a contract to lease twelve Charlie Chaplin films for exhibition in his theatre, but presented only two and refused to display the remaining ten contracted for.

The General Film Co. of Canada, Ltd., has been organized to distribute in Canada the same product handled by the General Film Co. in the United States. Its headquarters will be in Montreal, with several branches throughout the Dominion.

Margaret Illington will make her first appearance in pictures when the photoplay "Sacrifice," written for her by Charles Kenyon, will be released by Lasky-Paramount in May.

Houdini, the famous vaudevillian, who liberates himself from shackles, tanks and sealed cells, has entered a contract with the Williamson Brothers to perform miracles in subsea pictures.

"A Romance of the Redwoods" is the title of the new Mary Pickford picture, which she has just made in California, under the direction of Cecil B. De Mille.

THE STAGE

Galsworthy's "The Fugitive," now in New York, is, as the reading public knows, a taut little tragedy conceived and written in the modern spirit on the same theme—that of woman's fight for the freedom of her soul. The heroine here, too, has come to look upon her prosaic husband as an awful thing to have about the place. After five years' trial, four of them a complete failure, she, too, rebels.

The husband in this instance is also mystified. And being a sensitive, self-centred Briton, he tries to avoid the break, not because of the love he bears his rebel wife, but because of the scandal her abandonment of her wifely responsibilities might cause. She insists, however, that she must go. Neither will she permit him to settle an allowance upon her. She cannot accept favors for which she does not give something in return.

She is encouraged in her stand for freedom by a writing chap. He is not a poet, however, and therefore, as lovers go, rather conservative. He does not ask her to come to him until her love for him is the determining factor. For a time the lady works as a clerk in a store. When this fails her she returns to the writing man and, their love for each other having awakened, they set up housekeeping.

When the crash comes, when the husband sues for his divorce and the disclosures threaten the lovers with failure, the poor little fugitive, hounded by her weakness as well as her husband's detectives, realizing the burden she is to the man she has come to love, leaves him rather than bring further trouble upon him. Months later, in a cheap restaurant, she tries to adopt the life defeated women are presumed to embrace. But the thought of it is too much for her; she empties a vial of poison into her first glass of champagne and dies.

Emily Stevens plays the heroine of the Galsworthy play, giving another of those exceptionally fine technical performances, exact and illuminating in detail, which are common with her. Edward Emery is the husband and Conway Tearle the writing person.

A play whose scene in New York is comparable only with that of "Experience" is "The Wanderer," but unlike the George V. Hobart modern morality in theme, yet of entirely different construction. Curiously enough, Elliott, Comstock and Gest, who are sponsors for "Experience," are the producers of "The Wanderer." This new play, with settings of ancient Biblical times, is the story of the prodigal son. However, in detail, the story is considerably different, and there is much elaboration of the scene that shows Jether, the wanderer, at the house of the luxurious and unscrupulous Naomi at Jerusalem. Revels of women who live but for the moment, the games of chance that adventurers conduct and an indulgence of the senses combine to make this scene most effective. Jether, cheated and robbed, is like Youth in "Experience," deserted by those held to be staunchest friends, and, stripped of garments, the prodigal is cast out to find his way, penniless, to any one who will give succor. Of course the prodigal son thinks of his parents, and to them, in rags, Jether returns. The elder brother, Gaal, is stern in his smug respectability, but mother love persuades the father to take back the erring son, and all that has been done by the wanderer is forgiven.

The new play is the attraction at the Manhattan Opera House in New York.

POETRY

FROM ONE WOMAN TO—ME.

She passed me on the street to-day:
Her dress was worn, her hair was gray;
The very shoes upon her feet
Were old and shabby. But her eyes
Were friendly as the springtime skies,
And, oh, her smile was kind and sweet!
She passed me on the street to-day.

She passed me on the street to-day,
And, as she passed, I felt a ray
Of sunlight touch my very heart.
I had been sad, and set apart
From other folk. I had been blue—
But when she passed with shabby grace,
I murmured, as I saw her face:
"If she can smile, why, I can too!"

She passed me on the street to-day,
A stranger woman, worn and gray;
Ah! poverty had touched her life;
Want she had felt, and care, and strife;
The very shoes upon her feet
Were ragged. But her smile was sweet,
And filled with cheer, and undefiled!
And I, if we two ever meet
Beside the shining throne on high,
Will lift my eyes to God and say,
With all the angels standing by—
"She passed me on the street, and smiled!"

—Margaret E. Sangster, Jr.

THE FRIENDLY MAN.

There's a man comes down our street;
he brings my mamma's mail;
An' every day I watch for him from inside our front rail.
'Cos he don't say, "Aw, ain't he cute!"
nor call me pretty names.
An' he don't tell me to be good an' say
"Be careful, James."
I'd love my ma a whole lot more if she'd just talk like him,
An' holler out, "Hello, old scout!" or else, "Good mornin', Jim!"

—Philadelphia Ledger.

TO A GARDEN.

Gethsemane—Gethsemane—
How like a soft breeze o'er the sea
Your name comes gently back to me.

Back from the hills of Galilee,
Back through the red year's panoply,
Through faith you sing of peace to be Gethsemane.

—Harold Speakman.

Hands Across the Sea

(By Horatio Bottomley, Editor of "John Bull.")

I have been asked to write a chapter for the forthcoming great book, "Canada in Khaki," and have done so. It was an easy and a grateful task—to pay some tribute, necessarily inadequate, to the glorious deeds of the glorious Canadians. In pre-war days I was not much of a friend to Canada, and I said all sorts of unkind things. I even questioned its devotion to the Motherland, and I did my best to discourage emigration. But never again. From to-day let no man disparage the great Dominion in my hearing—or there may be a breach of the peace!

* * *

And then there are the Anzacs—wonderful Anzacs, to some of whose time-enduring deeds I paid my tribute in these columns a year ago when writing of "The Ghosts of Gallipoli"; and the stout "Springboks" from South Africa, and the dusky sons of India—men, indeed, from every quarter of the Empire, who have rallied to the defence of the flag. It is a thrilling story—this story of Hands Across the Sea—to which some day the pens of poets may do justice. How can we ever repay our debt of gratitude to them?

* * *

But to-day I want to speak more particularly of our Australian and Canadian sons. I want to hold council with them—an informal Empire Conference of our own. I know there are questions simmering in their minds—questions calling for frank recognition, and yet easily answered. Let us be candid with each other—the bond of our common kinship shall be a guarantee of good faith. Well, to begin with, I know you are not quite satisfied with us. Perhaps you have been disappointed, although seeing us at our best. You have noticed something of our weakness as well as of our strength. You may have observed our wretched, puny, domestic contentions—even in the midst of war; and you know too well something of the sad mistakes, the tragic blunders, of which you have shared the bitter penalty. All this I freely admit. You have every right to be critical. You merit your rebuke, yet, with it all, you have never hesitated as to whether we were worth fighting for, have you? But wait a moment—you must not judge us harshly. You are flesh of our flesh, bone of our bone. And always remember, this is your war as much as ours—perhaps, indeed, even more than ours—for you are among the young nations of the earth; the future of our race rests largely in your hands.

* * *

It is now up to our military chiefs to remove as much as possible the small vexing Rules and Regulations which chafe the men born and bred in the big open spaces. The great hardships and terrible dangers, they never complain about—it is the little silly old-time Regulations which make such men discontented. Such Regulations belong to the old school of Parade and Pipeclay, when man millinery was of more importance than good tough fighting qualities. "Peace Without Victory" is not the Australians' wish, and if they are properly approached they will send us hundreds of thousands more men to keep the game going until Germany is crushed—for the Australians know that victory for us spells victory for them also.

* * *

And you, my Canadian friends. You, too, have your grievances. They are of a different character from those of our Australian contingent, but they are very real, all the same. There is no necessity to enlarge upon them; it is sufficient to say that we are alive to their reality, and that they are being remedied.

* * *

Just think, my comrades: your sturdy national life, your system of government, your traditions of polity, are the very antithesis of the Prussian idea—which is a menace to your national existence. If you had stood out of this conflict, and if—a very big if, I admit—we had been worsted, you would have paid a bitter penalty. You are fighting for ideals which are our common heritage: for principles which are the bone and sinew of our common life; for freedom and all that freedom means; in a sentence, you are fighting for every sacred thing you think of when you speak of "Home." You, Canadians, are fighting that the German invader shall never befoul your soil. And you, Australians, to free the Commonwealth from the canker of Hunnish intrigue. And you, my "Springbok" friends, to preserve for South Africa the rights of self-government and of free development. And you, my Indian warriors, for the glory of the great Emperor.

* * *

So come, boys, one and all—Hands Across the Sea. Join us in this great task. Remember, you could never have lived comfortably in the same world with an unconquered Germany. Robbed of the proud protection of the British fleet, you would have been at the mercy of a ruthless maritime foe; and, take it from me, "Peace Without Victory" would never have been Germany's motto. By your sterling devotion, your unquenchable patriotism—your matchless valor and your firm endurance—you have assisted us, as we have assisted you, to avoid such a calamity; and so, once more, let us join hands across the sea, in mutual trust and confidence and resolution.

OYSTER RECIPES

OYSTER TODDLE.

Oyster toddle is a kind of chowder. Chop a quarter of a pound of fat salt pork and cook slowly until well dried out. Add two cupfuls of sliced raw potatoes, cover and cook in the fat until very tender. Pour in two cupfuls of hot milk and cook five minutes. Thicken with one teaspoonful of flour worked into one teaspoonful of butter. Add three cupfuls washed oysters, salt and pepper to taste; remove from fire as soon as oysters ruffle. Serve hot with crackers.

SURPRISE OYSTERS.

Cook four medium size potatoes until done, mash and season with salt, pepper, butter and a little parsley. Scald a dozen oysters in their liquor, then drain. Take up enough potato when rolled to be about the size of an egg, make cavity in one end, insert oysters, fill in cavity, dip in beaten egg, roll in cracker crumbs, and fry in deep fat until a golden brown. Serve while hot. This is nourishing and digestible.

OYSTER PADDIES.

To one pint of mashed potatoes, add one beaten egg and a little minced onion; form into cakes, split cakes with sharp knife, lay two or three oysters on lower part, and replace top. Bake in moderately hot oven until paddies are brown, garnish with parsley.

TEN THOUSAND POUNDS FROM PURE-BRED AYRSHIRES

How a Firm of Dairymen Near Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Are Making Good in Winter Dairying—Their Methods of Management Explained.

(By A. J. Campbell.)

A farmer who was trying to sell a cow represented the animal as a "[illegible] cow" to the prospective purchaser, who thereupon asked: "How much milk does she give?" "Oh, I don't know. I never measured it," replied the farmer. "But she's a nice kind cow. If she's got any milk at all she'll give it to you."

A visitor to the dairy farm of Andrew McRae & Sons at East Royalty, near Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, was told this story. It represents the haphazard system of farming once prevalent in the Maritimes, but now passing away unregretted, except, perhaps, by a few lovers of the picturesque. It is true that artists' pictures of rural life seldom portray the separator, and bucolic poems are silent about the Babcock test. At the same time a visit to any of the leading dairy farms of the Island reveals the fact that efficiency may go hand in hand with all the attractiveness of old order.

Messrs. Andrew McRae & Sons began to specialize in dairying in 1906. They have a herd of sixteen pure-bred Ayrshires on their farm of 120 acres.

The McRae's pin their faith to the Ayrshire, the pride of the Scottish breeder. "We believe the Ayrshire to be admirably suited to grazing conditions," they said. "She belongs to a hardy, vigorous breed, quick and active, and withstands adverse conditions admirably. She has a vigorous appetite and gives a good account of her food. She is a persistent milker and transmits her good qualities to her offspring. We find that the Ayrshire milk may be turned at will either into the finest cheese or the choicest butter, while as a market milk none excels it. The fat globules are small in size and hence the milk stands transportation admirably."

The native cows of the McRae herd yield an average of 10,000 pounds yearly, giving an average of 400 pounds of butter fat; the heifers yield from 7,000 to 8,000 pounds, with an average of from 200 to 250 butter fat. The milk is separated and the cream sold to the creamery at from 26 to 32 cents for fat.

The herd are on pasture from June 1st to October 31st. The pasture feed is supplemented by green feeds. If the price warrants, a small amount, up to two pounds, of cotton seed meal is fed to the heaviest producers according to yield. In winter the cows are fed the usual quantities of hay, roots and ensilage, together with a meal ration of oats, barley, bran and oil cake mixed according to price and fed at the rate of about one pound to every four pounds of milk given. Every effort is made to have the cows in prime condition at the time of freshening, but two weeks before that time all heating feed is cut off. After freshening the cow is fed for a week chiefly on roots and bran, and then is gradually brought out into the full meal ration.

The rule of one pound of meal to every four pounds of milk is not, of course, followed in the treatment of the young cow, as she has to produce bone and flesh as well as milk. After the first freshening the heifer is fed on a bran mash, and if the weather is cold all chill is taken from her drink. After ten days her feed is increased gradually and as soon as possible she is fed well and milked hard. She is developed all that is possible during the first year and she is milked for the full twelve months during the that period.

The calves are allowed to get one good fill of first milk and are then taken from their mothers. They are fed whole milk for a month and then gradually put on a mixture of separator milk and a gruel made by soaking oil cake in cold water for some hours. This gruel is warmed before being given. The calves are fed three times daily. The bull calves are sold at prices ranging from $50 to $500. The surplus heifers are sold when fit for service. The heifers retained are bred when two years old.

The soil of the McRae farm is for the most part a sandy loam, and under a judicious rotation has been kept at full strength. Last year the farm produced 1,200 bushels of potatoes, 8,000 bushels of roots, 300 bushels oats, 100 bushels of barley, 112 tons of corn, 60 bushels of wheat, 32 tons of clover and 40 tons of timothy. In addition eleven acres were utilized for the growth of oats, peas and vetches, corn and white turnips, which were cut and fed in a green state. The soiling crops are sown from May 1st to July 1st.

For some time a five-year rotation was followed, but finally it was decided that this system was too slow for high-priced land. Now a four-year rotation is practised. First year, corn and roots; second year, grain; third year, clover; fourth year, timothy and pasture. Pasture land is summer fallowed for roots, and the corn is grown on sod that has been manured early in the spring, and the grass plowed under about the first of June. From twelve to sixteen tons of stable manure per acre are applied to the corn land. Potato land is treated to from eight to twelve tons, supplemented by 200 pounds of super-phosphate and 250 pounds of sulphate of potash, and occasionally fifty pounds of nitrate of soda. The area devoted to roots is given from sixteen to twenty tons of stable manure and about 450 pounds super-phosphate per acre. In normal times the super-phosphate costs the firm $22 and the sulphate $26.

Messrs. McRae believe that fresh air, light and warmth and comfort are essential to animal health. They also hold that the extent to which these requisites are supplied will largely determine the measure of success attained by any dairyman. Their cows are well stabled with plenty of light and ventilation. The stalls are made thoroughly comfortable for the animals. A large quantity of straw is bought every year for bedding. A covered manure shed stands beside the stable, but most of the manure is hauled direct to the fields and placed in long, low heaps, which are kept well tramped down. Two large silos stand beside the barn and are filled to overflowing every autumn.

Thirty Berkshire and Tamworth hogs are marketed yearly at an average weight of 175 pounds. The pork was sold last year at eleven and one-half cents the pound. The hogs are fed all they can consume of roots, shorts, home-grown grains and skimmed milk.

"I believe in winter dairying," said the head of this enterprising firm. "Our cows as a rule freshen in the fall, from September to December. As a result of this we are able to devote more of our time to their care. We also obtain higher prices for our milk and milk products and we find that we get actually more pounds of milk from fall freshening than from spring freshening. Moreover, fall calves are very much more easily raised than spring calves. It must be remembered that the heat, dry pasture and the fly pests of July and August cut down production, and in our experience offset the low cost of production when the succulent grasses of June are available. It is difficult and expensive to handle milk during the hot summer weather, not to mention the extra trouble involved in the constant effort to keep all dairy utensils clean and sweet. It seems to me the advantage of winter dairying is so apparent that arguments in its favor ought to be unnecessary. If it were more generally adopted our province would be in a position to produce more and superior milk from a higher grade of dairy cows. I for one am firmly of the opinion that dairying is and shall be the mainstay and salvation of the farms of this Island.

What Is Wrong With the Railroads?

(By E. J. Chamberlin, President Grand Trunk Railway System.)

You ask, "What is wrong with the railroads?" The reply in one word is "war." Although we are removed from the scene of actual hostilities by thousands of miles, war conditions prevail on this continent as they do in Europe. The conflict has wrought great changes in our industrial life. A strain has been placed upon the whole fabric of business that has tested it to the breaking point. The conditions that obtain to-day in our great industries were undreamt of before the war, and the railroads cannot be blamed if they failed to see the coming of the conflict. It fell like a thunder clap upon the civilized world, and each month has brought an increase in the severity of its effects. The period immediately before the opening of hostilities was marked by a tremendous decline in railroad traffic. Net revenues fell to the vanishing point. There were tens of thousands of idle freight cars and hundreds of idle locomotives. The confidence of investors in railroad securities had been so shaken by the persistent and successful efforts of various bodies to prevent the roads from earning a fair payment for the transportation service rendered that new capital was well nigh impossible to obtain. Without the necessary capital it was impossible for the railroads to proceed with plans for developing facilities and improving the transportation mechanism to meet uncertain future needs. The railroads were geared to handle efficiently the business offering. They have been called upon, however, during the past two years to carry a burden of a magnitude that would previously have been considered outside the realms of possibility.

When the time comes to measure up what the railways have done during this time of abnormal stress, it will be freely admitted that our transportation systems have accomplished wonderful work in the face of appalling difficulties.

Complaint is made that the railroads have from time to time, in commercial parlance, got behind with their orders. Is there any branch of productive activity, engaged in war work, that has been able to meet the full demands made upon it? Every possible agency of production is being used, calling for masses of material of all descriptions to be gathered together at every centre of population. The railroads have carried in greater volume than ever before the raw materials for manufacture and have then faced the task of moving the immense tonnage of finished products in a steady stream towards the seaboard. The pressure from the manufacturing centres for supplies has been without any let-up, and Imperial needs have demanded that all munitions, etc., consigned overseas be moved immediately. The efficiency of the railroads in handling this great eastbound export traffic has been controlled by ocean shipping conditions. These have naturally been irregular owing to the shortage of ships. The result has been that every railway terminal has become congested with export freight awaiting the clearing up of the situation at the ocean point of loading. Days have passed at many of the greatest ports on the Atlantic seaboard when there has not been a single vessel on hand to receive cargo. Such a situation ties up thousands of cars and prevents the free use of the terminals for internal movement. Railway terminals, unfortunately, are not elastic, and with such conditions prevailing delays to traffic were unavoidable. It must also be considered that the bulk of the traffic has been eastward without an equivalent movement west.

The remarkable increase in Canada's business may be gathered by a glance at these export and import reports.

Canada's Exports.

1916	$1,091,706,403
1915	614,129,846
Increase in 1916	$ 477,577,557

Canada's Imports.

1916	$766,727,[illegible]
1915	452,71[illegible]
Increase in 1916	$312,[illegible]

This increased national business has meant a large addition to the freight tonnage of the railways. While the demands upon the roads have been ever increasing, the amount of labor available for the railways has been away under normal and has steadily declined. Thousands of our skilled employees have answered the empire's call and gone overseas, and the reserve has not been able to fill the gaps in the railroad ranks.

The interests of the railroads and the public are identical, and the present situation should serve to emphasize the necessity of allowing the railroads to carry on their business in a manner that will allow of continuous development in order to keep up with the increasing needs of transportation. The railroads need:

Greater terminal facilities.
More side tracks.
More double tracks.
More equipment.

Under a burden of increased expenses the railroads are continuing to give service at the rates that were too low when all classes of supplies and labor could be obtained at much lower prices than is possible to-day. The assumption that, because of the abnormal volume of traffic offering, the railroads are not entitled to a revision of their tariffs will lead to a continuance of the conditions which are now complained of. The railroads must be allowed to earn a net income sufficient to pay fair dividends if they are to obtain the new capital necessary to create greater facilities and give the service that the public demands. Investors will in the future look for larger returns upon their capital, and just so long as railroads are restricted to earnings which are lower than those obtained by the generality of industrial enterprises, the railways will continue to find grave difficulties in providing necessary new works to keep abreast the industrial expansion, and the business life of the community will be menaced by a return of these periods of acute congestion.

The welfare of the railroads is of national importance, and the selfish interests of no one section or class should be allowed to interfere with their proper development along sound lines.—Maclean's Magazine, April, 1917.

One Better.

An Irishman was struck by a golf ball.

"Are you hurt?" asked the player. "Why didn't you get out of the way?"

"An' why should I get out of the way?" asked Pat. "I didn't know there was any assassins round here."

"But I called 'fore,'" said the player, "and when I say 'fore' that is a sign for you to get out of the way."

"Oh, it is, is it?" said Pat. "Well, thin, whin I say 'foive' it is a sign that you are going to get hit on the nose. 'Foive!'"—Exchange.

NECKWEAR NOVELTIES

If possible, neckwear receives even more attention in the spring than in the summer, possibly because the dark suit needs enlivening and also because interest in these accessories has been more or less dormant throughout the winter.

Be that as it may, the neckwear counter is always a spring centre of interest, and at this time of the year it invariably puts its "best foot" foremost.

And the first thing that strikes the sartorial eye is the collection of bright, gay "wild," new vests. They are for wear with sports jackets or tailored suits, and are usually of some heavy sports silks in more or less flaming colors. Attached to each is a sailor collar of the same material, that is to be worn outside of the jacket.

Then there are silk collars with matching sashes, guaranteed to give even the plainest of suits the fashionable sports flavor, not to speak of the silk collars of heavy sports silk having at least two Bakst designs in the Russian ballet colorings.

High stocks of net with prodigious bibs that spread from side to side and extend almost to the belt line are now the thing. They're charming, too. The filmy material will soften even the most severe frock, especially the tailored blue serges for spring street wear, or even the tailored suit; and this softening charm extends to the faces of even the most hatchet-chinned ladies.

Huge sailor collars are there, usually having deep V's, often so deep that they have a little cross piece at the front—modesty piece.

There is noticeably more lace trimming upon neckwear and less embroidery. Filet lace is especially favored upon the smartest models. There are, too, satin pique sports collars. They are much like those soft collars worn by men during the summer, but are not fastened so tightly about the throat. Each, when bought, is accompanied by a gay Windsor tie, and they cost in the neighborhood of $1.50 so paired off.

Many Women Suffer From Pains in the Back.

When the back begins to ache it is a sure sign that there is something radically wrong with the kidneys.

What you want is a kidney medicine. Doan's Kidney Pills are not a cure-all, but a medicine for the kidneys only.

Mrs. L. Melanson, Plympton, N.S., writes: "I am sending you this testimonial, telling you what a wonderful cure Doan's Kidney Pills made for me. For years I had suffered so with my kidneys I could hardly do my housework. I used several kinds of pills, but none of them seemed to be doing me any good. At last I was advised to try a box of Doan's Kidney Pills. When I had taken the first box I found relief. I have used five boxes and to-day I feel like a new woman. I cannot recommend them too highly."

Doan's Kidney Pills bear the trade mark of a Maple Leaf and are put up in an oblong grey box. See that you get "Doan's" when you ask for them.

Price 50c. a box, 3 for $1.25, at all dealers, or mailed direct on receipt of price by The T. Milburn Co., Limited, Toronto, Ont.

When ordering direct specify "Doan's."

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—The spring retail trade continues to broaden out. Some dry goods wholesalers report that business shows signs of tapering off, but add that payments due April 4th were fairly well met. The leather trade is firmer. The hide market is also slightly stronger. Groceries are moderately active with the sugar market very strong at advances that total 45 cents per cwt. within the last eight days. Canned goods are firm and stocks are becoming depleted, while general advances have been made on teas.

Montreal—In wholesale circles the movement is described as fair, and in some quarters there is a feeling that the pinnacle of the high price movement has been reached. In grocery lines there is a fair movement, with marked strength in the sugar market and with prices higher than have ever been known in the history of the trade. The leather trade is rather slow, but hides are firm. City collections are fair.

Ottawa—Retail trade in dry goods and men's and women's wear was good at Easter and very satisfactory reports were given out by retailers. Collections are fair to good.

Hamilton—Preparations for spring retail business have already been rewarded with a brisk demand for seasonable goods for Easter trade, and although rather cold weather has since weakened the demand for spring goods, retailers are confident as to the future. Good sorting orders are being received by wholesale houses. Wash goods have not started to move in any volume yet, but wholesalers are certain of a healthy demand if warm weather is experienced early in the season. The trade in house furnishings and carpet is [illegible] active, even at the high prices, and linoleums are also moving out well. Cottons and flannelettes are also selling fairly well. A nice business is being done in seasonable hardware lines, especially rakes, hoes, etc., and the wholesale trade is fair, with spring orders still going out. Groceries are fair, with the sugar market very strong at 45 cents advance on quotations given in the previous report at $8.38 for granulated. Drygoods houses report that the spring payments due April 4th, came in fairly well, and general collections give ground for little complaint.

London—Trade in western Ontario is retarded by the condition of the country roads. This has been reflected in a curtailment of the movement of travellers who are on the road with spring samples, and also in the matter of collections, which, however, are still reported as fair. Retail trade reports for the Easter season indicate that a very satisfactory business was done, and wholesalers feel that trade will hold up well during the coming months.

Winnipeg—Mercantile trade generally is better than usual. Wholesale trade is fair, with fall orders already beginning to come in. The outlook is good. Hardware lines are reported to be active in seasonable lines.

Calgary—Business prospects in the Prairie Provinces are bright. Both wholesale and retail lines have experienced a good trade, and reports from Edmonton, Regina, Moosejaw and Medicine Hat merely serve to confirm local estimates.

Vancouver—British Columbia trade shows increases over last year in practically every line. Collections are reported as fair.

Co-eds at the University of Wisconsin have found that they can live on on 35 cents a day. Many of 'em will find, after marriage and motherhood, that they will have to do so, which, of course, is different.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Had Severe Cold ON HER LUNGS.

RAISED PHLEGM AND BLOOD.

Never neglect what at first seems to be but a slight cold. You think perhaps you are strong enough to fight it off, but colds are not so easily fought off in this northern climate, and if they are not attended to at once will sooner or later develop into some serious lung trouble such as bronchitis, pneumonia, and perhaps that dreadful disease, consumption.

Miss Kasye McDonald, Sydney Mines, N.S., writes: "Last winter I contracted a severe cold, and it settled on my lungs. I would cough and raise phlegm and blood. I had the cough for a month, and had medicine from the doctor, but it did not seem to do me any good. I really thought I had consumption.

My friends advised me to use Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup, which I did, and it gave me great relief. I am very glad I used 'Dr. Wood's,' and would recommend it to every one."

You can procure Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup from any druggist or dealer, but be sure and get "Dr. Wood's," when you ask for it as there are a number of imitations on the market, which some dealers may try to palm off on you as the genuine.

See that it is put up in a yellow wrapper, three pine trees is the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

THE best way to help lower brices is to raise something.

+ + +

THE Owen Sound Advertiser says there are councillors in that town that object to being classed with Bob Rogers. After all, is there not some credit and respect coming to them?

+ + +

THE true standing of an editor is being appreciated after death, if not before. A lawyer sent the following words of consolation to a widow: "I cannot tell you how pained I was to hear that your husband has gone to heaven. We were bosom friends but we can never meet again."

+ + +

THE Cleveland Leader, for example, [illegible]:—In porportion to population and resources, the United States, to achieve what Canada has done, must raise an army of 7,000,000 men within two and a half years, put 5,000,000 of them in actual war service and produce war funds amounting to $12,000,000,000. Probably this country will not be called upon to bear proportionately, as heavy sacrifices as Canada has willingly assumed, but the example they afford ought to have a stiffening effect upon the American people in what lies before them.

+ + +

J. OGORN ARMOUR, the famous meat packer, of Chicago, urges the United States government to take over all the wheat the farmers can produce, guaranteeing them $1.50 per bushel. He says if this is not done his country will find itself next fall and winter in the same condition as European countries. The government [illegible] the prices, and let everyone produce. Mr. Armour, strange to say, also advocates that the government introduce two meatless days a week, and put it in force at once. The war is doing wonderfull things. Here is a celebrated meat packer advocating people to cut off eating so much meat.

MR. CHOATE, former U. S. ambassador to England, urges the United States to prepare for three years of war. This is hard for Canadians to believe, and we all hope that it may not be so. Mr. Choate points out that at the beginning of the war there were many to advise Lord Kitchener that the war would only last three months, but he went on preparing. Mr. Choate argues that if Germany should get good crops this year, they will stiffen up for further hardships. The Germans fear defeat more than they fear anything else, and their feelings will be played up to the greatest possible degree by the autocracy.

"PLEASE state to the court exactly what you did between eight and nine o'clock on Wednesday morning," said a lawyer to a delicate looking little woman on the witness stand. "Well," she said, after a moment's reflection, "I washed my two children and got them ready for school, and sewed a button on Johnny's coat, and mended a rent in Nellie's dress. Then I tidied up the sitting-room and watered my house plants and glanced over the morning paper. Then I dusted my parlour and set things to rights in it, and washed my lamp chimneys and bruched my baby's hair and sewed a button on one of her shoes, and then I swept out the front entry, and brushed and put away the children's Sunday clothes, and wrote a note to Johnny's teacher asking her to excuse him for not being at school on Friday. Then I fed my canary bird and gave the groceryman an order and swept off the back porch, and rested a few minutes before the clock struck nine. That's all."—Perth Expositor.

THE Western farmers are thoroughly organized, industrially and commercially as well as politically. The result is that they get what they want. They want free wheat, and after struggling for six years to prevent it, the Government surrenders. "Yet because this widow troubleth me I will avenge her, lest by her continualing troubling she weary me." Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta will have forty-three votes in the next House of Commons. But even that would not have availed if the farmers had not been organized. There is a lesson here for Ontario farmers. The rural population of Ontario is nearly 1,260,000 as against 592,000 in the Western wheat Provinces. If they would combine and organize they would control more seats, exercise more political power, than the farmers of the West. They could make Ottawa sit up and listen, if they would stand together. A movement for union is now in progress, and if carried on vigorously it may create some surprises for politicians.—Toronto Star.

On-Cart Rides

The Kincardine Review tells of a span of oxen pulling a lumber wagon through the streets of that town a few days ago. The owner, Mr. Ed. Forrester, had as his chauffeur Mr. R. A. Pollock, who for the time being was the cynosure of every eye, also incurring the envious glances of erstwhile shoppers, who might be mere possessors of a Reo or a Ford.

Best I Ever Used

ANGUS SIMESON, Sarnia, Ontario, says:

"I have used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer and want to tell you that it is the best fertilizer I ever used, both on my onions and beets and potatoes."

Results Were Wonderful

WM. PACH, Lambeth, Ontario, says:

"I purchased Homestead Fertilizer from H. Hamlyn, Lambeth, merely as a test. The results were wonderful. The ground between the rows was covered by the tops. The yield was extra good. I can easily see how anybody would be greatly benefited by using Homestead Fertilizer."

Well Pleased

JOE MOSSEAU, Belle River, Ontario, says:

"I used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer last Spring on my potatoes, and am so well pleased that I must write you about same. I made a thorough test with two bushels and where I did not fertilize they were a failure."

Three Times The Crop

CLARENCE RALF, Orwell, Ontario, says:

"I bought some Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer from Charles Minard, and used it on part of my onions. Where I used it, I had three times the crop I had where there was no Fertilizer, my corn was the same."

Y M C A CAMPAIGN

Citizens Committee Out to Raise $2000 in Walkerton by One Day Canvass, Tuesday, May 8.

Mr. Henry Yeigh, representing the National Council of the Y. M. C. A. was here on Friday for the purpose of organizing a campaign in this community to raise funds for the Overseas Work of the Y. M. C. A. A meeting was held in the Council Chamber in the evening, with Mayor Johnston in the Chair, at which it was unanimously decided to put on a campaign here to raise $2,000 by a one day's canvass on Tuesday, May 8th. The previous night, Monday, May 7th, Lieut. Trivitt, a returned soldier, will give a public lecture in the Town Hall, on the work of the "Y" at the Front. Lieut Trivitt, was a student at Wycliffe College before the War. He enlisted as a private with the Princess Pats and was in much hard fighting in which he won his promotion to a lieutenancy. He is now invalided home and is telling from actual knowledge something of the important work that the Y. M. C. A. is doing over there. He is a capital speaker and every citizen should be out next Monday night to hear him.

Mr. Yeigh, who is promoting campaigns in the various municipalities, has been an official of the National Council for many years. He is an elder brother of Mr. Frank Yeigh, the well-known lecturer and author of that little book, "Five Thousand Facts About Canada." His heart is in the work and his enthusiasm infects every body he meets. He told of what the organization was accomplishing in the way of furnishing free material, hot drinks, operating canteens, furnishing athletic supplies, providing for free entertainments, attending to the religious needs of the men, and a score of other things, the tendency of which is to keep up the morale and the fighting spirit of the Canadian forces.

"Last year," he stated, "it took $400,000 to do this work and this year we will require three quarters of a million."

Mr. Yeigh was favorably impressed with the attitude of the local men with whom he came in contact and predicted a successful campaign.

He told of the magnificent work that some of the larger towns and cities are doing for the "Y." Walkerton could not expect to do as well as some but we could profit by their example. He illustrated the point by a good yarn about a little boy who had to depend on a "banty" hen for his egg for breakfast while his older brother had a hen that laid big ones. The little fellow saw an immense ostrich egg in a window one day. Bought it, took it home and put it in front of the bantam's nest with this inscription;—"Keep your eye on this and do the best you can."

On motion of David Robertson and John McCool it was decided to make the objective $2,000.

Mr. D. Robertson was elected Chairman of the Campaign Committee and Mr. Geo. D. McKay, sec-treas.

ROAST FOR SOMEBODY

A Walkerton boy now in France writes the Telescope:—

Have just finished reading "The Telescope" of Feb. 15th, and in reference to a paragraph on page 1 of that issue headed "Breakfast in France" I would like to know if that paragraph was meant as a comedy or as a tragedy. If it was the former, the writer made a huge success but if it was the latter, the war has either had a great effect on his mental abilities or the issue of rum has materially increased his imaginative powers. It was so amusing I read it to my pals in this tent and if the writer of that article had heard the opinions passed on his mental abilities, he would certainly write no more epistles home. He reminds me of a certain private in our company who, although he had never been within twenty miles of the line, had written home telling of how the rum jars were whizzing past his ear and and that he could get a better footing going over the top this week since it had frozen up. That wet wood, he had such a time in finding was really wonderful. We are burning wet wood in our tent here right now and there is no danger of it ever burning bacon. I think that one of his pals must have been a miner to get those mess tins out of a foot of mud and one a surveyor to get the ground levelled again.

Well, to leave this poor fellow alone, let me say a word or two about how things are going. It is raining outside to-day so we are all sitting in our tent with a good warm fire writing.

On Sunday I took a stroll to try to find Art Farrer but as usual I missed him as he was away for a bath. However I did see Chester Cunningham, Teddy Wilhelm and Henry Von Hatten on the way over besides several Chesley boys. On the way home I met Frank Taggart so I consider I did fairly well for one day. Then on on Tuesday I tried to locate Art again but his battalion had moved back to do some training so missed him as per usual. However I did see Levi Miller, Alf Tolton, "Squee" Huck and Bert Cartwright, and we had supper with the latter two. I omitted to mention that Wilfred Yaeck was with me. He is in the same row of tents as I am in our little camp, about six tents down so I see him often.

I hear quite often from Joe Rennie, Norm Hibbert and Jack Rowland and hope to see them soon. Lou Honey is just about a mile from here. He was decorated with the Military Medal the other day for good work on two raids on this front.

Well I must quit and get my "mulligan" for dinner. If that other fellow did have his breakfast spoiled by rain and mud I had mine in bed this morning and I consider it "the best war I was ever in."

A BRANTFORD SLATE. 1.—Fibre Base. 2.—First coating of Asphaltum. 3.—Second coating of Asphaltum. 4.—Coating of crushed slate.

Yesterday and To-day

Wooden shingles of twenty or thirty years ago were of splendid quality, and answered the purpose very well. There was nothing better at that time. In fact no other roofing material was on the market. Yet who would think of putting on shingles to-day? When the deterioration of wooden shingles became noticeable, efforts were made to invent a roofing that would not only be an economical and permanent substitute for wooden shingles, but one that would outlast them in service.

Brantford Roofing was the result. It has "made good." The secret of its success is this: First, the base is of pure, long-fibred felt which is thoroughly saturated with asphalt or mineral pitch. The asphalt and crystal roll roofings are then thickly coated with crushed rock particles, which adhere tightly to that base, and the whole forms a permanent fireproof, water-tight roof.

Brantford Asphalt and Rubber Roofing are made in three different weights. Crystal is made in heavy weight only, and in red or green natural colors. All three grades are pliable and well suited to either flat or steep roofs.

Brantford Roofing

comes in rolls with protected ends. The layers do not stick together and the roofing is easily laid. It requires no painting or tarring when put on. It does not crack with the cold nor melt with the summer's heat. It does not curl, split, rust or blow off. It gives permanent weather and fire protection at a reasonably low initial cost.

May we send you our roofing book and samples? They will show you the real value of these roofing materials.

POETS' CORNER

HER "ALLOWANCE!"

'Er looked at me bonnet (I knows 'e aint new!)
'Er turned up 'er nose at the patch on me shoe!
And 'er sez, pointed like, "Lize, what do 'e do
With yer 'llowance?"
'Er looked at the children (they'm clean and they'm neat,
But their clothes be as plain as the victuals they eat):
And 'er sez, "Why not dress 'em fine for a treat
With yer allowance?"
I sees 'er long feather and trimmy-up gown:
I sez, as I looks 'er quite square up and down,
"Do 'e think us keeps 'oliday 'ere in the town
With my 'llowance?"
"Not likely!" I sez. And I bids 'er Good-day!"
And I kneels on the shabby old canvas to pray
For Bill, who's out fightin' such brave miles away,
(And I put back a few o' they coins for a' may
Be needin' a part—may my Bill—who can say?—
Of my 'llowance!)

DIDN'T ADVERTISE.

An advertising manager at a Sphinx club dinner in New York told an advertising story.

"A man," he said, "entered a shop one bitter cold day, and bought a woolen muffler. When he opened the muffler he found inside the photograph of a beautiful girl, together with a note saying:

"If you are single, please write to me."

"A name and address followed and the man smiled. He was single and he put the photograph on his sitting-room mantel. There every evening looking up from his book, he beheld it. It was very beautiful, and in a week he had fallen head over heels in love.

"So he wrote the girl. Another week of anxious suspense. Then the lovesick man received this crushing letter:

"Sir,—The Mary Smith to whom you wrote was my grandmother. She died nine years ago, aged 86. Yours truly."

"Our heartbroken bachelor, on looking into this strange matter, found that he'd foolishly bought the muffler from a dealer that did not advertise."

Be Generous
According to Your Means

Be Generous!

VAINLY do we endeavour to realize the terrible hardships of army life which Tommy endures so bravely for our sake. Try to imagine yourself, after a weary march of many miles, hurried into the firing line; picture those terrible days and watchful nights amid the rushing of "whizz-bangs" and screaming "coal-boxes;" those weary, trying hours of tense nervous strain and extreme physical enduranco that test men's very souls. Meanwhile Grim Death stalks alert and ready—always!

After those boys of priceless worth have withstood the strain, thankful are they to be alive, thankful for the bit of strength left to get them back to lonely billets, but with still the merry jest in spite of all! Are they not ready for a bit of extra relief which you can provide? What magnificent heroes! And yet all this is but their routine duty! What of the strain and terrors of actual battle! Where is the man or woman in all Canada who could withhold from them one single comfort! Unthinkable!

"Do you know what 'fed up' means? Ask the Tommy who has spent seven days in the trenches in the wet and cold. Come into a bright and cheery Y.M.C.A. 'hut' for two or three hours before going to that billet of yours in some barn—then place your value on the work of the Y.M.C.A."

Help the Y.M.C.A. to help the soldiers

On your behalf, for the welfare of your boys in that vast line of military camps from Vancouver to the firing line in France, the Y.M.C.A. Military Service Department spent about $50,000.00 during the period from August, 1914, to April, 1916. It was far from enough to go around.

During the ten months ending January 31st, 1917, the sum of $332,191.67 has been used. The financial report is now available for your inspection. For the coming year, with upwards of half a million of our precious Canadian boys now in uniform, this sum must be doubled this year. We need your help to cope with the immense task we now face. We have every confidence in your generosity towards our boys. We must provide for them, not only in England and France, but in Military Camps all over Canada. Your boy must be started right!

If you are one of those who fondly hope for the end of this horrible war in 1917, please remember this: When the spectre of Death retreats from the battlefields, it will take many months to transport millions of men from the continent to England and Canada. The Y.M.C.A.'s task will be vaster than ever. For then will arise in greater menace and strength than ever that other dangerous spectre—Temptation.

A British workman donated a lifetime's savings in grateful appreciation. The poor widow sends her mite. The soldier sends part of his pay. One officer sent $50; another sent $100 from France, "being a donation of the officers, N.C.O.'s and men of the unit as an expression of appreciation of splendid work." We ask you, for the sake of your boys be generous according to your means.

Some Suggestions:

$7,500 will erect and furnish large hut in England. $6,000 will erect, but not furnish, large hut in England. $2,000 will erect, but not furnish, small "hut" (25 ft. x 100 ft.) in France. $1,500 will maintain special Y.M.C.A. evangelists among the troops for six months. $500 will furnish small "hut" (25 ft. x 100 ft.) in France.

Many "huts" in France bear the names of dead heroes. These huts were built as memorials.

A PUZZLING CASE

"Major Granby, let us sit on this bench. There! give me your hand. Now, though I am blind, I can tell if you are speaking the truth. Begin."

"About what, Miss Maxwell?"

"Tell me about this law case. This murder. Who is murdered?"

"Marietta Mazzucata."

She tore her hand from my grasp, and covered her face with a cry of anguish. For a few moments she continued thus, then motioned to me to continue.

"Shall I go on, Miss Maxwell?"

"Go on."

"Mazzucata, as you know, is a singer, and was engaged to be married to my friend, Sir Gilbert Tressilinger. On the sixth of May, Mazzucata arrived in London. On the twelfth she received the token of Black Carnation, warning her that she was to die. On the sixteenth she was killed on the stage of Covent Garden Opera House by means of a dynamite cartridge concealed in a bouquet of white flowers with a Black Carnation in the centre."

Miss Maxwell sat as though turned into stone, then suddenly snatching her hands away from her face, broke into a hysterical laugh.

"Oh! it is horrible, horrible!"

"It is horrible," I asserted, gravely, "both for Mazzucata and Gilbert."

"What, the lover? Is he dead also!"

"No, but he is at present in prison on suspicion of causing the death of Mazzucata."

She arose to her feet with a cry of horror.

"An innocent man an innocent man!"

"I know he is innocent but how do you know?"

"I cannot tell, I cannot tell. Oh! great heavens, how terrible."

Her agitation was truly pitiable, and many a man would have called for assistance, but I am too well used to women to be unprepared for such hysterical exhibitions, and promptly produced a bottle of smelling salts, which I always carry in case of emergencies. Thrusting this into her hands, I gave her time to recover herself which, with the assistance of the salt, she did speedily.

"Major Granby," she said at length, in a voice very much exhausted by emotion, "I am glad you told me all as you have done. I was completely ignorant of this matter, and am surprised that my father did not tell me about it."

"He perhaps wished to spare you pain."

Miss Maxwell's lip curled.

"I don't think so," she answered, quietly. "Oh! never fear, major, I understand my father too well. He has no love for me; it is his flowers he cares for, and particularly for that Black carnation."

"Which, by the way, seems to be very much mixed up in this case."

"Yes, I cannot understand it."

"Do you think Signor Ivan took the bud your father speaks of as being lost?"

"I do not know."

"Do you think Mr. Dallas took it?"

"I do not know."

"Then if neither of them stole it, who did?"

"Why do you wish to know?"

"Because, Miss Maxwell," I replied, solemnly, "the person who took that bud killed Mazzucata."

"Impossible!"

"I tell you it is so. Now the person who stole that flower must have been down here—in this house. Who else was down here besides Signor Ivan and Mr. Dallas?"

"No one that I know of."

"Was there a woman?"

"I am certain there was not. I should have known. Why do you ask?"

"Because I suspect Mazzucata was murdered by her maid, Ilma Cellnski."

Miss Maxwell rolled her handkerchief up into a hard knot.

"Why should the maid kill the mistress?" she asked, in a faltering tone.

"I don't know! I merely suspect she did."

The blind girl said nothing.

"Miss Maxwell," I cried, in a pleading tone, "my friend is in prison on a charge of murder. My friend is innocent of this charge and you know it."

"I?"

"Yes, you know more about this affair than you choose to tell."

"How can that be?" she replied, composedly; "a poor blind girl, who sees nothing—who knows nothing. You are talking at random, Major Granby."

"I am not talking at random, Miss Maxwell; I am convinced you could tell me something if you chose. You are the double of Mazzucata—when you hear her name you are much agitated—when you hear of her death you are thunderstruck. You say Mr. Dallas and Signor Ivan have been here; well, these two gentlemen were connected with the murdered woman. The black carnation, which you assert has never been out of this greenhouse, is involved in the case—it is the key to the whole mystery. The key of the mystery is here, and in this greenhouse is to be solved the problem as to who killed Mazzucata, and you know it."

During my speech she had risen to her feet, and was standing pale and trembling before me. She was ill, she was blind, she was a woman, and I felt like a brute in thus speaking to her, but Gilbert's life was at stake, and I felt that she could save it if she chose to speak. For some time she kept silent, but at length she spoke.

"Major Granby, I do not know who killed Mazzucata. I cannot tell how the black carnation was stolen."

"You deny everything?"

"I have nothing to deny."

"Why are you so like Mazzucata in appearance?"

She glided towards the door like a ghost, as if she would escape without replying to my question, but I followed her quickly.

"Who are you—Miss Maxwell?"

"You have said it. I am Miss Maxwell."

"But why are you so like Mazzucata?"

"Major Granby," she said, turning round, "I can tell you nothing, but all you wish to know you can learn from Signor Ivan."

"Signor Ivan. What does he know?"

"He knows everything."

I put out my hand, involuntarily, to detain her, but she was gone, and I remained alone, transfixed with astonishment.

"Signor Ivan," I said, wonderingly. "Can it be—oh, impossible!"

MAJOR GRANBY'S THEORY.

It cannot be Ilma Cellnski who killed her mistress, though, I confess, appearances are very much against her. No, I believe she is innocent; and I am firmly convinced that Signor Ivan is the real assassin, for the following reasons.

Gilbert told me that Signor Ivan was in love with Mazzucata.

He is a Russian, and consequently passionate, so would be jealous.

Mazzucata was killed by a dynamite cartridge, which is a peculiarly Russian idea, savoring of Nihilism.

Signor Ivan picked up the fatal bouquet and presented it to Mazzucata.

Maxwell says that Signor Ivan stole the black Carnation.

The black carnation was placed in the fatal bouquet; so I verily believe that Signor Ivan killed the singer out of jealousy.

CHAPTER X.

"A most remarkable story," said Tancred, stretching out his long legs. "A most remarkable story."

We were talking together in his Temple chambers, for, on returning to Town from Lippington, I had driven straight thither from the station without a thought of going to my rooms before I had told Tancred all the events of that day. After Miss Maxwell's astonishing communication regarding Signor Ivan, I had left the house, but first, in order to give some colorable pretext for my visit, ordered some plants. This procedure, however, did not impose on Maxwell, as I could see by the expression of his face when I said "Good-bye;" moreover he evidently did not think it necessary to make any remark concerning his strange behavior. He did not even question me as to the result of my interview with his daughter; but I have no doubt, as soon as I left the house, he obtained all necessary information from her by his usual process of bullying. That he suspected Ivan I saw plainly; but he vouchsafed no opinion on the matter, so, as I had found out all I could from Miss Maxwell, I took my leave. Fortunately, I was able to catch a train just as I arrived at the Lippington station, and speedily found myself steaming towards London, with my mind full of all kinds of ideas.

My visit, instead of doing anything towards clearing up the mystery, only deepened it, and now that a new element was introduced in the person of Signor Ivan, I foresaw endless complications in store for me. I could not but help admiring the foresight of Tancred regarding the involvement of Ivan in the affair, and, as before mentioned, on my arrival in Town, drove straight to his Temple chambers to make my report and hear what he had to say on the subject.

I flatter myself that I told the story in a sufficiently dramatic style, for Tancred could hardly keep still during the recital; and it was at the end of the narrative that he stretched himself out in his chair, with the commonplace observation, "A most remarkable story."

"You've said that twice," I said, with some impatience; for I certainly deserved congratulations, which I did not obtain from this dry stick of a lawyer.

"Well," he replied, coolly, lighting his pipe, "and I'll say it again, seeing there's luck in odd numbers. It's a most remarkable story. Have a cigar, major?"

"No, thank you, Tancred, I don't smoke."

"You ought to, then, especially at the present crisis. Your nerves are all jumping about, while I am as cool as a cucumber. Tobacco soothes the nervous system, my dear major?"

"Are you not astonished?"

"Yes, and no."

"I don't understand."

"I am not astonished at your finding out about the visit of Signor Ivan, for, if you recollect, I prophesied that same, but as to this duplicate likeness of Mazzucata, yes, I am very much astonished at Miss Maxwell."

"Well, and what do you think?"

"I can't tell you until I arrange my ideas in due order. When you have a ball of tangled string, you first find the beginning and unravel it slowly and judiciously. Good, let us find our beginning of it, and we will unravel Miss Maxwell's connection with Ivan—Ivan's connection with Mazzucata, and her connection with Maxwell. It's all in a circle, you see."

"What do you mean? Surely you don't think——"

"Gently, major, gently. We must begin at the beginning. First, we will take Signor Ivan. Now, you remember I was suspicious about our Italian friend, seeing he picked out that bouquet for presentation to Mazzucata, from among a mass of others. I knew you would hear something about him at Lippington, so to meet you half way and come to some conclusion regarding the guilt or innocence of this man, I made some inquiries."

"You couldn't find out much in twelve hours."

"Ah! I did not tell you I employed Melchizedek."

"One of the ten lost tribes?"

"No, one or two that remained at home," retorted Tancred, dryly. "Well, Melchizedek is a wonder. He can find out anything, and he has found out a few episodes of Ivan's past life to which I wish to call your attention."

"Is he a detective?"

"Who, Signor Ivan?" asked the lawyer, provokingly.

"No, confound it. Mel—what's his name?"

"Melchizedek. Yes, he has a private inquiry office, and finds out all sorts of things people don't wish known."

"What a horrible profession."

"A very paying one, at all events, and Melchizedek charges pretty high fees, I can tell you."

"He wouldn't be a Jew if he didn't."

"Probably not. However, he gives full value for the money. Now, my dear major, listen to this, and admire the dexterity with which our Jewish friend in twelve hours has found out what we wish to know."

He took a sheet of foolscap covered with writing from his desk, and began to read out a series of notes made by Melchizedek, commenting thereon when explanations were required.

"Ivan Ivanvitch, born at Moscow in [illegible], natural son of a nobleman and peasant girl. Went to Milan in 1875 to study for the lyric stage, made his debut in 1881 as Raoul in Les Huguenots, sang with great success in all the principal European opera houses—has been in England for three seasons—has sang frequently with Mazzucata."

"Well," said I, interrupting this bold statement, "all this is very interesting from a chronological point of view, but what has it to do with the murder?"

"Wait a minute," replied Tancred, in no wise ruffled by my interruption. "You see by the foregoing, that being a lyric artist, Ivan has been more or less connected with Mazzucata."

"And the result is love."

"Precisely. Your intelligence is wonderful, major. Yes, he was deeply in love with Mazzucata, but she would have nothing to do with him. Like our friend, Dallas, he said that he would rather see her dead than married to anyone but himself."

"Oh, did he? What a dog in the manger there is about these young men. Because they couldn't get the singer for themselves, they wouldn't let anyone else marry her."

"Man is the most selfish of all animals," said Tancred, sententiously; "but to proceed—Ivan, besides being a lover, was also a patriot."

"You use the past tense. Is he not a patriot now?"

"Yes, of course he is, but I am reading from Melchizedek's notes," retorted the lawyer, impatiently. "We'll never get on if you interrupt, major."

"I beg your pardon. Proceed."

"Ivan," resumed Tancred, bending his brows over the Jew's scratchy handwriting, "is a patriot, and has been mixed up more or less with Nihilism."

"I see," cried I, in a state of great excitement; "and he induced Mazzucata to join a secret society, who killed her through Ivan because she revealed its secrets."

"Nothing of the sort," said Tancred, in despair, laying down the manuscript. "nothing of the sort."

No one can say I am not a veracious writer, for I have put down everything connected with this case in toto, even to the sacrifice of my own vanity. I considered my theory of a secret society to be excellent, and was not at all pleased with the crushing way in which Tancred pooh-poohed my idea. But these lawyers have no imagination, and confine themselves entirely to fact, which, for my part, I consider very dry reading without the aid of fancy. My suggestion was at least feasible, and Tancred need not have been so severe on my deduction; nevertheless, he was severe, and such severity I set down in due form, though I am much averse to appearing in so humiliating a position before the public. Still the truth is the truth, and I strictly adhere to it throughout this history, so that everyone may see what indignities I suffered in my efforts to discover the assassin of Mazzucata.

"My dear major," said Tancred, after a pause, during which he stared at me in the most aggressive fashion, "don't interrupt me again, or you will not be able to understand the connection of Ivan with the case."

"Well, go on," I replied, philosophically, "I won't say a word, but I reserve my right to criticise at the end of the performance."

I could not help making this ironical remark in the hope that Tancred would feel ashamed of his conduct, but he was not at all ashamed—on the contrary he smiled, and resumed his reading.

"Ivan has been involved in several Nihilistic plots, the last of which nearly cost him his liberty. For the sake of his great genius as a lyric artist, however, the Czar contented himself with banishing him from Russia. Abroad, Ivan has still carried on his plots against the Romanoff dynasty, and is particularly interested in infernal machines."

"Oh!" I cried, half rising, but remembering my promise I fell back in my chair, while Tancred read on hurriedly, so as to give me no further chance of interrupting him.

"There is a man in London, who makes these dynamite bombs with clock work, timed to explode at a certain moment, and Ivan is frequently in his company. This man, Kutusoff by name, lives near Soho square, and has frequently been seen in conference with Ivan."

Here Tancred paused, and deliberately folding up the manuscript, put it away, a proceeding which somewhat surprised me, as I could not think the notes of Melchizedek had come to such an abrupt termination.

"Well, Tancred," I said, after a pause, seeing he kept silence, "is that all?"

"All!" he repeated in surprise. "Isn't it enough? It shows us that Ivan was in love with Mazzucata, and mad with jealousy. That he was, and is, the intimate friend of a maker of infernal machines."

"Afterwards?"

"Afterwards, my dear major. Can't you put two and two together? According to your story, as constructed out of your interview with Maxwell, this Russian called down at Lippington, and stole from thence a black carnation. According to my story, he is well acquainted with this Kutusoff, who is an expert in dynamite cartridge manufacture. What is easier for him than to make, with the assistance of his friend, the fatal bouquet, and have it thrown to Mazzucata on the stage? His quick eye picks out the special bunch of flowers by means of the black carnation. He knows the cartridge is timed to explode at a certain moment. He gives the bouquet to Mazzucata, and then—well, you know the rest."

"Then you think he committed the crime?"

"Well, at present I think so."

"Why at present?"

SMART FABRICS.

Gayer foulards are used in some afternoon frocks and for frocks of other sorts. Indeed, foulard in combination with one-tone silks or alone holds a more important place than usual on the French schedule, and Canadian women will be glad to find this extraordinarily serviceable and comfortable silk modish as well as practical.

All the crepe weaves are again modish, and they lend themselves to pleating and to pliable lines that are demanded in the new silhouette. Coat suits of crepe meteor as well as crepe de chine rival those of satin.

Many coats are of soft broadcloth, silk satin, gabardine, taffeta and crepe de chine are used. The coats made of the latter material are quite effective and excessively graceful.

Oyster white Charmeuse, profusely embroidered in fine dark blue cord and lined with blue, makes a practical summer afternoon or evening wrap, and there are handsome black [illegible] with brilliant lining.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

LESSON VI May 6, 1917.

Jesus the Servant of all—John 13: 1-13.

COMMENTARY.—I. Jesus washing the disciples' feet (vs. 2-5). 1, 2. The evangelist John does not enter into a discussion of the supper of which Jesus and his disciples partook in an upper room in Jerusalem. This is particularly described by the other evangelists. It was the Passover feast in commemoration of the escape of the Israelites from their Egyptian oppressors. John gives attention to the acts and discourses of Jesus on this occasion. Jesus knew that the hour of his crucifixion was near. It is expressly stated that he "loved his own which were in the world," and he loved them to the uttermost and to the end. While the supper was in progress Jesus took occasion to give his disciples an impressive and much needed lesson on humility. There was treachery in the heart of Judas and some of the other disciples were possessed of worldly, selfish ambition. The occasion was weighty with responsibility and Jesus went forward with his discourses that his disciples might be prepared for their future labors. 3. Jesus knowing, etc.—Although Jesus knew that the Father had given him all power and authority, and that he was the Son of God and had come to earth to fulfil a mission of infinite importance and would return to the Father, he took a most humble position and performed a most lowly task. 4. He riseth from supper—The supper consisted of a lamb prepared according to the direction given by the Lord to the Israelites through Moses (Exod. 12: 3-10). The table was low and around it couches were arranged for the guests, who reclined at full length upon them, resting upon the left elbow, that the right hand might be free to take the food. Jesus rose from his place to teach by example a lesson in humility. Laid aside his garments—He threw off his outer garments that his movements might be free. He was then still clad with the ordinary tunic. In the East a heavy outer garment is worn as a protection from the cold in winter and from the heat in summer. Girded himself—He passed the towel about his body, as a servant was accustomed to do, that he might use it conveniently in his self-imposed task. 5. Into a bason—Better, "into the basin," which stood there for such purposes, the large copper basin commonly found in Oriental houses. Began to wash the disciples' feet—It is not stated with which one of the disciples Jesus began, but it is evident that he had washed the feet of one or more before he came to Peter. The service of washing feet of guests was usually performed by a menial servant of the host. In this instance that duty would naturally devolve upon one of the disciples. It is possible that the question of precedence (Luke 22: 24) arose in connection with this service. Sandals were worn in that country and those who traveled along the dusty roads would need to have their feet washed upon entering a house. This service had not been performed and Jesus made use of this condition to teach his disciples the duty of humble service to others. The custom of reclining at meals gave easy access to the feet of the disciples. Jesus took the place of a lowly servant. At the feast in Simon's house a few days before this he had been highly honored by Mary, who anointed his head and his feet with precious ointment, and now he is engaging in lowly service for his disciples. He teaches us the great truth that no service which others need to have done for them is beneath us.

II. Peter's objection (vs. 6-11). 6. Then cometh he to Simon Peter—The service that Jesus was performing had not been questioned or opposed up to this point. The other disciples were less ready to speak than Peter. Their attitude toward the task which Jesus had undertaken may have seemed as much out of place to them as to Peter, but they kept still. Lord, dost thou wash my feet—The emphasis is on "thou" and "my." It appeared to Peter utterly inconsistent for the Master, "Son of the living God," to take the place of a slave and wash the feet of his disciples. Even though he had performed this service for others he could not think of allowing him to do it for him. 7. Jesus answered—The Master noted Peter's question and the spirit that prompted it, and gave him an appropriate answer. Thou knowest not now—Peter did not fully comprehend the nature of Christ nor his mission on earth, and in the very nature of the case could not know it yet. Thou shalt know hereafter—After the crucifixion, the resurrection and the ascension of Jesus, and after the coming of the Holy Ghost at Pentecost, Peter would realize the import of this act of humiliation. The baptism of the Holy Spirit would give him a degree of illumination not yet experienced. 8. Thou shalt never wash my feet—Peter's natural impulsiveness found expression in this strong language. Never would the time come, Peter declared, when he could consent to the Master's performing this humble service. He meant well, but he did not realize what he was saying. If I wash thee not, thou hast no part with me—If Peter's language was strong, that of Jesus was equally so and expressive of an eternity of meaning to Peter. This disciple had assumed an attitude of opposition to Jesus and unless he changed his position, he could have no part in the benefits of the atonement which Jesus was soon to make. Peter could not stand against the will of the Master and have peace and rest of soul. 9. Not my feet only—When Peter came to understand what it meant to oppose the Master's plan, he retracted his former statement and went to the opposite extreme. Rather than be separated from his Lord he would willingly have him wash his feet, his hands and his head. He believed that he would permit nothing to keep him from fellowship with Jesus, but within a few hours a test would come to him that would show him how weak he was. 10. He that is washed—In a literal sense they were clean, having recently bathed their entire bodies and needed only to have the dust washed from their feet. In a symbolical sense they were clean, having their sins forgiven, and being followers of Jesus. Ye are clean, but not all—The disciples were true in heart. They were devoted to the Master, having left all to follow him. This was true of the disciples in general, but there was one to whom the words, "not all," applied, and that one knew who it was. 11. For he knew—Jesus understood the treachery of Judas' heart and was aware that he was already bargaining with the Jewish leaders to betray him to them. It was Judas who complained at Mary's act of devotion in anointing Jesus with the costly spikenard, because he desired to handle the money that the sale of the ointment would have brought. Now he is condemned for his base treachery.

III. Serving others (vs. 12-17). 12. After he had washed their feet—He had washed the feet of the twelve disciples, from John the beloved to the base Judas. He had shown them the nature of humility and what is involved in service for others. He had taught the lesson that in the kingdom of God distinction of great and small, high and low, do not exist. He had not lowered himself in the estimation of his disciples, but, in fact, they had a higher conception of his character and mission than ever before. Was set down—"Reclined."—R. V., margin. Know ye—The disciples did not understand the full import of the act, and Jesus was about to give them further information. 13. Master and Lord—These titles were applied to Jesus by the disciples. If he was their Master and Lord, they were his disciples and servants. He recognized the fact that the titles were rightfully applied. 14. Ye also ought to wash one another's feet—Jesus had given a remarkable example of loving, humble service. The circumstance demanded that this service be performed and the disciples were impressed with their duty to serve one another. This act of Jesus is capable of wide application. Christians are constantly in positions where they can follow Christ's example of performing lowly service for others. 15. As I have done to you—The example of serving others which Jesus set is to be followed down to the end of time. 16, 17. The standards which men set up are far different from those which Jesus fixed. Among men the master is vastly superior to the servant, and does not stoop to menial tasks. In Christ's kingdom the Master performed humble service for his disciples. The followers of Jesus are not above performing humble tasks for one another.

Questions.—Name some of the events that occurred between the triumphal entry and the Passover supper. Why was this supper held? Of what did the feast consist? Describe the act performed by the Master during the feast. What objection did Peter offer? What caused Peter to change his attitude? What duty did Jesus enjoin upon his disciples? To whom did Jesus refer when he said his disciples were not all clean?

PRACTICAL SURVEY.

Topic.—Love's Service.

I. Reached the depth of human need.

II. Set an example for daily living.

I. Reached the depth of human need. Among all the parting scenes that the world's literature has enshrined, there are none that can be compared with this supreme and unique instance of self-forgetfulness as in the life of Jesus. When "His hour" had come, when the shadow of the cross fell athwart His path, when humiliation, suffering and death were immediately before Him, when He was just on the eve of stepping from humiliation to glory, just about to cast aside the veil of His flesh to appear in all His heavenly splendor, it is beautifully instructive and encouraging to see how warmly His heart beat for "His own" and how anxious He was to use the closing days of His ministry for their spiritual profit. Before His departure, when He might have been absorbed in the contemplation of His death, before His exaltation when the vision of coming glory might have filled His mind, to the exact moment of His life, the thought of their feebleness and defenselessness and their sufferings and imperfections was the foremost anxiety of His heart. When the hour was at hand in which the bitter cup was to be lifted to His lips, His own great suffering could not cast a shadow between the loving Master and His trembling disciples. Here at the very close of His earthly life was a most thoughtful, touching instance of His intense desire to do them good. Under the most affecting circumstances, to the utmost extent, He manifested His love, corresponding to their necessities because of the peculiar difficulties and dangers to which they were exposed. Such was His affection for His disciples, that not all the glories of heaven, so soon to be possessed, could for a moment disturb His compassionate attention toward them. All through His life Jesus declared Himself conscious of the hours which marked the several crises of His mission. That marvelous consciousness is here set forth as the basis and the reason for a special tenderness as He thought of the impending separation. It was the hour of His supreme and sublime self-consciousness and the hour of His lowly service to His disciples. He, into whose hands the Father had given all things, stooped to employ Himself in washing His disciples' feet. It was voluntary service rendered in the consciousness of divine power. The thought of His divine origin and His divine distinction made His act all the more impressive with a force of example that was designed to act irresistibly upon the minds of His disciples through all time. Jesus knelt before each of the twelve in turn. This service was symbolic of inward purification.

II. Set an example for daily living. As a teacher, Jesus adapted His teachings to the state of His hearers. He gave each lesson a special application. The deity of His person, the divinity of His attributes, His appointment by the Father gave Him a right "to teach and govern His people." The disciples were slow to understand His teaching, slow to appreciate His nature and His mission. The fact that at a crisis in His ministry Jesus designed to wash His disciples' feet, with no end in view except to inculcate that in His view there was urgent need for such instruction. This affecting incident occurred after the controversy among the disciples as to which of them should be accounted greatest in the kingdom of heaven. Christ's example called His disciples to personal humility, to loving service, to brotherly forgiveness. They had been the objects of His tenderest regard since the day He had chosen them. His love was stronger than their unbelief and ignorance. He saw more in them to love than other eyes could possibly see. His life was a discipline of love to them, His death a sacrifice of love for them. On Tabor or in Gethsemane, alone or with the multitude, in life or in death, He loved His own. Touched with the feeling of their infirmities He loved them with a tender, prudent affection and sought to train them and educate them that they might be good soldiers of the cross. Jesus taught that true greatness consisted in ministering to the good of others. Peter felt that it was an inversion of all proper relations for Jesus to perform that service for His disciples.

SUNDAY AT HOME

STRENGTH FOR TODAY.

Lord, I have often asked strength for a year;
I wanted all the mists to disappear,
That I might see the summer and the winter speed before,
Nor be afraid to climb the mountains o'er.
But now I am a little child again,
Fearing the darkness and afraid of pain.
A year is long—I am content with [illegible];
I want the Lord to govern all my ways.
What he shall give me shall be best for me;
I know that as my day my strength shall be.

WHO SHALL BE ABLE TO STAND?

Who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's sope.

I beheld, and, lo, a great multitude, which no man could number, of all nations and kindreds, and people, and tongues, stood before the throne, and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands. These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb. They shall hunger no more, neither thirst any more; neither shall the sun light on them, nor any heat. For the Lamb, which is in the midst of the throne, shall feed them, and shall lead them unto living fountains of waters; and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes.

There is no condemnation to them which are in Christ Jesus, who walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free.

THE FACE.

How long does it take to build a house? How long does it take to build a life? Bodies are but the scaffolding of souls; all life is a process for the building of the soul, and this building is ever a double one, for the soul builds the body as the crustacean builds its shell. Our spirits are the true artists of feature; the spirit within forms the body without. "It is this mystery of the face and what is behind it, that has set Christian minds in every age wondering what were the lines of that Galilean countenance, the radiance from which has made another and a higher daylight for the world.

Some think of Him without form or comeliness; others as divinely beautiful, others as dignified, imposing, absorbing, overwhelming.

What are men doing to-day? They are making their faces; here is the clock, the index, the centre. A few will look at you as the drill master, and say, maybe, that you hobble instead of walk. A few will observe how you carry your head, and a few how you carry your hands, for there are many dead hands dangling from men's shoulders. Your pose, poise, and gait, may be observed by some, but your face is seen by all; hence is a fountain full and flowing. Men can conceal and others do not know, but man is a revealer, and hundreds of student eyes are turned on him every day. Behind the fleshly face is the soul's face and the soul's face is a great spiritual absorbent.

The soul is a fisherman, and it gathers after its kind, the soul is a plant, and absorbs moisture, sunbeams, and beauty; the soul has a body, the builder is within, and what is gathered is displayed. Think of the flood of life pulsing through channels without number; not one throb is lost. Time is a loom, life is a web, and into this web are gathered things of earth and things of heaven; these threads come out in vulgar coarseness, or in delicate beauty, according to the tone, and temper, and tinge, of the weaver.

I once saw a wood carver at work. Out of a rough piece of pine timber came at length the portrait of the owner of the ship, whose photo hung up in front of the workman. Here is a lesson: We grow like what we gaze at. The church is a great face builder; here is the index, the essence, the meaning, the majesty of life.

When you look into a man's face, you see double—there is a fleshly face, and the face of the soul. There is an eye behind the eye, and you gather a smile from the smile, which is as sure and as secret as Heaven is to the holy. Did you never read between the lines; did you never hear more than the tongue expressed; did you never discover another behind the other, the soul of your soul?

"Beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image from glory into glory, even as from the Lord the Spirit."

THE IMPORTANCE OF FRESH AIR.

Readers of this column will have noticed the frequency with which inquiries are noticed to seek outdoor exercise. There is no condition of the body, either in health or disease, which fresh air does not benefit. It is commonly known that the breath given out from our lungs is laden with impurities, but few people apply this knowledge to their daily lives. Everyone must have noticed the sleepiness and yawning that overcome people in hot rooms where there is inadequate ventilation. The act of yawning is an involuntary effort of the lungs to take in more oxygen or fresh air than the atmosphere is supplying. The lungs are continually asking for oxygen, as every process of the body is dependent, ultimately, on the oxygen, which finds its way into the blood. The blood is constantly journeying to and from the heart, and in the process passes through the lungs, where it is subjected to a cleansing by means of the oxygen which the lungs have breathed in, and, at the same time, the impurities are taken up and expelled by the breath. It follows, then, that if the air which the lungs are taking up is imperfectly oxygenated, or if any part of it is being breathed a second time, as must happen in a small, ill-ventilated room, especially if artificial heat or lighting, such as gas, is employed, the condition of the blood, and consequently of the organs and the whole of the body, becomes impure. It will be found that, if the yawning or sighing is not relieved by the introduction of fresh air, headache ensues, and it is in this state that the body becomes subject to what are known as chills; that is to say, if a chance draught or sudden encounter with cold air or damp is experienced the body is too devitalized to resist the shock. CRETE CRADLED GREEK CULTURE

Had Great Civilization at Very Remote Date.

Mysterious Cataclysm Wiped Out All Cities.

Crete, the "half-way house between three continents," has given far more to the Greek nation than her native son Venizelos, the former Premier. According to a war geography bulletin of the United States National Geographic Society, this island is viewed by leading scientists and archaeologists as the very cradle of ancient Greek culture.

"It was not the Phoenicians who invented the art of writing," says the bulletin, "but the Cretans who, under the sway of their remarkable sea kings, antedated by several hundred years the culture of the commercial nation which flourished on the shores of Asia Minor. Recent excavations on this island, the home of Minos, of Ariadne, and of the horror-inspiring Minotaur, of Homeric legend, have disclosed evidences of a civilization which reached its apogee 1,500 years before the birth of Christ, and more than six centuries before the first Olympiad, the starting point of recorded Attic history. Nor was Crete a civilization which in any degree paled in comparison with the grandeur of the Babylonian Empire, the magnificent of ancient Assyria, or the remarkable achievements of the Egyptians under the early Pharaohs.

"When the spade of the explorer unearthed the ruins of the ancient capital at Knossos, or Cnossus, near the site of the modern seaport of Candia, there were revealed to archaeologists, treasures which had scarcely been equaled since the secrets of the buried cities of Pompeii of Herculaneum were laid bare.

"Clay tablets bearing inscriptions in linear form far more grateful than any produced by the Phoenicians were found by the thousands; remarkable frescoes in brilliant colors depicting a race of men and women of rare physical beauty and high mental accomplishments; pottery, bronzes, tools and gaming tables that for perfection of workmanship, elaborate decoration and artistic development have hardly been surpassed in the 35 centuries which stretch between that day and this.

"One of the most astonishing discoveries made in the palace (the name should probably be applied to a dynasty, like the Pharaohs of Egypt, rather than to one king, as mythology recites) was the style of dress among the women. Indeed, the artists who executed the frescoes might have had modern Parisiennes for their models, judged by the decolete gowns, the rouged cheeks, the flaring hats, the high heels and the tightly-corseted figures.

"A romantic revelation of these ruins was a picture of the Cretan sport of bull-grappling, a pastime which was a forerunner of the bull-fights of the twentieth century in Spain. According to conjectures of leading authorities, bull grappling occupied the same place in Cretan social life that the arenic games and gladiatorial battles did in Rome centuries later, with the exception that captive maidens as well as youths were trained for the hazardous sport of the island kings and patricians. One fresco, which retains its original brilliant colors, shows two girls and a boy engaged in the conflict. The boy has succeeded in seizing the horns of the charging animal and has executed a somersault over the beast's back. The first girl has also completed the daring evolution, but the artist shows the second girl at the moment when she is reaching out for the horns, and the spectator is left in doubt as to whether she succeeds or is impaled on the deadly points.

"A sinister discovery in connection with this fresco was the location of the gloomy subterranean cells in which the captured youths and maidens were confined before the contests. Perhaps to these cells and these bull fights is to be traced the famous legend of the despatch to King Minos of seven Athenian maidens and seven youths every ninth year, the human tribute being fed to the half-man and half bull, known as the Minotaur, the offspring of Minos' monstrous wife, Pasiphae. It is highly probable that the story of Theseus' slaughter of the Minotaur in the labyrinth had an actual historical basis. Certainly, only with the aid of an outsider, such as the fabled Ariadne, could a captive have escaped from the dungeons in which the Minoan ruler confined the unfortunates condemned to furnish diversion for the court.

"Unlike Babylon, Nineveh, Assur and many other cities of antiquity, Cretan culture was not a victim of decadence, but fell before some mysterious cataclysm, the exact details of which may never be known. The only certainty about the fall of Knossos and of sister cities of the island is that they were wiped out by an all-consuming conflagration after the palace had been systematically looted of all their gold, silver, bronze and other treasure. As to who the invaders were, or how they achieved their purposes even less is silent.—Washington Star.

SELECTION AND CARE OF THE HORSE

The proper selection and care of the horse is a subject that is worthy of consideration. Horses are generally divided into two classes—driving and draft, or light and heavy. The nearest to what is commonly known as the "general-purpose horse."

For all-around work on a small place a horse weighing about [illegible] pounds and which stands from [illegible] hands high is about right.

THE GENERAL-PURPOSE HORSE

The general-purpose horse should have high full action, each part moving in perfect harmony with the other, indicating soundness and the ability to perform work easily, and consequently with economy of energy. Particularly attention should be given the walking gait, as in all classes of horses this is of great importance. The stride should be even, and the foot should be picked up and put forward energetically. The head should be of moderate size, free from any meaty appearance, features distinct and expression pleasant. Ears medium in size and erect and active. The neck should be arched and well muscled; chest deep and prominent; shoulders long and sloping; the foreleg straight, clean-cut and with well-developed forearm. The knee should be wide and deep, and set upon the cannon firmly; the cannon short and wide from front to rear. In this class of horses it is especially important that the pastern be strong, and form an angle of about 45 degrees with the ground. If more upright than this it is apt to cause lameness as a result of two great concussion when the horse is moved rapidly.

Particularly attention should be given the feet, which should be of generous size but not flat. The wall of the hoof should present a smooth appearance without the inclination toward a ribbed condition found in many horses. The heels should be well spread and supported in that position by a large, healthy frog.

The rib of the horse should be well [illegible] as they leave the spine, and the [illegible] short and well-muscled. As the [illegible] much of the motive power lies [illegible] region, it is important that the quarters be well developed in croup, [illegible] and thigh, giving a nicely rounded appearance, with evidence of strength. The hock should be clean and the cannon, pastern and foot answering to the standard given for the front ones.

MUCH DEPENDS UPON CARE

The skin of the animal should be soft and pliable, and covered with a fine, silky coat, which would lay down. Upon exertion of the horse the veins and cords should show plainly.

A horse may be kept in any comfortable quarters which should be well lighted and ventilated. The stall should present no rough places nor nails upon which it is possible for the horse to become injured. It should be cleaned often and bedded nights with well-aired straw or other litter. He should be groomed regularly once a day and fed and watered three times, the water to be given before feeding. The feed may in addition to hay, consist of oats alone or fed with some wheat bran and corn in some form. In all cases a good rule to follow is never to feed or water when the horse is heated. Wait until he had a chance to get cooled off and then feed moderately. Very little difficulty will then be experienced with sick horses.

All harnesses and furnishings should be kept in seperate apartments from the horse, as the ammonia is detrimental to leather and varnish.

THE COLT

Upon the feed and care a colt receives depends to a great extent his future usefulness as a workhorse. It is a poor and expensive policy to skimp on his feed. A mixture of two parts oats, two parts shelled corn and one part bran, all by weight, is a good ration for a yearling. If to this is added a double handful of linseed oil meal twice a day it comprises an ideal grain feed. The quantity to be feed will depend largely on the weight and breed of the colt. In general, to get the best results, colts from one to two years of age should be fed about all they will clean up twice a day and return hungry for the next meal. Only the feeder can determine the proper amount. From eight to ten pounds a day of the mixture described will be about right, the amount increasing as the youngster gains in age and weight. Condimental stock foods are an abomination. Do not feed them. Middlings are too cloying and are liable to form a pasty mass in the stomach, thus promoting digestive trouble. Let the colt pick over some corn fodder during the day, and let him have three to four pounds of sound, well-cured alfalfa or clover night and morning.

NOTES

The Pennsylvania Experiment station has obtained excellent results in feeding hogs with a grain mixture of cornmeal four parts, wheat middlings three parts, and tankage one part. The addition of skim milk increases the rate of grain. If skim milk is fed with this grain mixture the amount of cornmeal may be increased to six parts. Other mixtures recommended are: Cornmeal eight parts and tankage one part, or skim milk three parts and cornmeal one part. If possible, pasture crops should be used for growing pigs. For quick growth, two to four pounds of grain per 100 pounds of live weight daily, in addition to pasture crops, are required.

Every man who lives on his own farm should have a few fruit trees, and in a fenced orchard or yard. An acre is little enough, but at least any farm should have 10 apples, five peach and five cherry trees. These cost but a trifle, but if cared for properly will supply a family with fruit in some form for the entire year. Then a row of raspberries, blackberries, currants and gooseberries and a square rod of strawberries will add much to the happiness of the family.

Not every farmer will succeed with the farm tractor, no matter how favorable the conditions or efficient the tractor. The man who neglects to oil his machinery and keep it in repair will have little luck with a tractor.

The high cost of mud is responsible for low-priced farm lands, according to Government experts, who have been studying the results of good roads. They find that good roads increase land values from one to three times the cost of improvement.

The agricultural experts may continue to spin out beautiful theories, but the fact will remain that the quickest, cheapest and best system of restoring our soils to greater productiveness is by green manuring, turning under rye, buckwheat, sweet or red clover, cowhorn turnips or anything else that will grow on the land.

The average milk yield or the average cow must be raised if dairying is to be made profitable, even at present milk prices. According to the State College of Agriculture at Cornell, the average cow does not pay her board, and the best way to make the average yield return a profit to the dairy owner is to "weed out the scrubs."

Young trees rather than old, large ones should be selected for planting. One-year-old fruit trees are for the most part preferable to two-year-olds. They transplant more readily and more safely. The proper depth to plant is the depth at which the tree stood in the nursery. The beginner usually sets his trees too deep rather than too shallow, in heavy soils.

Before setting out trees, trim any ragged woods on the roots and shorten very long roots so they will not be cramped in planting. Tramp the soil firmly from the bottom of the hole up, in setting. When the hole is filled, spread an inch of loose soil over the tramped surface so as to prevent baking and drying out.

Peach trees should be pruned back most severely of any of our orchard fruits when set. All the side branches should be cut off close, thus trimming the tree to a single whip. This whip should then be shortened to about two and a half feet in height.

Cherry trees, when set out, should be pruned least severely of any of our orchard fruits. If well branched, cut out the central stem of the tree so as to leave an open centre. Leave three to five main outward spreading limbs well distributed around the trunk.

The reason for pruning the peach so severely when set out is because it readily put out strong new limbs from the main trunk. On the other hand, the reason why the branches of the sour cherry should not be shortened, is because they start growth readily from the active buds near the tip of the limb, but will not produce vigorous growth from the dormant buds of the main stem or base of the limbs.

In a Turkish Mecca

A sanitary pilgrimage to Mecca should not pass without a word. In the past the devout who journeyed across the Arabian desert fell prey to many a scourge of disease, not to mention incursions of bandits. This year the returning travellers tell a different story. Among other things they tell of a Mecca minus the Turks who have ruled it so long and of a grand sherif, a descendent of Allah, who has not only revolted from the Ottoman empire, but has studied hygiene.

The ceremony of receiving the Holy Carpet at Cairo on its return from Mecca took place in the presence of the Prime Minister, representing the Sultan, who is indisposed. The pilgrimage was accomplished this year without any untoward incident. All those who took part in it are highly satisfied with the manner in which the grand sherif of Mecca cared for their needs. Especially remarkable were the hygienic precautions to which the immunity of the pilgrimage from cholera and plague is in great measure ascribed.

It is said that the Indians and the Moslems from other regions that were but at Mecca were similarly favorably impressed, and that the news spread by returning pilgrims of the successful accomplishment of the pilgrimage, amid conditions contrasting strikingly with those existing before the war, when pillage and bloodshed were of daily occurrence, and epidemics and terrible privations followed in the wake of the pilgrims, will go a long way to convince the Moslem world of the beneficial effects accruing to it from the grand sherif's blow for independence.—Exchange.

FOOD AND MORE FOOD

The importance of increased production is being emphasized as never before. We are told that the food supply of the world is very low. The producers of farm foods are becoming less, and the non-producing consumers are increasing. Wide sections of country, which were formerly productive, are being trampled by armies, and large quantities of food materials are now being lost in transit. The food situation is becoming increasingly serious.

More than one-half of the cropping land of Ontario is now in grass, and the grass lands of the Province have been increasing at the rate of fully one hundred thousand acres annually during the last four years. During this time there has been a decrease in Ontario and in the whole of Canada of live stock, including dairy cattle, beef cattle, sheep and swine. In the last four years there has been an actual decrease in the acreage in Ontario of 22 per cent. in beans, 57 per cent. in peas, 7 per cent. in winter wheat, 16 per cent. in turnips, and 12 per cent. in potatoes. In 1916 83 per cent. of the beans, 64 per cent. of the peas, 82 per cent. of the fall wheat and 30 per cent. of the potatoes of Canada were produced in Ontario.

It is estimated that an average acre of beans produces as much real food material as is usually obtained from five to fifteen acres of pasture land in the production of either meat or milk.

With slight exceptions the most economical sources of food materials in Ontario in the past winter were obtained from the following groups: First, farm crops, oats, wheat, corn, peas, beans, potatoes; second, dairy products—milk, butter, cheese; third, meats—beef, mutton, pork; fourth, fish—salmon, cod; fifth, eggs. According to recent determinations and prevailing prices, as much valuable food material for human consumption could be obtained from the purchase of beans with twenty cents, as from the purchase of cheese with forty-three cents, of beefsteak with seventy-nine cents and of eggs with one dollar and sixty-one cents.

A MESSAGE TO WOMEN!!

If you are troubled with weak, tired feelings, headache, backache, bearing down sensations, bladder weakness, constipation, catarrhal conditions, pain in the sides, regularly or irregularly, bloating, sense of falling or misplacement of internal organs, nervousness, desire to cry, palpitation, hot flashes, dark rings under the eyes, or a loss of interest in life, write to me to-day. Address: Mrs. M. Summers, Box 5 Windsor, Ont.

Field beans approach animal foods in nutritive value. They contain a high percentage of protein, and in this respect surpass the cereals commonly used as food, such as wheat, and oats. There is a higher percentage of protein in beans than in the best cuts of meat, but it is not quite so completely digested. Protein is a nutrient which serves to build and repair body tissues as well as furnish energy. It performs essentially the same part in nutrition, whether it is from beans, peas, wheat, meat, milk, or cheese.

Skilled labor throughout the Province is very scarce. The farmers of Ontario have an exceedingly difficult task ahead of them if they are to increase the production of the most valuable kinds of food materials in 1917. The following suggestions are offered in the help that they may prove helpful.

1. Carefully plan the crop production for the season at an early date.

2. Thoroughly clean and grade the grain so as to procure the large, plump, sound and well-matured seed.

3. Test the germinating power and the vigor of the seed before time to sow.

4. Overhaul implements and machines so as to be ready to start seeding early and to sow each class of crop at the best time for highest results.

5. Arrange for at least a small amount of such cultivated crops as beans, potatoes, turnips and corn.

6. Watch and destroy the weeds before they are able to make much headway.

7. Economize man labor by using three and four horse teams when possible.

8. Plan so as to make the best use of the unskilled labor which is available.

Copies of bulletins on "Farm Crops," "Field Beans" and "Potatoes" may be obtained from the County Agricultural Representatives, or from the Ontario Department of Agriculture, Parliament Buildings, Toronto.

Let us do our part as best we can for the good of humanity and for the prevention of a world's famine in essential food materials.

THE MIRACLE.

Not in the Easter lily's heart
Of gleaming gold and snow,
Not in the carols silver clear
Where jewelled windows glow,
Not in the stately harmonies
The gilded organs play,
Is found the miracle divine
Of Easter Day.

But in the worm entombed so long
In darkness and in cold,
The resurrection and the life
Immortal we behold;
It breaks the cocoon coffin small,
Arises from the clay,
And heavenward soars on joyful wings
The Easter Day.

The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

ELECTRIC HEAT.

How Electricity is Changed Into Heat by Resistance Wire.

It is not always necessary to burn something to produce heat. However, we have secured our heat by combustion for so long that most of us believe that heat can be produced in no other way. It is hard to convince the user of an electric flatiron, or even an electric range, that nothing is burned with in the iron, that there is no fire in the range. If you don't believe that heat can be produced without fire and combustion try rubbing a coin briskly on the carpet. In a few seconds the coin will be too hot to hold. If you rubbed it fast enough and long enough, it would set fire to the carpet.

When the coin is rubbed on the carpet it is heated by friction. By this same process is heat produced in an electric iron or any other electric-heating device. Only, in the case of electricity, "friction" is called by another name, "resistance." Electric heat is produced by the "resistance" offered to the flow of the current by special resistance metal inserted in the circuit. The current flows easily and smoothly along the copper wire leading into the electric iron. In the bottom of the iron is inserted a stamped leaf, or a grid of resistance wire, through which the current must force its way before it can flow on to complete the circuit, but there is pressure, or voltage, enough to force it over the difficult path. In overcoming this resistance a part of the electrical energy is changed to heat energy and the resistance wire becomes quite hot.

All wire offers more or less resistance to the flow of electricity. The term, however, is usually applied only to those wires possessing a higher specific resistance than copper wire. Silver has the lowest electrical resistance of all the metals, but as silver is costly, and as copper has but slightly greater resistance, it is copper wire that is in commercial use, so all comparisons are made with reference to an electrical current. This resistance to the current causes the electrical energy to become converted into heat, and it is by the utilization of this heating characteristic that resistance wire finds so great a use to-day in the electrical trade.

Resistance wires are almost always composed of alloys of various metals. They are usually given trade names by the concerns making them. The composition of the various resistance wires now on the market, however, are nickel and chromium, nickel and steel, nickel, copper and manganese (manganin), nickel and copper, nickel and manganese, nickel, copper, manganese and aluminium and copper, nickel and zinc (German silver).

The metals used are alloyed in varying proportions, products of two concerns using the same proportions. The standard metals or alloys used in resistance wires, by their specific resistance, divide resistance wires into grades having definite limits, as from six to twelve times the resistance of copper up to forty-five to sixty-five times the resistance of copper.

Resistance wire is furnished in so-called wire, ribbon and plate form. Usually only the wire is carried in stock, the ribbon and plate being made up to order.

In the electrical trade resistance wire is used for two purposes. For heating elements and for resistance or current reducing elements. The largest use at the present time is in connection with heating elements.

For heating elements the use of resistance wire is confined solely to cooking and other heating devices, the heating elements of which are composed of resistance wire embedded in an insulating material. This class of work calls for a wire that will withstand high temperatures and that has a high specific resistance. For this reason it has been found that nickel and chromium resistance wire best meets the requirements, and is invariably used.—Troy Times.

St. Cecilia's Bird.

When Spring is weaving tapestry
Of vivid emerald hue,
All patterned o'er with asphodel
And violets starry blue,
The wood thrush on a breezy bough
[illegible] with the dew,
In ecstasy immortal trills
The rapturous refrain,
"Cecilia."

Entranced we listen to the sweetness
Of every golden note
And marvel at such melody
From such a tiny throat,
But lo! now sweeping to the West
The saint of music came
And taught the bird to sing, 'tis said,
Her still sweeter name,
"Cecilia."

They Cured Him And They Did It Quick

WHAT GEO. W. GARDNER SAYS OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

His Symptoms All Said Kidney Trouble and They Yielded Readily to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Fern Creek, Alta., April 26 (Special).—After suffering for three years from kidney trouble, George W. Gardner, a well-known farmer living near here, is again in the best of health, and he gives full credit for his cure to Dodd's Kidney Pills.

"I think Dodd's Kidney Pills are wonderful," Mr. Gardner said, in telling of his cure. "My trouble started from a strain or a cold and I noticed it first about three years ago.

"My eyes were puffed and swollen, and had dark circles under them. I was very irritable at times and my skin had a dry, harsh feeling. My sleep was broken and unrefreshing, and I had a bitter taste in my mouth in the morning.

"I took medical advice, but got no permanent benefit, till I used Dodd's Kidney Pills. Just two boxes of them fixed me up, and I feel as well as ever I did."

Everyone of Mr. Gardner's symptoms is a symptom of kidney trouble. That's why Dodd's Kidney Pills cured them so quickly.

INVALID COOKERY.

These following dishes, if carefully prepared, will be found palatable for an invalid. [illegible]

STEAMED FISH

Have a pan on the fire half full of boiling water. Place a plate on the top instead of a lid. Grease the plate a very little. Now take the fish and cut away the fat and trim it nicely. Place it on the plate. Now cover this with a bowl, and let it cook for ten minutes. Then lift the cover and turn the fish, and cook about ten minutes longer. A very thick slice will take a few minutes longer. Serve hot on the plate it was cooked on.

POTATO FOR INVALID

To cook a potato for an invalid to take with the fish: Scrub the potato but do not peel it. Put it into the oven and let it roast for about half an hour. Then cut it across and scoop out the inside of the skins on to the hot plate. No more digestible way than this to cook a potato.

ESSENCE OF BEEF OR MUTTON AND EGG

Half-pound mutton or beef. Scrape and cut down on a plate as small as possible the beef or mutton, and put it in a enameled saucepan if possible. Take two teacupfuls water and put it in, washing the plate off with the water. Put on the lid and let it cook very gently for an hour. Now beat up the egg in a small bowl, and strain over it the essence of meat, stirring all the time very vigorously. Season it a little to make it nice, and you will find few more nourishing things for an invalid.

SAVORY CUSTARD

Savory custard will tempt the poorest appetite. Butter a jampot and stir into it one whole fresh egg and a gill of strong stock or clear soup; place the pot in a saucepan three parts full of boiling water; place a buttered paper over the top of the jampot, bringing the water to the boil, then let it simmer steadily for 10 or 12 minutes, when the custard should turn out neatly; serve with strips of dry toast. This can also be made with sweetened and flavored milk.

VEAL TEA

Such as are tired of beef tea may welcome veal tea as a change. Slice a pound of veal into small pieces, and arrange it in a jar alternately with turnip, seasoning the layers with pepper and salt and a fine dusting of herbs; add half a pint of water. Cover the jar closely with a lid, and over that tie a piece of greased paper. Place the jar in a saucepan of hot water and let it simmer continuously for four hours. Strain through a thick cloth, remove all grease and serve quite fresh.

TEA FOR INVALIDS

Beat up the yolk of a fresh egg till quite light with a fork, then mix in, little by little, half a teacupful of very weak black tea, sweeten to taste, and stir in at the last a tablespoonful of good cream. This will only make a teacupful altogether, and it is very nourishing.

THE Poultry World

EARLY CARE OF CHICKS

(By Prof. [illegible], Poultry Expert for the United States Department of Agriculture.)

A baby chick performs its first [illegible] [illegible]

IMPORTANCE OF FRESH AIR

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] used. Then if the [illegible] can be maintained [illegible] be regarded as safe [illegible] providing for the [illegible] the directions [illegible] manufacturer should be [illegible] is to be used, don't [illegible] work this season [illegible] Some part may [illegible] broken or lost. [illegible] found to be lost in [illegible] brooder warmth [illegible] if the season is so [illegible] of outside temperature [illegible] care should [illegible] brooder has a sufficient reserve heat to meet [illegible] chicks are often chilled [illegible] changes [illegible]

TRAINING CHICKS TO BROOD

Chicks should be removed from the incubator to the brooder at night. Not only are they easier handled when it is dark, but they are more likely to remain where they are put under the hover. For the first night or two they should be confined rather closely to the hover for this reason.

If not carefully watched for the first two or three days, chicks may huddle together in a corner of the brooder, where they are likely to get chilled, or trample one another to death in their efforts to keep warm. It only takes a couple of days to train them to take to the hover. The poultry raiser cannot afford to discontinue his care and watchfulness, however, if he expects to succeed with his young brood.

For the first few days chicks need rest more than anything else. If [illegible] they will spend much of their time huddled together, [illegible] the natural way. This is good for them, as it helps to strengthen them. Whenever possible the brooder should be moved so as to allow the sunshine to fall near the hover or in the [illegible] part of the brooder. Since the chicks will [illegible] seek the sunlight, the [illegible] to so arrange the brooder that they will not become chilled as the sun moves away.

FEEDING THE CHICKS

As previously stated Nature provides for the chick's nourishment for the first two or three days of life. Chicks should be given neither food nor drink for the first 48 hours. If fed sooner it will be harmful and not helpful. The unabsorbed portion of the yolk serves to supply the chick with nourishment. Additional food is likely to cause indigestion and bowel trouble, which should be avoided by all means. More chicks are lost every season by over-feeding than by underfeeding.

Let the brooder floor be covered with [illegible] and fine-cut clover or alfalfa. The [illegible] absorb the droppings. The chicks should be encouraged as early as possible to take exercise. This can be [illegible] by [illegible] them scratch for their food.

Young chicks are easily trained to eat. When hungry they instinctively peck at anything in sight. This habit makes it essential that absolute cleanliness be practiced. First they should be fed on a board or shallow tray, which should be removed as soon as their appetite has been satisfied. Chicks soon learn an attendant's [illegible] and will quickly come at a given signal. They should be fed regularly and not less than three times a day. No food should be left around to sour or be soiled. Better to feed too little each time than too much. A little [illegible] bread crumbs mixed with [illegible] oats and cut clover make a splendid ration, not too dry, for baby chicks. [illegible] is a fine addition to this ration.

When chicks are a few days old they may be given a good chick feed mixed with oatmeal and wheat. This provides one of the most nourishing rations for chicks.

VALUE OF CLEAR WATER

Clear water is as important as clear food. Baby chicks learn to drink as readily as they learn to eat. But the water vessels should be shallowed and so arranged that the chicks cannot walk in them. It is better not to use open vessels of any kind. Drinking fountains for chicks are easily procured, they are cheap, serviceable and sanitary.

It is a well-known fact that baby chicks are subject to bowel troubles if not properly supplied with clean water. Nothing, in fact, affects chicks quicker than impure drinking water. If the poultry raiser is careful the first two weeks, the most critical period has been passed and the danger from bowel trouble daily grows less.

As the chicks grow older green feed such as sprouted oats should be added [illegible] also [illegible] protein [illegible] meal or [illegible] to the [illegible] given in [illegible] scratch [illegible] is de[illegible] rolled [illegible]

[illegible] for the [illegible] will be [illegible] the [illegible] grow [illegible] into [illegible] profitable [illegible]

WIT AND HUMOR

THE MODERN BURGLAR.

(Life)

Burglar—Quick, now! Where do you [illegible] your potatoes?

HAD NO CHOICE

(Baltimore American)

"I don't like hatin' of the cook, dear." "How can I help it when she's just [illegible]?"

A BETTER SCHEME.

(Judge)

Hewitt—If you want an umbrella to last a long time, don't roll it.
[illegible]—I have a better scheme.
Hewitt—What is it?
[illegible]—Don't lend it.

PUTTING IT GENTLY.

(Boston Transcript)

Girl's Father—But how can you support my daughter? Twenty dollars a week won't pay the rent.

Suitor—You don't mean to say you'll charge Edith and me rent, do you?

HE KNEW.

(Yonkers Statesman)

"Do you believe there is any such word as fail?" asked the man in the smoking car to the person sitting next to him.

"Sure there is," was the reply.

"But some people say there is not."

"Well, I say there is, and I ought to know."

"Why should you know more than the others?"

"Because I'm a referee in bankruptcy."

WENT OUT FOR IT.

(Life)

Wicker—Do you go in for home cooking at your house?

Snicker—Not on your life! We go out for it.

GIVE HIM TIME.

(Boston Transcript)

"They say his wife has money."

"Well, that isn't his fault. They've only been married a short time."

GOOD OLD DAYS.

"Do [illegible] remember when y[illegible] youngster and played bean bag?"

"Yes. Weren't beans cheap in days."

EXCEPTIONAL.

(Baltimore American)

"Doctors in one way are a very exceptional class."

"What way is that?"

"Why, when they treat a man, they make him pay for it."

AVERAGED UP.

(Washington Star)

"Can you prove all you say?"

"Perhaps not," replied Senator Sorghum. "But things average up. There are a lot of things I could prove that I don't say."

SOUNDS WELL.

(Judge)

The Lady—And you may say we suspect a discharged butler of the robbery.

Reporter—When was he discharged?

The Lady—Oh, we never really kept a butler; but I think it sounds quite well.

THE WORST FEATURE.

(Birmingham Age-Herald)

"I certainly would like to pick up a newspaper that wasn't full of big bl[illegible] headlines," said the fractious man.

"Tired of reading war [illegible]"

"Yes. And to [illegible] reached th[illegible] every[illegible]

Daughter—Oh, [illegible] for me?

A HOT ONE.

(Judge.)

He—I never associate with my in[illegible]ors. Do you, Miss Cutting?

She—Well, Mr. Snobson, I really can't say. I don't think I have ever met any of your inferiors.

NOTHING TO TALK OF.

(Life.)

Adam (after a long silence)—Say, Eve, can't you say something? It's dull here with a dumb wife.

Eve—What's a woman to talk about, with no clothes and no servants?

MAUDE'S MISTAKE.

(Boston Transcript)

"Why did Maude fling that magazine from her so disgustedly just now?"

"She saw an article in it headed, 'New Method of Filtration' and she read it 'Flirtation.'"

FOLLOWING GOOD ADVICE.

(Baltimore American)

Judge—How came a man of your ability to stand here convicted of forgery?

Prisoner—It is all owing to my taking good advice, your honor. When I left school, my teacher told me with my talents to go on and forge ahead.

ONLY FAIR PLAY.

(Boston Transcript)

His Honor—You crushed the plaintiff with your car.

Defendant—I know, sir, but put yourself in my place.

His Honor—Willingly, if you'll put yourself in his.

QUEER.

(Buffalo Express)

"You say that walking has pro[illegible] your life?"

"Yes, I do."

"What's so queer a[illegible] that?"

"Nothing. Only I don't know of [illegible] roads where there are no automobiles."

VERY HEAVY.

(Washington Star)

"I weigh my words," said the man of impressive assumptions.

"Why trouble?" inquired Miss Cayenne. "Has anybody accused you of not making your conversation sufficiently heavy?"

SPIRIT IN HIS GAME.

(Yonkers Statesman)

Redd—I told him he ought to put more spirit into his golf game.

Greene—And did he?

Redd—Sure. He takes four 'bookers' now before he starts playing.

A TRAGEDY.

(Louisville Courier-Journal)

"What's this in the mail?"

"A tragedy of mine."

"Have you really written a tragedy, old chap?"

"Looks like it. I've paid return postage on it now fourteen times."

LOW NECKS

They are low.
Even in daytime.
There's no one shape.
You know the elliptical cut.

MILDMAY

On Wednesday afternoon Apr. 25th Miss Mary Bilger, eldest daughter of Mr. Solomon Bilger, was united in marriage to Mr. Wesley Johnston of Kitchener. Rev. J. S. Burn conducted the ceremony. The happy young couple will make their home in Kitchener.

Word has been received here that Gunner "Misch" Hinsperger has been again wounded. This is the third time Misch has received wounds. Stretcher bearer Ray Keelan has been reported missing since April 9. No certain news has been received giving any particulars.

Mr. Gideon Schneider who was badly injured while unloading a car of feed for Urban Schmidt on April 16, is slowly recovering. It will be some months before he will regain the use of his injured knee.

Dr. Wilfred Herringer of the Army Medical Corps, after being at the Front for nearly a year came home on furlough and came to Mildmay on Monday and spent a short time renewing acquaintances. He left on Tuesday morning to visit his sisters in Winnipeg. He is to report again for duty by June 2nd. Dr. Herringer is well known here, his father George Herringer, being our postmaster for many years.

Mrs. Henry Privat is very ill at present with pneumonia. She has been laid up over two weeks and her condition is quite serious at present.

Ayton and Mildmay are to play baseball here on 24th and Walkerton and Teeswater are also slated on Victoria Day.

Mrs. Reba Schwalm visited friends in Wroxeter over Sunday.

Ploughing is nearly finished around Mildmay and seeding is quite common. The farmers report the soil is working up very nicely as it is much drier than last year.

The members of the Y. P. A. of the Evangelical Church assembled at the home of Mr. and Mrs. John Schuett on Tuesday evening and presented Miss Marie Bilger with a lovely clock as a token of their appreciation of Miss Bilger's services both in the Y. P. A. and in the choir. The occasion was the eve of Miss Bilger's marriage.

Mr. Jos Hesch is erecting a small stable on his premises north of the village this week.

Mr. George Horst has acquired a concrete work this summer. He starts with a job in Walkerton.

The bowling green of the Mildmay P. & R. Co. is in good shape but as no grass can as yet be seen it will some time before our elderly sports will be able to enjoy the gentle game of bowls.

A. B. A. Cunningham M. L. A. of Melville, Sask. has been appointed Sheriff for that town. He is the eldest son of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Cunningham.

Messrs. S. Stevenson, J. D. Robertson, Will Robinson, Murdock Thompson, and Clyde McKeeman motored to Kincardine on Sunday to attend I. O. O. F. Service.

Miss Sadie Colwell, clerk in Pinkerton store is spending a few days with her sister, Mrs. J. D. Robertson.

EAST BRUCE

Quite a number have gone to the Lake to catch the sucker fish and some have had tip top luck.

Mrs. J. R. Aitcheson of Clifford returned home after visiting her sister, Mrs. A. Ward.

Jack Thompson has been around with his clover mill, threshing, and the clover yield has been good.

Mr. Lorne Carr of Cargill spent Sunday with his friend, Mr. Geo. McKay.

Mr. Sam Davison has purchased a new McLaughlin car.

Capt. (Dr.) Munnie delivered a lecture in Centre Bruce church on Sunday last and the giving to the Belgian Relief fund was $135.00. His lecture was well worthy of note. Much sympathy is extended to the Capt. in the loss of his beloved wife who was drowned at Kincardine the next day.

CHEPSTOW

Pte. J. and Mrs. Sullivan of Hamilton are visiting to the latter's mother Mrs. Golden. Pte. Sullivan who was recently invalided home from the Front is convalescing from wounds inflicted as a result of some seven machine-gun bullets finding lodging places in his chest and arm, during the battle of the Somme. Pte. Sullivan spent some nine months in the trenches and had come through the battles of St. Eloi and Ypres unscathed.

Pte. Tony Schutkoski, formerly of here, who enlisted with a Calgary battalion, was also invalided home at the same time.

Mrs. F. Clancy and children have returned to their home following a month's visit in Guelph.

Winnipeg was the scene of an interesting marriage on Monday when Miss Lena McNab, a popular and well-known lady of our town, became the bride of Mr Jas. Flemming, formerly of here, now of Retlaw Alta. After a brief honeymoon to Western points the happy couple will take up their abode on the groom's farm, where the good wishes of their many friends here accompany them.

(Intended for last week)

Mr. A. Irwin of St. Catherine's, formerly a resident of this place renewed acquaintances last week while on a visit to his daughter Mrs. P. A. Dales. He was accompanied on his return by his two grand-daughters, the Misses Dales, for whom he has secured positions in the city.

HANOVER

The Hanover Ladies Gym. club scored a big success last week with production of the Comic Opera "The Nodding Mandarin". The proceeds amounting to $140 will be turned over to the Red Cross.

Prof. McLennan of the O. A. C. Guelph gave an instructive talk on gardening to a large audience here.

The Evening Advocate of Sterling, Colorado, to hand announces that Miss Melinda Woelfle, daughter of Mr. Levi Woelfe formerly of Hanover, has offered her services as a Red Cross nurse.

Mr. and Mrs. Geo. A. Francis, Mrs. Val. Kirchner and Miss Kirchner motored to Kitchener on Monday of last week to attend the funeral of Mr. Francis' mother, Mrs. L. Francis, who passed away last Friday at the advanced age of 80 years. Deceased was a sister of the late Val. Kirchner of Hanover.

Mr. John Diebel, liveryman of Hanover, met with a serious accident which will lay him off work for a couple of months. A wheel of his wagon sank in a bad piece of road in town, and he jumped to save himself from falling off and injured his back. At first it was feared that his spine was injured but happily such was not the case.

The Hanover Band claims that the $300 grant of the Town Council is not sufficient and will ask for an increase in financial support.

Mr T. Preston, B. A. of Markdale, has been appointed Public School Inspector pro tem for South Grey.

Lieut. A. H. Jukes writes the Post that very few of the 147th are still in England.

THE FIGHT FOR VIMY

Major Roy Robertson of the Canadian Engineers Gives Interesting Side-Lights on the Memorable Battle.

Writing to his father, Mr. David Robertson, Major Roy Robertson, of the Canadian Engineers, 3rd Division, talks most interestingly of the fight at Vimy on April 9th, in which the Canadians won lasting fame. Roy writes—

France, April 16, 1917.

The newspapers have come out about the Canadians' work so I guess there is no harm in my mentioning it. You can get a pretty good description of things from the papers, but it was the greatest fire works exhibition I ever saw. There had been a lot of artillery work for days before the attack and it was most interesting to see things develop.

The morning of the "show" at a certain hour all the guns opened up at once and the noise was like thunder. I was in front of them, and got up on a hill and looked back and there were flashes from all over as far as you could see, north and south. Then the S. O. S. signals from the enemy line began to shoot up from the enemy trenches and made a great display. The bursting shells just made a wall of flame and the infantry went over at the time arranged.

Occasionally you would hear the chatter of a machine gun out of the noise, but most of them had been put out of business by the bombardment. The infantry certainly did magnificently and the whole attack was a fine success. Fritz appeared surprised by the speed of the attack and it wasn't long before long strings of German prisoners came marching back, some very sulky and some apparently pleased. They were very well treated, given things to eat, etc. Some of them were giving away their possessions, buttons, etc. I saw two parties of four each carrying out German wounded to our dressing station where they were bandaged up and sent back the same as our own wounded. The German Officers felt their dignity very much hurt and were making all sorts of silly demands. There were thousands of German prisoners taken.

It was most interesting to get up on the Ridge afterwards and look back at our country and it is astonishing how it was taken he had such a command of our positions, particularly where he had heavy concrete machine gun emplacements. The artillery did good work and the whole ground was churned up with big holes you could put a team of horses in. The ground was littered with the usual wastage of war — broken concrete, bent iron rails, broken rifles, equipment, bombs, unexploded shells, trenches obliterated, numerous enemy trench mortars etc. I located a field gun and a trench mortar and my men got a machine gun and some more trench mortars. Part of the ridge was covered with woods and the trees are all uprooted and broken in pieces, so that you would hardly know it was wood. There are plenty of souvenirs if one only had the means of carrying them about.—German helmets, rifles, post cards and all sorts of things in their dug-outs, which show signs of hasty departure. I am sending a few cards and things, which I picked up. You might put them aside after you are through looking at them. I have a couple of helmets but I don't know if I will be able to get them sent back.

Wedded At Toronto

A popular young couple were united in the holy bonds of matrimony at St. Peter's Church, Toronto, on Wednesday, May 9th, when Miss Ottilia Beninger, youngest daughter of the late Ignatz Beninger of Culross, and sister of Mr. Albert Beninger of Walkerton, became the bride of Mr. Alfred Zettel of Carrick. On their return from the city, Mr. and Mrs. Zettel will reside on the groom's fine farm south of the town.

Celebrates Diamond Wedding.

Mr. and Mrs William Smith of Oak Lake, Man., formerly of Walkerton, celebrated the 60th anniversary of their marriage on May 4th. He was born in Scotland 83 years ago. Mrs. Smith is 83 years of age. Both are enjoying good health. All their seven children are living. Mr. Duncan Smith and Miss Agnes Smith are nephew and neice. Mr. W. Crawford, the local tax-collector, who is the oldest man in town, remembers very well attending school in Scotland with a brother of Mr. Smith.

Soldiers' Aid Tea Room

The committee of the Soldier's Aid Tea Room wish to announce that Wednesday May 16th, will be the last day the Tea Room will be open this Spring and as there are a number of plates and jars unclaimed, the owners can have them by calling at the Tea Room. The committee wish to thank the people of the town and vicinity who have assisted them so generously and also to draw attention to the concert to be given early in June by the Philharmonic Society under the auspices of the Soldier's Aid Tea Room.

THE LADIES DID WELL

$1,000 Mark Nearly Reached the Past Year by Entertainment Committee of Hospital Trust— Minstrel Show A Dandy

A local organization which deserves the highest credit for its work of the past year is the Entertainment Committee of the Hospital Trust. In spite of the incessant demands which are being made upon the public for patriotic funds, these ladies have actually succeeded in doubling this year the amount of money usually raised by their committee. Spurred on by the need for more funds, the ladies committed themselves to an effort to raise $1,000 before June 1, 1917. So far they have raised about $940 and prospects are fairly good for securing the full amount. Needless to say, the Committee has given an endless amount of time and energy to this work, and the fact that its members have been active in patriotic work as well, makes their performance all the more creditable.

The second Minstrel Show given by the ladies at the Opera House on Friday night was a great success. The program was almost a complete change from the first Show which made such a hit two months ago, and it was even better than their former program the ladies benefitting by their previous experience.

The pair of Bantams, donated by Mr. O. E. Klein, were drawn by Mr. Esmer.

The winners of the 100lb parcels of sugar donated by the local grocers were:—Mrs. John Wingfelder, Mrs. Con. Reichenbach, Mrs. Robt. Goode, Miss Jennie Hyslop, Mrs. McMullen (Mt. Forest), Miss Jean Reid, Mrs. Grant and Mrs. Brocklebank.

Liquor Offender Goes to Gaol

The authorities have been cleaning up at Ripley, where infractions of the Ontario Temperance Act have been frequent. For the second time within two weeks a $200 fine was imposed by the local magistrates there on Friday. The defendant was John Wyley, hostler at the local hotel, who was found guilty of keeping liquor in his room. Wyley was defended by Barrister Stewart of Kincardine, and Mr. O. E. Klein acted for License Inspector White. Wyley refused to pay his fine so the magistrates, Messrs. Logan and Osborne, committed him to the County Gaol at Walkerton for five months.

Seed Potatoes At Last

Mr. N. C. McKay, of the Agr. Dept. has stepped into the breach with two car loads of potatoes which will be available for the farmers and townsfolk of Bruce County shortly, being now on the way. It is expected that they will sell at about four dollars a bag, although the price has not yet been fixed. The local Preparedness League called a meeting last Thursday night to discuss the potato situation. Irwin Bros. having kindly offered to furnish seed potatoes at cost. No definite conclusion was reached and and Irwin Bros. have since received word from the West that their order for a carload has been cancelled.

Y. M. C. A. Canvass

The figures of the Y. M. C. A. canvass on Tuesday are not yet complete. Treasurer Geo. D. McKay announces cash on hand of about $900. The Committee now aims at making the total $1,000 even, and it will take some scratching to do it. There were few large subscriptions, the best response being made by people of very small means to whom the giving of a dollar means a bit of sacrifice. The work of the Y. M. C. A. is appreciated here and a good many people told the canvassers they were glad to have an opportunity to contribute. As this is the first time the needs of the Y. M. C. A. have ever been presented to the people here, the result of the Canvass is fairly encouraging.

Back from the South.

Judge and Mrs. Klein, Beatrice and Betty, arrived home Thursday night after a three months' sojourn in Florida. The Judge is somewhat improved in health but is not entirely recovered. Judge Klein says he found the climate of Florida superior to that of California, but in other respects he preferred the Pacific State. Florida is largely populated by a poor class of people and as tourist traffic there is a comparatively new development, accommodation is mostly of a primitive kind. Grape fruit and potatoes grow in large quantities but the soil requires a great deal of fertilizer. Prices of everything are very high and since the frost that partly destroyed the fruit crop, even oranges cost as much at Miami as they do at Walkerton.

SEED POTATOES

The Department of Agriculture has made arrangements for two cars of Seed Potatoes for the farmers of Bruce County. Both of these are now on the way and should be here shortly. One will be distributed from Paisley and the other from Walkerton, Cargill, etc. Parties wishing seed should immediately notify N. C. McKay, Dept. of Agriculture, Walkerton.

LIVELY WEEK IN CARRICK

Aeroplane Visit and Three Fires Inside of Two Days—Barn-burnings May be the work of an Incendiary

The Township of Carrick had its usual peace and quiet disturbed by several exciting events on Sunday and Monday. The landing of an aeroplane which had lost its way on the road from Toronto to Camp Borden on Sunday night caused a rush of sightseers to a field on the Elora Road 2½ miles south of Mildmay. One farmer, Ezra Reuber, who was preparing to hurry to the scene in his car, rushed into his driving shed with his lantern to get some gasoline. The result was an explosion, the building being burned to the ground.

The same day, the big barn of Jos. Filsinger, lot 13, con. 4, was burned to the ground while the family was in bed. Twelve head of cattle, valued at over a hundred dollars each, and 2 colts were burned. All that was saved out of the building was four horses. Mr. Filsinger had $1500 insurance in the Farmer's Central of Walkerton. His loss will double the amount of the insurance. The origin of the fire is a complete mystery and there is some suspicion of incendiary.

An incendiary may also have caused the fire which occurred at John Renwick's, townline Carrick and Howick on Monday night, when his barn was completely destroyed by fire. Most of the contents except a few pigs, were got out of the building in time. Mr. Renwick unfortunately carried no insurance.

The aeroplane which visited the township was bound from Toronto to Camp Borden. Aviator Clark lost his way owing to a defective compass and had to descend on account of lack of fuel. He procured a supply on Tuesday morning and floated gaily away.

Wounded At Vimy Bridge

Since seeing the name of Sergt. George Kingsbury in the casualty lists recently as "wounded" his many Walkerton friends have been anxiously awaiting further information. Particulars were received this week in a letter from George himself written from a hospital in Leicester, Eng. to his old employer, Mr. R. E. Truax M. P. George tells how he was hit in the memorable charge up the heights at Vimy Ridge in an interesting letter which is published on page 5 of this week's Telescope.

SEND-OFF FOR WESS.

Fifth Russell Boy to Don the Khaki is Made Presentations by the Town and Fire Brigade

Pte. Wess Russell, of the Mounted Rifles, who was home from Toronto this week on last leave, was given a hearty send-off Monday night. Before the Y. M. C. A. lecture at the Town Hall Monday night, Wess was called to the platform by President John A. Rowland of the Local Branch of the Bruce Preparedness League, and handed a piece of gold on behalf of the town. Mr. Rowland pointed out that the Russell family had now given five boys and had one girl doing soldiers' work. The people of this town are proud of the Russell family, whose name will go down in the history of Bruce County. Mr. Rowland paid his respects to the slackers still left in town, declaring that some of them were "afraid to fight and too proud to work!" Ex-Mayor Lippert, on behalf of the Firemen made a presentation to Pte. Russell, who has been a faithful member of the brigade. He read a nicely-worded address signed by Chief Sandy George. Wess expressed his best thanks in a few modest words.

Walkerton Boy Coolly Battles for His Life Against Overwhelming Odds up Among the Clouds and Wins

Here is a plain story of a Walkerton boy's actual experience over the Hindenburg Line—A few thousand feet above—which for real thrills beats any fiction we have read lately. Although it is written with Capt. Eric Robertson's characteristic modesty, the reader cannot fail to conclude from the facts that Capt. Robertson played a distinguished part. This conclusion is confirmed by the report made of the incident by his commanding officer. The story is part of a letter written home by Capt. Robertson to his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Norman Robertson of Walkerton:—

B. E. F. France.
14th, April, 1917.

Dear Ones All,—

I wrote you about my scrap on Easter Sunday, didn't I? I had an even more exciting time yesterday and am feeling a little upset to-day as a result, nerves just a bit jangled up I guess. We were sent out in a formation of six machines yesterday to bomb a certain point about ten miles behind the German lines. We got up [illegible] feet before going over [illegible] then fell into our places and made a dash for it. Of course we were well above the clouds and had to rely on our compasses to know when we had reached the point where we should come down through the clouds. We followed our leader of course and when he gave the signal to descend we all dived. The clouds were very thick—about 4000 feet through—and when we came out on the other side the formation had ceased to exist. In fact as far as I could see we were the only machine in the sky. However I did see our objective, and dived down to 4200 feet to be sure of getting the bombs on it. After dropping our pills I turned and made for home with throttle wide open, and climbing to the extreme limit of the old bus's capacity knowing that we would get a mighty hot reception and hoping to Frederick Hughes, the fifteen year old grandson of Mr. C. A. Fox, had his tonsils and adenoids removed at the County Hospital here on Friday. His father, Dr. Hughes of Waterloo, was here and remained in town over Sunday.

Brant Boys Off For Front

At a Public gathering held at Hanover on Sunday night two Brant boys, Jim McNaughton and Wes Voelzing, who are going overseas with the 248th Grey Battalion, were presented by the Brant Preparedness League with five dollar gold pieces.

Three-legged Chickens

Mr. Alph Stevens has three young Black Minorca Chicks, fresh hatched last week, which are rare curiosities. Each has three legs fully developed but in each case the third leg is yellow in colour. Mr. Stevens is trying to save these little freaks but it is doubtful whether they will survive.

"Spiegel" Wounded Again

The name of E. Reichenbach, nephew of Mr. John Wingfelder, appeared on the casualty lists last Wednesday among the wounded. "Spiegel" enlisted with the 34th Batt'n and has been two years at the Front. About a year ago he was seriously wounded and spent several months in the hospital.

Lieut. Mel Wilson

His many Walkerton friends will be glad to learn that Mel. Wilson, son of Rev. Thos. Wilson, has been granted a commission as Lieutenant in the 14th Can. Machine Gun Co. Mel. enlisted in the 71st Batt'n as a private and deserves a good bit of credit for having won his promotion step by step out of sheer merit.

Ralph Glave In France.

Ralph Glave is now in France, having gone over with a draft of the Divisional Signalling Corps on April 21st. Ralph who is the only son of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Glave, enlisted with the 160th Batt'n and was for a time instructor in Signalling at London. He was later transferred to the Divisional Signalling Corps at Ottawa, and went Overseas early last Fall.

Goetz—Hasson.

The marriage took place at the Holy Family Church, (Parkdale), Toronto, on Wednesday morning, May 9th at seven o'clock, of Mr. Leo W. Goetz, only son of the late Mathew Goetz, County Clerk, and Mrs. Goetz, of Walkerton, to Miss Beatrice Hasson, only daughter of Mrs. Hasson of Arva, near Guelph. Owing to recent bereavement in the groom's family the affair was very quiet. Mr. and Mrs. Goetz left on an early train for New York, the bride being becomingly gowned in a grey travelling suit with hat to match. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful set of furs. On their return from New York, the young couple will make their home at Guelph, where Mr. Goetz is a practising barrister.

CURRENT COMMENT

HAIG VS. HINDENBURG.

Stewart Lyon, Canadian correspondent with the Canadians at the front, cables that "the Hun is at last headed for home and going strong." Notwithstanding snowstorms and other weather vagaries, General Haig is pushing his spring drive with vigor. He has brought up his big guns over impassable and impossible roads, and is moving forward with clockwork regularity. The early morning cables reported that he had captured six villages—Angres, Givenchy, Vimy, Petit-Vimy, Willerval and Bailleul, and south of Bailleul the line was bulged back clear to the Scarpe. This forenoon he reports the capture of the village of Fayet, one mile northwest of St. Quentin, and the important positions of Ascension Farm and Grand Priel Farm, and has secured Vimy Station, La Chaudiere, and positions between Givenchy-en-Gohelle and Angres. He also reports progress north of the Bapaume-Cambrai road. The French report active artillery fighting in the Champagne district and that south of St. Quentin there has been heavy artillery firing.

Trench warfare has been abandoned for the present, and open fighting has taken its place. At this the British and Canadians are said to be more than a match for the Germans, who some time ago boasted of their superiority in this kind of warfare. While the German newspapers are doing their best to minimize the Allied victories in France, the military experts are gently breaking the news to the people, telling them that the Germans are now inferior in men and material to the Allies.

Whatever may be the final result of this great battle, it was begun well and continues well. This is not the first time that this ground has been fought over. In January and February, 1916, the Germans renewed offensive operations on a large scale on the front from Lens to Arras, making slight gains towards the Labyrinth. In May the British took over this section of the line; and they signalized their advent by an attempt to storm Vimy ridge. On May 15 several Lancashire regiments won their way to positions at the northern end of the crest; but after six days of continuous bombardment and repeated infantry attacks they found the positions too hot to hold and were forced to fall back to their original positions. The Germans continued to hold this salient until they were driven from it by the Canadians.

We wonder what Gen. Hindenburg thinks of it all to-day. Speaking to the representative of a Spanish newspaper just before Gen. Haig began his smash, the German General said that > No American expeditionary corps of any size could be ready for dispatch to Europe for a year at least, and, according to Entente leaders, it is this year that is to bring a decision. Moreover, Germany also has taken her measures. The Eastern front has been so consolidated and garrisoned with such a mass of men that General Brusiloff can achieve no success at any price, while the most confirmed optimist in the Entente camp cannot deny that recent Russian developments will promote German plans.

> Last year the German strategical army reserve was required to hold General Brusiloff in check while the western front was thrown on its own limited resources. The Anglo-French attack was nevertheless repulsed and to-day the situation was fundamentally different. The western front had become so strong that it could withstand every attack.

Does he believe that latter sentence now? The German western front is in extremity, in dire danger. The Hindenburg line is like a string, where it does not bend it breaks. We have every hope that next week the Allies will have not only captured the whole of this line, but will have left it far in the rear.

TRADE BRIEFS.

Unfavorable weather conditions have resulted in the failure of the wheat, linseed and corn crops of the Rosario district, Argentina.

Seeds will be supplied to Uruguayan farmers by the Government. Payment can be made in cash at harvest time. Crops may be insured against hail in the Government insurance bank.

Sardines, trout, yellowtails and salmon are scarce in the Japanese markets. The Department of Agriculture and Commerce and fishery experts are discussing plans to increase the number of fish.

Road development in Peru has been assured by the passage of a highway law, by the national Congress. A road connecting Parma with Tilamioc has been constructed. This will help to reduce food prices in the Peruvian highlands and will open up a previously undeveloped coffee and timber district.

A model normal school for professional and technical instruction is to be built in Brazil at a cost of $42,000. There should be an opportunity for American supplies.

South African dealers show a preference for Baltic pine, although experiments with Douglas fir have proved its superiority in several respects. An energetic advertising campaign is needed to develop the market for this wood.

New Brunswick's smelt exports in the 1916-17 season were about normal, amounting to 926,59[illegible] pounds valued at $95,002. Prices averaged slightly over 10 cents a pound.

A barium sulphide factory which is being built at Pulantien, Manchuria, will depend on Kwangtung for its tungsten. Formerly the output of the Kwangtung mines was shipped to Osaka.

Shanghai suffered from a coal famine this winter, while in other districts of China fuel was cheap and plentiful. This condition was due to low water in the rivers, which made the floating of loaded barges impossible.

HER HUMBLE LOVER

"I had been staying there for some time," he says, slowly and thoughtfully. "When an Englishman remains in one place on the continent—Italy especially—for any length of time, all sorts of rumors are current amongst the inhabitants as to the reasons for his visit."

"Yes," she says again, listening attentively.

"There may or may not have been some such rumors at Casalina, and you may have heard them?"

He puts it as a question, but Laura Derwent, with her accomplishment of veiling her face, so to speak, does not show the slightest sign of comprehension.

"I say," he goes on, calmly and quietly, "there have been some idle—quite idle—rumors at Casalina and you may have heard them?"

"It is just possible," she says, looking down, unable to bear the searching gaze of his dark eyes.

"Exactly," he says. "I see by your manner that you did hear them. Then I have a request to make to you. If you think I do not, but you may—that you are, shall I say indebted to me in any way——"

"I am awfully indebted to you!" she murmurs.

"Then you can discharge that indebtedness by granting this request," he says, gravely.

"What is it?" she asks. "Whatever it may be, I will comply with it."

"It is this," he answers, "that you will say no word of what you have heard to Signa?"

"To Signa?" she says.

"To Signa!" he repeats, quietly.

She is silent for a moment, then she looks up at him.

"Do you suppose it possible that I should mention an——"

"Scandal," he puts in for her.

"Yes, scandal, to her, your future wife?"

"No," he responds, with a grave smile. "It is not possible. I am fully answered. I thank you. Shall we dance now?"

CHAPTER XXIV.

"Quiet, my dear!" exclaims Lady Rookwell, with a grin. "What do you call quiet? I should consider this quiet enough even to satisfy you," and she shakes her head emphatically.

It is just three weeks after the ball at Northwell Grange—that ball about which the country is still talking, concerning which the society papers are still publishing paragraphs—and Lady Rookwell, Signa and Laura Derwent are seated in her ladyship's drawing-room.

Scattered about on tables and chairs is a miscellaneous collection of female attire, consisting of dresses for morning and evening wear, travelling costumes, ulsters, a tremendous sealskin sack, muffs of sable, bonnets and hats, in quantities large enough, apparently, to set up a fashionable milliner's. Seated in the midst of this paraphernalia is Lady Rookwell, "fingering" a costly white satin costume, the lace and trimmings of which plainly denote the purpose for which it is intended to serve; Laura flits to and fro, turning over the mass with critical approval, and Signa stands leaning against the back of a chair, contemplating the disorder with rather a troubled smile, which, trouble as it is, does not detract from the happiness which glows on her beautiful face and shines in her dark, violet eyes.

"Quiet!" repeats Lady Rookwell. "I call it a remarkably quiet wedding——"

"Oh!" interjects Signa.

"Considering all the circumstances," goes on her ladyship argumentatively. "You must remember who and what the gentleman is whom you have honored with your hand. He is——"

"Spare us! Let us off with say one-third of Lord Delamere's titles, aunt!" exclaims Laura Derwent, with mock dismay.

"The Earl of Delamere, my dear, and though no doubt you would like to creep off to church arm in arm with him, and dressed in a brown linsey, it can't be. The world—society—demands something like decency from people of his standing, and really I think he has behaved wonderfully well in humoring your whims to the extent he has done."

"He is an angel!" declares Laura Derwent, taking up the sealskin and eyeing it with intense and speechless approval. "Simply an angel! I never met a man like him. He doesn't seem to possess even a temper. A child—if he cared for it—could do anything with him."

Signa smiles.

"And yet you could not persuade him to go to the Grange, or to leave his lodgings at Mrs. Thompson's," she says, with pleasant malice.

Laura Derwent pouts.

"There he was obstinate, if you like. Of course, he is eccentric. The idea of putting up with such an abode, and that, too, when his own place was ready for him! And to insist that I should remain as hostess at the Grange!" and she laughs. "Oh, yes, he is eccentric! But what a happy girl you will be! And as to a quiet wedding, why, I think it is very good of him not to insist upon a regular state affair; he is so proud of you that he might have made up his mind to a wedding at the Savoy, with half the house of peers in attendance."

Signa puts up her hands with a little gesture of mock alarm.

"And you call six bridesmaids and—and all this, quiet," she says, nodding at the superb wedding garment which Lady Rookwell seems loath to put aside. "It seems to me a dreadful fuss and—and expense. You all forget that—that though Hector is an earl I am a mere nobody."

"So was the beggar-girl when King Cophetua married her," retorts Laura cheerfully; "but you may depend upon it that there was a tremendous wedding on that festive occasion. Now, my dear child, you have nothing to complain of; you have got the best man of the day—'pon my word, I don't know a better parti!—and everything your own way. Be content!" and she puts her arm around Signa and kisses her, holding her at arms' length with affectionate admiration.

"The simple fact is that Signa is romantic," says Lady Rookwell, with a sarcastic smile, "and would like this affair to end consistently. It has been so deliciously romantic up to the present, that to conclude it properly she and Delamere ought to run away and get married on the sly."

"Lady Rookwell!" murmurs Signa, with smiling reproach.

Then she goes out on the velvety lawn, to wander about the garden where, alone and undisturbed, she may dwell on her vast happiness. My Lord of Delamere has gone up to London to make preparations for his wedding, for even so eccentric a peer as Hector cannot be married like a common individual; and there are deeds to sign and execute, arrangements to be made with the steward and agents of the vast estate, who will be in charge during the absence of his lordship on his wedding tour for, after some discussion, it has been decided that the happy pair shall make a little continental tour in their honeymoon, returning to the Grange at the end of the month, to take, as Lady Rookwell says, their proper position in "the county."

"Bring him back a different man, my dear," she says. "He has had quite enough wandering and gallivanting. Let him come and settle down, and breed prize short-horns, in noble emulation of his grace the duke."

Yes, Signa is very happy—happier than it falls to the lot of many mortals to be, and yet there is little, if any, gratification derived from the high estate to which she is about to be raised. It is love, love and nothing but love of which she thinks; and when the fact now and again flashes across her mind, that in a few days she will be the Countess of Delamere, and a power in the land, she strives to put it from her and forget it. But the world has a knack of declining to forget such things, and it insists upon keeping the fact green in Signa's memory. Not a day passes but parcels of presents arrive at the Rectory for Signa, the future mistress of Northwell Grange; the drawing-room table and her own little dressing table are covered with jewel-cases and the thousand and one useful and useless articles which our dear friends deem it necessary to offer up at the hymeneal shrine.

Sometimes, as Signa opens the morocco-covered and satin-lined cases, and looks dreamily at their inclosed treasures, she cannot help thinking that if it were plain Hector Warren, instead of my Lord of Delamere, whom she were going to marry, how few would such tributes be. For instance, would her grace have sent her the present of antique Spanish lace, declared by Laura to be worth a Jew's ransom?—or the duke the little cars containing a diamond bracelet and a brooch with a bull carved in cameo? From one person there comes no present, but something that Signa values more highly, perhaps, than any of her trinkets. It is only a short note of good wishes, expressed with gentle mournfulness, and it is signed "Lilian Blyte." Signa, when she read that note, knew that the proud mother was aware of that scene in the tower and understood it all; and there were tears in Signa's eyes as he put that small crested piece of paper in some hidden receptacle.

Of Sir Frederic she had heard nothing since that terrible, yet delightful night, excepting that he was abroad, no one knew exactly where. Notwithstanding the scene at the time, and those few awful moments of mental agony, Signa cannot find it in her heart to feel hatred toward him; no true woman, perhaps, can bring herself to hate the man who has loved her, however great the trouble he may have caused her through that love, and when Signa thinks of him—which, alas! for poor Sir Frederic is but seldom—it is more with a pitying sorrow than anger. Between her and Hector his name is never mentioned, and she does not even know that the old tower has been razed to the ground by Lady Blyte's orders.

"Of course, you can't be married from the Rectory, my dear," Lady Rookwell had said when Lord Delamere had at last persuaded Signa to name the day—"that's impossible. In the first place, the Rectory wouldn't hold the guests; and in the next, the fuss and bustle would send your aunt into hysterics. The best thing you can do, my dear, is to come here; we shan't go into hysterics, and we shall enjoy the fuss and bustle; and as for Laura, it will simply be a god-send to her. She has been so mixed up with the affair, that she couldn't feel more interested if she were going to marry Delamere herself—which she would very much like to do!"

"Which she would," assented Laura, unblushingly.

"—And will only be too delighted to be a prominent personage on the nuptial day."

And Signa, with many protests, had accepted gratefully and sweetly. It seemed to her as if the world were full of friends, and that she were the most favored of all favored mortals just at this time.

So the Beauty had the pleasure of assisting in the selection of the wedding and other dresses—indeed, of superintending, for Signa showed what Laura called a shameful indifference in the matter—and made all arrangements. It was not to be a grand wedding, but, on the other hand, there were a great many people coming. It seemed to Signa as if half the county had been invited, and she once hinted, with a blush, that there would not be room in the old church.

"Then," said Hector, with a man's sublime ignorance, "you and I will keep outside and be married amongst the tombstones, Signa!"

Laura Derwent was to be the chief bridesmaid—"mourner," as Lord Delamere put it—two of the ducal daughters were to be the second and third, and the rest were drawn from a contingent of poor and needy kinsfolk of Lord Delamere. Kinsfolk whom he had rarely seen, but who had been constant recipients of his bounty and generosity, and who regarded him with an awe that half amused Signa, whom they persisted in looking upon as one of the most unfortunate and beautiful creatures on the earth. The bridesmaids, with the exception of Laura Derwent, were put up in the ducal palace, while Signa flitted to and fro between the Rectory and the villa.

A great change had come over her aunt and uncle. She was now everything in their eyes. Nothing was too god for her; the rector almost fell on good for her; the rector almost fell on never failed to rise when she entered the room, and hurried to the door to open it for her when she quitted an apartment, as if she were already the Countess of Delamere.

Is it at all wonderful that Signa moved about during this time as if she were the phantom of a dream? It all seemed so unreal to her that at times she was inclined to believe that no such person as Hector Warren, no such place as Northwell Grange existed, and then he would come, still wearing his well worn clothes and travel-stained hat, and as he held her in his arms the reality would come back to her, and she would understand that all this fuss, and show, and glory were as nothing compared with his love.

As to Archie, words cannot describe the exceeding joy of that young gentleman at the present state of things. That Hector Warren should be Lord Delamere does not at all surprise him, after the first natural shock, it is just as it should be, in Archie's estimation. Signa is fit to marry a prince, and Hector Warren is only fulfilling his duty in becoming an earl. With frank independence Archie calls the earl Hector, though the rector and his wife have tried hard to impress upon him the enormity of so doing.

"We always called him 'Hector,' and his name—or one of his names—is Hector, and why shouldn't I call him so still? He don't mind, do you, my lord?" And Master Archie dashes full pelt upon Lord Delamere's knee.

"Not a bit. I like it," is the reply. "Let me be always Hector with my friends, and I am content; all the rest of the world can call me what they like."

To Archie's infinite delight, Lord Delamere has taken him to London—is it because his lordship may have some one near him to talk continually about Signa?—and Archie is near him now, ensconced in a grand London hotel, and enjoying himself to his heart's content.

"A wonderful man, my dear!" says Lady Rookwell, when she heard it; "there can't be much evil in a man when of his own free will he elects to have a young child with him as a companion." And Signa smiles with rapturous assent.

All this Signa thinks of as she saunters in the beautiful gardens of the Villa and her heart is full of that peace which perfect happiness alone can bring. It is difficult to realize that in a few short hours she will be Hector Warren's wife, that is, the Countess of Delamere, and mistress of Northwell Grange; still the fact comes before her. The bans have been asked three times, and soon the irrevocable words will be spoken, and she will be no longer Signa Grenville, but my lady of Delamere!

CHAPTER XXV.

With a loud resonant peal the bells of Northwell ring out to the world the warning of another marriage morn. In and about the Villa there is much bustle and confusion; carriages arrive in twos and threes, setting down the favored guests who are invited to the wedding breakfast. Another string of vehicles paces round the church, which is all alive and alight with a crowd of village sightseers, dressed in their best, to see the grand wedding, a double row of little girls in muslin frocks, and bearing baskets of flowers, line the path to the church porch, eager for the moment when they are to fling the said flowers at the feet of the bride. The coachmen, as they drive up, smile significantly, and put their immense satin rosettes into place; footmen range themselves round the churchyard rails and view the proceedings with haughty but bland interest. Inside the church itself the choir in clean surplices await the rector, who, all in a state of excitement and nervousness, coughs and rubs his chin, and wipes the perspiration from his face in turns.

Meanwhile, up at the Villa, Laura Derwent is in her element. Dressed, as are all the bridesmaids, in a costume of the faintest pink—a pink so faint as to be almost imperceptible—with a hat which has cost Madame Louise a world of anxiety, she moves about amongst the crowd of guests, with her brilliant smile and clear, bell-like voice in constant requisition.

"So glad it is a fine morning," she says to her grace, who has deemed it necessary to come in her most resplendent feathers and who looks as if, barring the bonnet, she were going to court. "Happy the bride that the sun shines on, you know; such nonsense, isn't it? But it is a delightful day, though. What a crowd it will be! Poor Signa will be horrified! she has insisted on a quiet wedding. As if anyone who was anyone could be married quietly. Well, your grace, I am glad to see you have come, we should have missed you terribly."

"Yes, I've come," says his grace, with a smile and a nod, "though, to tell you the truth, I ought to be at the farm; one of my bulls has gone mad or something like it. But I couldn't disappoint you, to say nothing of the bride. Where is she?"

And he looks around as if he expected to see Signa.

Laura laughs delightedly.

"Upstairs, of course," she replies. "You didn't expect to see her on view before the ceremony, did you?"

"I didn't know," said the duke, humbly, "or I forget. I hope she's well. Most charming young lady, sensible, too," he adds, as if that were quite a novel quality in young ladies.

"Quite well, and looking more charming than ever, as you'll admit when you see her," says Laura, passing on to the next arrival.

In her ancient lace and heavy satin, which for this occasion only is purple instead of black, Lady Rookwell seats herself in her easy chair, and presides with an intense enjoyment of the scene.

"I hope you'll all find room," she says, with a gesture of despair that would be insolent from any one but herself. "Laura has asked just twice more than this twice mite of a place will hold, and if there is any crowding you must blame her"; and her grace graciously replies that there will be plenty of room, she is sure, and that of course every one is anxious to see the wedding about which everybody is talking.

And Signa? Upstairs in Lady Rookwell's own room she sits—or rather stands, surrounded by Lady Rookwell's and Laura Derwent's maids, arranging the costly wedding dress and listening, half absently, to the hum and buzz of the crowd beneath.

EARTH-EATERS.

They Flourish in Various Climes of the World.

At Ochrida, in Macedonia, and in some villages of Sardinia, says Literary Digest, a fine white earth forms an essential part of the local bread, and is brought to market together with other articles of food. Other countries in Europe where earth is eaten are Treviso, in upper Italy, Styria, in Austria, and certain parts of Germany around the famous Kyffhauser, and in the heath of Luneburg. Here the workingmen butter their bread with a fine clay nicknamed by them "stone butter." Finally, in the northernmost parts of Sweden, and on the Peninsula of Kola, in the government of Archangel, a fine clay, cleaned of mud and pulverized, is mixed with flour to make the bread tasty.

But the real home of earth eating is Asia. The famous earth of Nishapur, Persia, is used either raw or roasted, and is often prepared with spices and perfumes. According to the traveller Saller, the Eskimos are great consumers of various kinds of earth.

Passing to India, we are told by Dr. Rabitsch that in the markets of Calcutta burned clay is offered for sale in the shape of small disks. The women are its principal consumers. Women and children in Siam consider steatite a delicious dainty. The women of the coast towns of Java swallow their share in the form of small tablets or tubes, mainly with the purpose of preserving their slimness. Upon the Island of Timor, of the Malay Archipelago, burned clay is consumed with solemn religious rites.

The earth-eating centres of Africa are Nubia and certain parts of the western coast. The negroes of Guinea, for instance, have become so fond of their earth that no means of persuasion is strong enough to prevent their overeating. On the shores of certain rivers in Senegambia the natives use a white, soapy earth, as soft as butter, to replace fat in the preparation of their food.

The inhabitants of New Guinea consume great quantities of a greenish soap stone, while the natives of New Caledonia eat a ferruginous clay either fresh or preserved in the form of dried, perforated cakes for their dessert.

A classical land for earth-eating, according to our authority, is South America, where we meet with it under its most various forms, from the Rio Grande del Norte down to Parana and Pilcomayo. In many parts of Mexico earth is eaten passionately, not only by children and women but by grown men, and in the markets of Guadalajara, San Luis, Puebla and other towns, pastils of white burned clay are offered as dainties. The inhabitants of Guatemala use instead of powdered sugar a white and yellowish earth, probably an efflorescence of volcanic ashes. On the western coast of our continent we find earth eating populations from Colombia to Bolivia.

Evidently, earth eating is not limited to any particular latitude, although more prevalent in the tropics. Women are its principal adepts. One authority does not agree with the famous ethnologist, Dr. F. von Kellwald, in finding a close relationship between malaria and earth-eating.

The ultimate reasons for this dietetic curiosity are manifold: Necessity, the agreeable, salty taste, and perversion of appetite, generally met with in people suffering from chlorosis and hysteria. Sometimes, however, it is the medicinal instinct, the craving for a cure for certain dainty tropical sicknesses, which drives man to indulge in this strange dainty. This explains the use of earth by some of the greatest physicians of antiquity. Curiously enough, earth eating, if not abused, is not detrimental to health. But with certain people—above all, children and young girls—the craving is often so strong that harsh preventive measures, such as iron masks or the tying of hands, must be used.

IF WE SMILE.

The late Lord Derby once said that "a frequent smile or a cheerful countenance was just as necessary for the welfare of the human frame as water was to a plant." Something like the following was observed in "Hamilton's favorite shopping place" on an artistically painted card:

We receive our greatest lessons
In the realm where nature rules;
It brings cheer and patience
Every mile,
And the greatest of all lessons
In the oldest school of rules
Is our work is far more welcome
If we smile.

Investment and Speculation

When any one is buying a coat or a fishing rod or a rose tree or laying down a cellar or setting up a library, either he knows what he wants, where to get it and what to pay for it or else he takes earnest counsel with his friends and with the most trustworthy professional advisers that he can find and uses all the wits that he and others can bring to bear on the subject in order to make sure that his purchase is prudently conducted. He attends sales, rummages in shops and discusses the matter in his club until he and it are voted a nuisance. If only half as much time and trouble were devoted to the careful selection of investments there would be fewer bad companies, unscrupulous promoters and ornamental directors, the world would be very much richer, and people would show less tendency to gravitate into questionable hands.—Cornhill Magazine.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS CURE CONSTIPATION

Childhood constipation can be promptly cured by Baby's Own Tablets. These Tablets never fail to regulate the bowels and stomach, thus curing constipation, colic, indigestion and the many other little minor ills of little ones. Concerning them Mrs. Louis Nicole, St. Paul du Buton, Que., writes: "My baby suffered from constipation, but thanks to Baby's Own Tablets, he is a fine healthy boy to-day. It gives me much pleasure in recommending the Tablets to other mothers." The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25 cents a box from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SWISS UNEMPLOYED.

Beggars, Loafers and Dependents Not Tolerated.

Switzerland regards the problem of the unemployed poor as an economic question, believing that a man who is not employed, if left to himself, is apt to become unemployable. Such men will sooner or later become a subject of charity, and therefore a burden upon the community, which is obliged to support not only the individual, but also those dependent upon him. Switzerland deems it, consequently, in her own interests to lend her assistance to the unfortunate unemployed to get work.

While the authorities help persons who are making honest efforts to find employment, they also regard it their duty to punish the shirker of work, and to see to it that he earns his living by his own efforts. Loafers are not tolerated in the Alpine republic, and begging is prohibited by law. There is no resorting to charitable institutions, no wandering about the country extorting alms from honest people, while pretending to be in search of employment.

If an individual fails to seek work, the state will promptly find something for him, and if the task does not suit him, or if he still persists in idling about, he is placed in the workhouse, where strict discipline is maintained, and where every inmate is obliged to labor to the full capacity of his strength. As compensation he receives board and lodging and three to ten cents in cash per day. The length of his stay in such an institution depends upon his conduct during his forced employment. The state meantime even makes a profit on his labor, for most of the institutions of this character are under such efficient business management that they are sources of income instead of expense to the respective cantons.

A distinction is made between the unemployed by casualty or misfortune and those who have no work on account of lazy habits or misconduct. This latter class are treated as criminals, and as such they are assigned to a penal institution; the deserving unemployed, however, are treated with every consideration, and work is found for them in a way which is not humiliating to them.

A system of insurance against unemployment prevails in some of the Swiss cantons. By it persons contributing a certain sum per month are guaranteed employment or paid a weekly indemnity for the period during which they are out of work. Such persons, must, however, be able to show that their unemployment is not their own fault. This plan of insurance is not general, nor is it very popular, as it involves many details which make it difficult for the beneficiaries to secure the payment of the benefits.

Employees of Swiss industrial institutions are required to insure themselves against the expense of medical treatment and supplies in case of illness or accident. The Society for the Protection of Domestic Servants assumes, for instance, the responsibility for the care and treatment of those enrolled upon its records.

About twenty-five years ago employment agencies were first established in the leading centres of Switzerland. Municipal interest was soon shown in these institutions and by 1903 several of the largest cities, such as Zurich, Geneva, Berne, etc., operated municipal bureaus. In March, 1910, these official institutions were united into a national organization, subsidized by the Federal government, called the Swiss bureau of Employment, with head offices at Zurich.

The undertaking of supplying the needy unemployed with work has thus practically passed into the hands of the Federal government.—New York Evening Post.

Well Known Farmer Gives His Evidence

SAYS DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS CURED HIM OF GRAVEL.

Mr. William Wood, of Hadlington, Ont., is Added to Long List of Cures by the Great Canadian Kidney Remedy, Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Hadlington, Ont., May 7 (Special).—Mr. William Wood, a well known farmer living near here, is shouting the praises of Dodd's Kidney Pills. He claims they cured him of two of the most painful and dangerous forms of kidney trouble, bladder trouble and gravel.

"Yes, I was troubled with gravel and bladder trouble," Mr. Woods said when asked about his cure. "But since I took four boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills my troubles are gone. I also had heart flutterings and shortness of breath. There were flashes of lights and specks before my eyes and I was very nervous. All these troubles have gone, too, since I used Dodd's Kidney Pills."

Others in this neighborhood have used Dodd's Kidney Pills and found that they were the greatest of all remedies for kidney troubles of any kind. Dodd's Kidney Pills are specialists. [illegible] that is all they claim to do. The reason they are given credit for curing rheumatism, lumbago, dropsy, diabetes and Bright's disease is that all of these diseases are caused by sick kidneys.

PLAN TO BRING SEA TO SAHARA

If the allies win the war, France and England together will own nearly the whole of Africa—Germany being eliminated from the Dark Continent. They are already making plans to co-operate in the rapid development of that enormous territory, and one of the projects contemplated is the flooding of a great part of the Sahara Desert.

This, from an engineering viewpoint, will not be a very difficult affair. In the western Sahara there is a vast depression, or "sink," 200 feet below the level of the ocean, and covering an area of about 70,000 square miles. All that is necessary is to cut a canal six miles long, in order to let the sea into it.

The depression is called by the Arabs El Juf, or the Great Hollow. It is a level plain extending from the vicinity of Cape Juby (on the northwest coast, directly opposite the Canary Islands) southwest to within 100 miles of Timbuctoo. Its greatest breadth (100 miles) is toward the south. To the northwest it gradually narrows, terminating in the dry channel which represents its former connection with the Atlantic.

ONCE AN INLAND SEA.

Not much more than 1,000 years ago El Juf was an inland sea—in fact, an arm of the Atlantic Ocean. But the entrance channel (30 miles north of Cape Juby) was at about that time blocked by sand; the waters of the gulf that occupied the Great Hollow were dried up by evaporation, and the area was transformed into a desert. The proposition now is to make a cutting through the sand bar, run out jetties to prevent further accumulations of sand, and so restore the old condition of affairs. Nothing could be more simple.

When this shall have been accomplished, there will be direct navigation from Europe by steam or rail across the present desert nearly to the upper reaches of the Niger. Fleets of merchant men will voyage over the conquered Sahara. From the port of Marseilles a water trip of 1,500 miles will bring the traveller within a short ...stance of Timbuctoo, the "mysteri- ...elty," that was never even seen by [illegible] man until less than a century ago.

El Juf is to-day a hopeless region, destitute of vegetable and animal life. With the exception of one small village on its eastern border, not a single human habitation exists throughout the basin. This village, Taudeny, is on an ancient caravan route, and salt mines are worked there to supply the Soudan markets, the stuff being quarried out in big slabs.

VAST DEPOSITS OF SALT.

All over the "sink" are vast deposits of salt, left behind by the vanished sea. Molluscan shells and other marine remains bear witness that its surface at no remote period was covered by the waves of ocean. One great salt-bearing formation on the western part is 30 miles long by 12 in width, and 20,000 camel loads are extracted from it annually. So frightful a desert is El Juf that no caravan ever ventures to cross it, the route pursued skirting around its borders.

The old sea channel north of Cape Juby, known to-day as the Great Mouth, is an opening two and a half miles wide between two lofty heights, with cliffs rising perpendicularly 200 feet above the sea. It is blocked by ...e sand bar aforementioned. In ...ormy weather waves break furiously ...n the bar. A strong current setting ...ntinually toward the shore has ...used the accumulation of sand which ...ng ago separated El Juf from the ...antic.

A few miles inland there is a range ... high mountains, running north and ...uth and parallel with the coast, but ...ere is a wide gap in the range ...rough which the channel passes. ...us, as viewed from the ocean out- ...e, the entrance to the ancient "gulf" ... El Juf is picturesquely obvious and ...ing. From the coast, the channel ... bed thickly encrusted with marine ...s, broadens out, and can be fol- ...ed for a great distance into the ...rt basin. It forms a valley recog- ...ble as the northwest arm of the ...f that used to be. In some places ... banks of the channel rise to a ...ght of 500 feet, with vertical walls ...verhanging cliffs.

...RICA'S IMPORTANT RIVERS.

...w, Africa possesses rivers of ...magnitude—the most important ...hem being the Nile (which is the ...st river in the world), the Niger, ... the Congo. But none of the ...ty streams of the Dark Continent ... be used as a highway to the in- ...r, on account of the cataracts and ...r obstructions to navigation. The ... has six cataracts and the Congo ...ataracts and rapids.

...ne flooding of the Sahara, by the ...ns here described, will provide a ...igable highway for the commerce ... the world. It will open up the heart ... Africa, develop its enormous poten- ...l resources, which as yet have hard- ... been touched, and incidentally do ...ay with what remains of the slave ...de. The tapping of the great Niger ...lley will render accessible sources ... wealth of vast importance, while ...ging civilized conditions to a re- ... that is even now (though under a ...inal French control) semi-sav-

...ere is an incidental result, expect- ...rom the proposed flooding of 70,000 ...re miles of desert, that would ...e suggest itself to the average ...ghtful person. It has to do with ...ate. So vast an area covered with ...er, under a tropic sun, would con- ...bute to the sky, through evapora- ...n, an immense quantity of moisture, ... the form of clouds. The clouds ...ould make rain, and by this means ... of Northern Africa would be ren- ...red much less dry than at present. ... is thought that even the climate ... Europe might be favorably influ- ...ced.

...he people of the Soudan—that is to ..., of middle Africa, south of the Sa- ...ra—receive their supplies of Eu- ...ean merchandise by way of the Sa- ...ara, from the seaports of Morocco, Algeria, Tunis and Tripoli. The sys- ...m of transport employed is the same ...s that used for thousands of years. From the Mediterranean coast, cara- ...ans can make only one journey a year, to the Soudan and return. They follow the tracks pursued by merchants on an antiquity that runs back to a period long antedating the earliest dawn of history.

CAUSES OF UNDEVELOPMENT.

Two conditions, mainly, have given rise to the state of affairs—deserts and lack of navigable rivers. It is not surprising that under such circumstances the Dark continent should have remained undeveloped, and to a great extent unknown even to geographers. Facilities for getting about in it have been lacking. If, as was the case not very anciently, according to geologists, the Sahara to-day was, all of it, covered by the sea, Africa would be quite as civilized as Australia.

The Sahara is not all desert, and by no means the whole of it is plain. As already stated, there are high ranges of mountains in the eastern part; and in the east and middle are many green and fertile oases, rendered productive and habitable by springs utilized for purposes of irrigation.

Considered as a geographical whole, the Sahara extends from the Atlantic ocean on the west to the Nile Valley on the east, and from the Soudan on the south to the Atlas Mountains on the north. But the most sterile and impossible part of it is the vast basin called El Juf, or the Great Hollow—the area which it is now proposed to reconvert into an arm of the Atlantic by the simple expedient of letting into it the waters of the ocean.

FAMOUS CRIPPLES

Who Have Won Celebrity Despite Misfortune.

Lord Byron had a club foot and was acutely conscientious of the fact to his last day. Yet he was a fine boxer, having taken lessons from one of the famous "bruisers" of his time; he was also a splendid dancer, and, as everybody knows, he swam the Hellespont, the Dardanelles, in emulation of one of his Greek heroes, Leander.

Sir Walter Scott was also a cripple, yet in spite of his disability was a most active man. One night in early boyhood he was chased round the room by his mother, who wished to pack him off to bed. In the morning he was affected with fever, and after three days it was found that he had lost the use of his right leg. He never wholly recovered the use of this limb and always walked lame, with a heavy step. Yet he was very active as he grew up, fighting and climbing with the other boys. It is probable that his early affliction, however, had much to do with the special direction his genius took, for it threw him much in the company of his elders and with old Scottish books. He never mentions his lameness, like Byron, and it does not seem to have worried an essentially healthy-minded man.

Alexander Pope is another notable cripple. His weakness was so great that he had always to wear stays, and in later life he hardly stirred abroad except in a sedan chair with the blinds down. His mind, or rather his morals, were as crooked as his back, and it was said he could not drink a cup of tea without intrigue. His unfortunate deformity seems to have embittered his pen, which was the most venomous and biting of his age [illegible] in his last work.

Frank Smedley, the author of those fascinating and once hugely popular novels, "Frank Fairleigh" and "Lewis Arundel," was a lifelong cripple, never putting foot to ground and often in excruciating pain. Yet, although he cannot be compared with a literary giant like Pope, his life was a benediction to all around him. He was the most cheerful of men, and anyone reading his books and knowing nothing of the fact that they were written in a "a recumbent position" would conclude that their author rode to hounds at least thrice a week, was perhaps a gentleman jockey, and the first and foremost in all field sports and games.

Samuel Johnson was not a cripple in the strict sense, but his large, unwieldy form, his face seamed with scrofula, his purblind peering eyes, his spasmodic movements like one afflicted with St. Vitus' dance, make him a remarkable physical curiosity in the gallery of literature. Yet there is not a more interesting and truly human portrait in the National Gallery than that of Johnson by his friend, Sir Joshua Reynolds. He has painted all his defects and yet it is a lovable picture, because one seems to see behind the deformities of the body the true nobility and wisdom of the mind.

Mrs. Browning would perhaps better be described as an invalid rather than a cripple, yet her sufferings, which kept her for years reclining on her couch, were due to an accident which happened in her sixteenth year. She was one day trying to saddle her pony in a field when she fell with the saddle upon her and incurred an injury to her spine. She wrote her immortal "Sonnets from the Portuguese," which were not from the Portuguese at all but straight from her own passionate heart, whilst tied to her couch. Yet this crippled invalid found strength to "run away" with the man she loved—Robert Browning. Her marriage did her every sort of good, for, although never robust, she was greatly better and able to get about.

Amongst famous cripples who were not distinctly literary are counted Flaxman, the famous sculptor; Josiah Wedgwood, the celebrated potter; Talleyrand, the clever diplomat, whom the Empress Josephine denounced as "that cursed cripple"; and our own lamented and deeply respected Lord Kelvin, the great scientific inventor.

The Death Vampire

(By Edward T. Stewart.)

There is a certain region in the Southwest where the people have a strange belief. Where they got it no one there or elsewhere can tell. They are ignorant, and ignorance is the father of superstition. And this especial belief of theirs could exist only among a superstitious community. It is that when anyone is dying there are vampires who suck the breath from the body.

One winter evening when the snow was falling fast and the wind was blowing it into drifts, John Hathaway, a country lawyer, was riding to the county seat to attend court. What befell him he has narrated as follows:

I was on horseback, my saddlebag being full of legal documents, luncheon and a flask of brandy. The snow was whirled about in eddies that confused me, and I began to be frightened. I had no idea whether I was on the road or off it. All of a sudden my horse sank down in a drift, falling on his side, and pinning my leg under him. The leg was not hurt, for it rested on snow. At least, it did not pain me. The horse struggled for awhile, then lay still.

I was now in terror lest I should be obliged to lie there till I froze. The flask and the luncheon were in the pocket of the saddlebag that was under the horse, and I could not get at them. If ever a case looked hopeless it was this, for the thermometer stood not far above zero, and not being able to move, I was pretty sure to go to sleep, and that meant death. I felt sure that I was beside the road—probably my horse had stepped off it into a ditch—and persons usually were passing, but what was to be expected in such a storm? And night was already falling.

I managed to raise my head far enough to look about me within narrow limits. A few hundred yards ahead was a house, but as yet there were no lamps lit in it. I shouted, but there was no answer.

Whether I slept or not, whether I was simply benumbed by the cold, how long I remained unconscious, I do not know, but suddenly I was aroused by a spasmodic struggle of my horse. It seemed to me that my leg was free. I tried and found that I could move it. I struggled to free myself from the drift, and clambered up on to higher ground, where the snow was not so deep. It struck me that I had regained the road.

Glancing toward the house I had seen, I saw a light in one of the windows. I wondered if I had strength to go there. Getting on my feet, I started and to my surprise walked with tolerable ease. Having reached the house, I pushed the front door open and stood in the hallway. The only light was from the lamp I had seen in the window, and I now saw that it was in the bedroom in the rear. The door of this room was ajar, and I entered. There was plenty of furniture, but it was dilapidated. Thus far I encountered no person.

I fell exhausted in the bed and lost consciousness. Presently I felt a suffocation; I awoke, conscious that I was losing my breath. I felt a pair of clammy lips on mine. Putting out both hands, I grasped a pair of arms, cold as marble, and with a strength born of horror hurled whoever was on me away. The light in the room must have gone out, for I was in darkness.

Yet in another moment I was looking at a light. I saw dimly a different scene from that in my bedroom. It was a lantern a few yards from me and higher than I. By it I made out a team, and a dark figure was behind the light. Then I felt arms under mine, and I was lifted and dragged up on the level, where a man was holding the lantern. Then both men lifted me onto the wagon. One got in with me, the other on the seat, and we moved on, the horses struggling through the snow, the man beside me shaking and rubbing me.

After awhile the wagon stopped, and I was helped into a house where a hot drink was given me and I was put to bed.

The next day I was all right. I asked for the men who had rescued me, and was told they had gone on. I asked what had become of my horse and was informed that he had succumbed. My next question was about the house where I had slept, and after describing it I was told that it was haunted and on that account had long ago been deserted. I told of my sleeping there and of my dream or nightmare or whatever it was.

I was talking to an old woman, a young woman and a young man, the younger woman's husband. When I had told of flinging off the monster the three looked at one another.

"Now, Sam," said the old woman to the man, "after this will you still refuse to believe?"

The man looked much disturbed.

"What do you mean?" I asked.

"Why, stranger," she said, "you was a-dyin'. A vampire was a-suckin' of yer breath. Ef it hadn't been fer the two men as come along and pulled you out of the snow the monster 'd 'a' got ye. Ye wasn't in the haunted house at all."

"Yes, he was, maw," said the young woman. "The vampire put the light in the winder to entice him there for to suck the breath outen him."

Convinced that my nightmare had been occasioned by my cramped position, I left this intellectual group. I had been kept from freezing by the warmth of my horse's body.

Charming accessories for the summer wardrobe include a lacey hat, dainty parasol, ribbon items, including girdles, bags and sachets. The pompadour design shown in the parasol is particularly summery. The hat is a broad-brimmed affair in cream net lace with flutings of taffeta ribbon and a saucy grosgrain bow atop its crown.

Progress of the Ad Man

The Egyptian gentleman who sought a runaway slave 3,000 years ago and advertised on a bit of papyrus for his recovery, turned out the first piece of advertising copy.

Whoever he was he was a genius in more than a small way. His copy still lives, preserved in the British Museum as an exhibit of considerable archaeological importance and as an example of what our advertising experts of to-day would do, if they, like the Egyptian, did not have the benefit of up-to-date information.

The Egyptian knew nothing about the typography of advertising, nor the effect of different colors. He didn't know, for instance, that red is the most effective eye-catching color and that green is second and black third.

Of these and a thousand [illegible] influencing the character of present day advertisements he was totally in ignorance. But he gets full credit, says the Philadelphia Press, for making the first attempt at a written advertisement.

We do not know whether he got the slave back, but he deserved to.

The Greeks, with a fine regard for art, usually made music a part of the programme. They gave us the idea of employing bands to attract attention, undoubtedly one of the most successful methods of drawing a crowd at any place and time. The "song pushers" who have come quite frequently of late to tour the principal streets of our city in a slow moving wagon, seeming hardly able to carry the tuneless piano inside, attempting to popularize "$1,000" songs, have the Greeks to thank for the privilege of imitation.

At first, a town crier, accompanied by a musician playing a lyre or a flute mingled among the Greek peoples and used only the best and choicest Greek in his extravagant praises of the product he was exploiting. Later, however, private advertisements in writing began to be introduced, particularly on the whitened walls of the homes, giving some information regarding the social standing and the age of the residents, their financial rating and the family lineage.

The Romans advertised in many ways. They named their streets, advertised shows, exhibitions and sales on the terra cotta walls of public baths, acquainted the public with sales of estates and absconded debtors, and began the practice of notifying the Romans of articles lost and found, and houses for sale or rent.

The Romans are commonly credited with the origin of the signboard. To-day we have the bulletin board which corresponds to the Roman tabella found in the ruins of Pompeii and Herculaneum, where public announcements were made.

Advertising met the same fate as the Romans did when the barbarous Huns came sweeping down from the north. Until the Middle Ages very little of it is seen. But with the appearance again of the town crier, supplied with the customary long winded declarations and a choice supply of adjectives, advertising began to make itself felt in the conduct of business affairs. The public criers began to organize themselves, both in France and in England, and they were persons with considerable prestige.

From crying out the superior qualities of merchandise and all kinds of merchandise, the criers soon began to make announcement of things lost and found, of sales, weddings, christenings and other interesting events.

Gradually, as time went on, inns began to use distinctive signs and symbols to mark their hostelries, just as individuals had employed coats of arms. All kinds of devices were used and are still used by inns to the present day. All such signs as the blue anchor, the black dragon, the three tuns, the boar's head, the red lion, and so on, made definite representations and implications.

Of course, with the development of the printing press, advertising took a great spurt. The use of posters came into vogue, and all kinds of pamphlets were printed and distributed. Printing gradually began to supersede the hand-written announcement. When Caxton set up his press in Westminster Abbey in 1477, and two centuries later, in 1662, a newspaper, believed to be the first real newspaper, was printed. It was called the Weekly News, and purported to contain news of doings in Germany, France, Hungary and Bohemia.

From then on newspapers, mostly weekly publications, began to appear from time to time in increasing numbers. Advertisements of medicines began to be inserted in the newspapers as early as 1690. The insertion of the first real newspaper advertisement, however, is credited to Nathaniel Butler, who advertised books.

The first two magazines to carry advertisements were Godey's Lady's Book and Peterson's, but it was not until the appearance in 1864 of J. Walter Thompson that magazine advertising really began, and it was not until 1880 that a general use was made of magazines for advertising purposes.—Oakland Tribune.

SHOULD WE PLANT NEW APPLE ORCHARDS?

There is An Opportunity Now for the Beginner if He Will Care for His Orchard Properly But He Should Plant a Fairly Large Orchard.

(By H. S. Fry, O.S.A.)

In the first place, let us preface this discussion of the "Beginner's New Orchard," by an opinion. Opinions are supposed to be less reliable than facts, yet we rely on the opinions of others to direct most of our efforts—besides, opinions are cheaper. The writer therefore ventures an opinion that what is wanted in Ontario fruit growing is not more beginners to plant new orchards, so much as more fruit growers to increase their acreage.

There is, of course, always room for a good beginner, but the apple industry in particular is in need of: First, larger orchards so that cost of production may be decreased; second, fewer growers so that marketing methods and like considerations may more easily be placed upon a basis of standardization. There has probably been no time in the history of Ontario apple growing when the necessity for careful planning of new orchards, thorough care of the growing crop, and intelligent handling of the fruit harvest has been more urgent than at present.

There are several [illegible] which seem to indicate the truth of this statement. In the first place, nurserymen report that it is very difficult to sell apple trees at present. One need travel only through the recognized apple districts to note the scarcity of young orchards one, two or three years old. There is also an increasing number of poorly cared for orchards in the province. [illegible]

NEGLECTED ORCHARDS ON THE INCREASE.

[illegible]

A GOOD TIME NOW TO PLANT.

[illegible]

BEST VARIETIES FOR ONTARIO.

Many growers and fruit men do not advise planting Northern Spy. It must be admitted that it has three bad faults: it is very slow in reaching maturity, very susceptible to scab, and has a very tender skin. On the other hand, it is extremely long lived, develops great beauty when properly adapted to soil and climate, and possesses a remarkably fine combination of cooking and dessert quality, and is a splendid keeper. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Wagener is a variety which, while deserving of increased planting, is not as adapted to varying conditions as some other varieties. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Ontario is a [illegible] between Wagener and Spy. [illegible]

[illegible]

The Duchess is a remarkable combination of earliness, productiveness, early bearing, cooking quality, hardiness and [illegible] resistance. Whole orchards planted to this variety in districts best suited for [illegible] and early fall markets have proven very profitable. It is also a very valuable as a filler.

Yellow Transparent is an excellent early apple. Vigorous, early bearing, productive and hardy, but the fruit is clear yellow when ripe and shows every bruise. Consequently it is only valuable for marketing locally.

When selecting these or other varieties for planting in the new orchard, one should be careful to note the suitability of the varieties chosen. Spy, Fameuse and McIntosh, for instance, are dessert varieties, while Baldwin, Stark and Ontario are cooking varieties and go to the general market. With the former it is both possible and desirable to box all well grown specimens, while it is very doubtful if the latter ... should even see the inside of a box. Under some conditions it might be advisable to box some cooking varieties on account of the box being a smaller package and the more quickly used, but otherwise [illegible]

WHY SPIES SHOULD [illegible]

The writer's choice of three standard varieties would be Spy, 50 per cent.; McIntosh, 25 per cent.; and probably Baldwin, 25 per cent. [illegible]

There is one consideration in choosing varieties which should be kept in mind. Many varieties are self-sterile, at least under certain conditions of climate and soil. In such cases it is necessary to plant other varieties near them in order that the blossoms will be fertilized.

A variety or plant [illegible] self-sterile when pollen from its own blossoms will not fertilize [illegible] nor the blossoms of any other plant of the same variety. [illegible] Spy and McIntosh are two well known examples of self-sterility in apples, and because of this neither variety should be planted alone. [illegible] however, and the two can be planted side by side with safety, even though there may be no other apple trees near by. Baldwin, [illegible] and Ben Davis are good pollenizers for Spy, also, since they bloom comparatively late in the season, as does the Spy.

DR. WOOD'S
NORWAY PINE SYR...
CURED HIM.

A cough is an early symptom of pneumonia. It is at first frequent and hacking, and is accompanied with a little tough, colorless expectoration, which soon, however, becomes more copious and of a rusty red color, the lungs become congested and the bronchial tubes filled with phlegm making it hard for the sufferer to breathe. Males are more commonly attacked than females, and a previous attack seems to give a special liability to another.

On the first sign of a cold or cough you should get a bottle of Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup and thus prevent the cold from developing into some serious lung trouble.

Mrs. E. Charles, North Toronto, Ont., writes: "Two years ago my husband had a very bad attack of pneumonia, and the [illegible] A friend came in to see me and told me to get Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup. I got three bottles, and they cured him [illegible] and now he is fine and well.

I shall never be without it in the house as it is a very valuable medicine."

Dr. Wood's Norway Pine Syrup is put up in a yellow wrapper; three pine trees the trade mark; price 25c. and 50c.

Bradstreet's Trade Review.

Toronto—A cautious attitude is being pursued by the better class of retailers, who have stocked up liberally. While many wholesalers report larger turnovers than last year, this is due for the most part to enhanced values of commodities rather than to an actual increase in the volume of goods going out. Wholesalers who are usually optimistic state that it is harder to sell goods now than a year ago, and with the spring orders out of the way [illegible] anticipate a slackening off of business. While there has been no indication yet of a decrease in prices, wholesalers and retailers alike are beginning to prepare for the changed conditions which they feel will come sooner or later, and retail dealers are beginning to move out the goods which they bought at the lower levels. Dry goods lines, wash goods are still quiet. Carpets, linoleums, and oilcloths are moving out well. House furnishings are fairly active. Hardware business is fair, with a good sale for seasonable commodities. Groceries are quieter, due to the higher prices.

Montreal retail business has been affected by the cool weather, but travellers who are on the road with fall samples are sending in fairly good orders. Some lines of drygoods are held back by inability to get shipments. The leather market is firmer. Money is fairly plentiful and collections are fair to good.

Ottawa—Dry goods firms are experiencing difficulty in getting deliveries of cottons and flannelettes. Dress goods are a little behind the average, but carpets, etc., are moving but fairly well. Collections were fair, and improvement has been shown during the last week. Hardware lines are improving.

Hamilton—The general business situation appears to be favorable, in spite of the effect which the backward season has exercised on purchasing for spring requirements. Work on the land is now general throughout this district, and with seeding operations in full swing there is an optimistic outlook for good crops and a continuance of prosperity in the agricultural sections. Improvement has been noted in the transportation situation. Wholesalers state that very fair orders are beginning to come in for boots and shoes and dry goods. Collections are stated to be good in all quarters. While seasonable requirements have been lighter recently on account of the weather conditions, retailers report that trade is beginning to show signs of leveling up.

London—Hardware lines are moving out fairly well, especially spring goods. Commercial collections are reported to be quite well met.

Winnipeg—Increases in sales are reported by a majority of local wholesalers and retailers. Information from various centres throughout the province reflect [illegible] in the general mercantile situation.

Calgary—[illegible] and a good trade is being done in [illegible]. The [illegible] outlook [illegible] general optimism. Collections are fair to good. Clothing, boots and shoes, groceries and house furnishings are all [illegible] active.

Vancouver—There is a moderately active distribution in spring and summer goods, and retailers are doing a good trade. Collections are well maintained and failures are comparatively few and of small account. The outlook for the coming months is considered to be bright.

Quebec—Spring business [illegible] reported as satisfactory. Considerable activity is noticeable in groceries and provisions. City and country collections are fairly satisfactory.

St. John—Collections fair. No important failures.

EDITORIAL COMMENT

SPEED the spade.

PREPARE by patriotic planting for profitable production.

+ + +

HOW would it do for the town council to offer a prize for the best patriotic back-yard or vacant lot garden this summer?

+ + +

A LARGE number of students from the United States are coming into the Canadian West to assist the farmers in putting in their crops.

+ + +

SOMEBODY ought to send one of those Greater Production pamphlets to the weather man. He is putting a damper on the whole campaign.—Goderich Signal.

+ + +

EIDT is the name of a Walkerton young man who has won the Distinguished Conduct Medal. There are many boys of German ancestry who are giving a fine example of Canadian patriotism in the war against Prussian militarism.—Goderich Signal.

+ + +

THE woeful lack of leadership which the Dominion Government has exhibited ever since the beginning of the War is being emphasized these days by the contrast which the United States Government offers by its vigorous action in girding its loins to take hold of the industrial and economic organization of that Country. Canada may benefit by the action of the United States government in taking steps to nationalize the railways, introduce conscription, fix the price of foodstuffs etc. We are hoping that our government will benefit by the example. Our neighbors can learn something from the glorious record of our soldiers on the battlefield but very little from our rulers at Ottawa who are aptly termed by the Toronto Star, the "super-slackers."

+ + +

THE failure of the farmers to understand that there is little difference between the prices quoted by mail order houses for merchandise, and the prices charged by the average retail merchant was emphasized by W. S. Fallis, of Winnipeg, Western Canadian manager of the Sherman Williams Co. of Canada Ltd. at a banquet held under the auspices of the United Commercial Travellers' Association and the Credit Men's Association at the Prince George Hotel, Toronto recently. Mr. Fallis said that not only did the farmers not understand that there was little difference between prices, but that they also failed to realize that the country merchant and his store is a great asset to the community which should not be discouraged. He contended that in neglecting to patronize the retail stores the farmers were doing the community an injustice. The speaker maintained that the mail order houses were here to stay and that the effect they were having on retail merchandising was bound to continue until the weak merchants were driven to the wall. The only way, he said, for them to fight the mail order houses was to adopt their methods, invite people to their stores and advertise in the local papers.

+ + +

THE seriousness of the food outlook is becoming every day more apparent and one cannot help but admire the earnestness with which the prominent men of Toronto have thrown themselves into the campaign to help the farmers. The pity is that they did not consult somebody who knew a little about farming to get their efforts pointed in the right direction before exhausting so much ammunition. For instance the Agricultural Representatives, who are in closer with the situation than anybody else, were not even consulted by the men behind the campaign until the big effort had been entirely launched. The "spending the holidays on the farm" plan has been relegated to the background until harvest time when it may be of some practical use. The scheme on which the best efforts of city men are being centred just now is to secure as many men in cities who have had former experience in farm work, to volunteer for farm work and to begin right away. Whether many men of this class will offer their services is not likely but certainly they are badly needed. The farmer will not be asked to pay the wages or salaries these men are receiving in cities. He will be asked, we understand, to give soldiers' pay, or $1.10 per day and board. And the sincerity of the men at the back of the movement is shown by their willingness to guarantee to the men who volunteer for this work their regular pay during the time they are in the country. Farmers should take advantage of this generous offer and make applications right away either to the Organization of Resources Committee or to the Agriculture Dept.

SERGT. GEO. KINGSBURY

Sergt. Kingsbury gives an interesting account of his experience at the storming of Vimy Ridge in which he was hit, to the following letter to Mr. R. E. Truax M. P.

Leicester Royal Infirmary,
Rogers Ward,
Leicester, England.

Dear Mr. Truax:—

This will surely be a surprise for you. I managed to get in the way of some shrapnel and of course, naturally stopped it. It was last Monday week, 5.30 in the morning that we went over the top to take Vimy Ridge. Shall never forget it. It will live in my memory forever. I was in charge of two machine guns and a party of men and away we went. The Hun was stupified. We went clean through them. What could stop us, with such fine and magnificent work, which the artillery did. Well, we had gone a considerable distance, when all of a sudden I felt a stinging pain, then my right leg gave way and down I had to go. What rotten luck. My bit in the fight was over, but the boys went on, on and on, till they gained the objective of one of the greatest battles, on the Western Front. I am so glad, that I was one who took part in it. Well, having a shell dressing in my pocket, I started to bind my leg up, having discovered that it was the right thigh, that shrapnel went in and then waited for some stretcher-bearers, but none came my way. The shells were bursting very close one came so near that the concussion nearly lifted me off the earth. It was no place for me to stay. Getting on my feet, I grabbed my rifle and used it for a crutch and made for the nearest dressing-station. It took me about three hours to get a mile over shell swept ground. I had some trip, hardly know how it was managed, tried to keep away from the Tanks for the Huns were shelling them heavy, but I never saw a direct hit. After getting fixed up, was taken in an ambulance, with others to a French town called Bruay and from there to the Hospital boat in Boulogne Harbour. By this time, my leg was giving me plenty of pain and was glad when we arrived at Dover, then being told that we were bound for Leicester, did not tend to lessen my pain, as it is some distance from my home, down in the south of England, to Leicester in the Midlands. But anyhow, Blighty is Blighty all over and I should worry. Having had a successful operation, my leg is ever so much better, but will be in bed for some time yet. The Doctor told me he just got me in time. Right up to the present time, my mother has been receiving separation allowance and now the Canadian Government has stopped it. They claim that I am not her sole support. Before enlisting, I was sending her money and outside of that she would get an occasional gift or two, from a friend, a matter of a few shillings, but after enlisting, she depends entirely on me and now it's been stopped. Can you please do something, that she may still get the separation allowance. Now must close, please remember me to Mrs. Truax and all the kind people of Walkerton and how is Harry? I am looking forward to the time of returning again and hoping to hear from you, as soon as possible.

I remain
Yours truly,
Sgt. George Kingsbury

LETTER FROM ENGLAND

A letter received by Crown Attorney Dixon from England last week gives some interesting information about conditions in the rural districts over there. Mr. Dixon's friend writes:—

We have had a cruel cold winter and Spring since the beginning of the year. We had snow on the ground most of February and the early part of March and frequent slight snowfalls up till this date and at times severe frost for here, the worst was 28 deg. of frost. On Saturday 31st ult. snow came on once more and the ground is again covered and severe frost with it. Farmers have not been able to get any seed sown and much land is to plough, and there is such an outcry to plough and sow grain and grow potatoes but it is impossible in this weather. It is the same with gardens, cannot get anything put in. You will see by the papers that we are requested not to eat too much bread, meat and sugar, but what we are allowed serve us very well, I fear that there will be more restrictions before long as the Germans are sinking so many of our food ships, and there is little hope of the war being over for a long time to come, at least I fear so.

I got a Pathephone Record of National Air, The Maple Leaf Forever, which I like very much and rather strange I never heard it before. It is reproduced from a very good military band.

Since writing the foregoing we have had a very severe frost 22 degrees, and another heavy fall of snow and extremely winterly. The shepherds will be having much labour to keep their lambs alive as this is the middle of lambing time in this part. Of course they have to make shelters for them before the time arrives.

A careful scanning of the merchants ads. in the Telescope each week will help you to fight the high cost of living.

TRADE MARK REG.

Back of this season's new Overland Big Fours and Light Sixes is a direct line of fine preceding models from which they were developed.

They directly continue the line of models that made the Overland name stand in the public mind for integrity of value.

Overland policy has steadfastly cultured that integrity of value in the car themselves, its entire service in the hands of owners.

Over three hundred thousand of these cars are now in use and the helpful suggestions of their owners and of the more than four thousand dealer and factory branch organizations that sold and served them, are largely responsible for the balanced greatness of this season's Big Fours and Light Sixes.

Their handsome style, their perfected easy riding qualities, their proven stability and mechanical excellence, their admitted tire, fuel and oil economy make them worthy of the confidence we enjoy, that they will still further enhance Overland prestige.

They embody the wisdom of the unmatched Overland experience in building cars of this type.

They are dominant values, cars of proven dependability and sterling worth.

The foundation is not the most important thing

True, you can't have a good barn without a good foundation but don't forget either that the roof has to stand most of the punishment. Upon it falls the burden of resisting the destructive influences of weather and changing seasons.

Now, the question is "Where am I going to find a roof which will meet these conditions?" Certainly not in wooden shingles which have rapidly deteriorated during the past few years. Not in anything so perishable as wood, nor yet iron, which lets in driving rain, but rather in a permanent mineral composition such as Brantford Roofing.

Now, let us look at a section of Brantford Roofing. First, you notice it has a pure, long-fibred felt base. This is thoroughly saturated with a filler coat of asphalt or mineral pitch. Then it is given another coat. Finally, the surface is thickly covered with crushed slate. You can imagine what a job rain, snow, fire or heat would have penetrating a roof like that. As for comparing

Brantford
Nature's Water-proofing
Roofing

with shingles on the score of permanency, or protection, or appearance, or even economy, there is no comparison. You put a Brantford Roof on once, and it will last as long as the building; it will always look well and it will never need repairing.

Why not let us send you samples, also our very clear booklet which explains how Brantford Roofing is "always on the job"? Or, if you will give us the dimensions of your barn or house roof we will gladly submit estimates without charge or obligation.

THE CRISIS

France, England and Italy in peace times did not depend upon America but on Russia, Roumania and Bulgaria for most of their breadstuffs. With these sources closed the crisis of the hour demands that we see that our soldiers and the Motherland are fed.

Everyone in Great Britain has been put on limited rations: meat is prohibited one day a week and the making of cakes and pastry has been stopped. Further restrictions are anticipated.

Bread has gone to 28c per four-pound loaf in England, for the first time since the Crimean War.

Lord Devonport, British Food Comptroller, proposes taking authority to search the houses of Great Britain to prevent food hoarding.

Forty million men, less the casualties, are now on active service.

Twenty million men and women are supporting them by service in other war activities.

In the last analysis, the land is bearing this burden.

One million tons of food-carrying ships have been torpedoed since February 1st, 1917.

Germany's hope for victory is in the starvation of Britain through the submarine.

Canada's sons will have died in vain if hunger compels the Motherland's surrender.

The land is waiting—the plough is ready—will we make the plough mightier than the sword?

Will we help the acres to save the flag?

World-Hunger Stares Us in the Face

David Lubin, representative of the United States to the International Institute of Agriculture—maintained by forty Governments—reports officially to Washington that the food grains of the world on March 31st, 1917, showed a shortage of 150,000,000 bushels below the amount necessary to feed the world until August, 1917. He declares it is beyond question that unless a greater acreage is put to crop in 1917 there will be WORLD-HUNGER before the 1918 crop is harvested.

The failure of the grain crop in the Argentine Republic, which is ordinarily a great grain-exporting nation, resulted in an embargo being placed, in March, 1917, upon the export of grains from that country to avert local famine.

The United States Department of Agriculture, in its official report, announces the condition of the fall wheat crop (which is two-thirds of their total wheat crop) on April 1st, 1917, to be the poorest ever recorded and predicts a yield of 244,000,000 bushels below the crop of 1915. The 1916 crop was poor. Even with favorable weather, the wheat crop of the United States is likely to be the smallest in thirty-five years, not more than 64% of the normal crop.

Under date of April 10th, Ogden Armour, executive head of Armour & Company, one of the world's largest dealers in food products, stated that unless the United States wishes to walk deliberately into a catastrophe, the best brains of the country, under Government supervision, must immediately devise means of increasing and conserving food supplies. Armour urged the cultivation of every available acre. The food shortage, he said, is world-wide. European production is cut in half, the Argentine Republic has suffered droughts. Canada and the United States must wake up!

Hunger Tightening His Grip

—New York Evening Mail.

People are starving to-day in Belgium, in Serbia, in Poland, in Armenia, in many quarters of the globe.

Famine conditions are becoming more wide-spread every day.

On these alarming food conditions becoming known, President Wilson immediately appointed a Food Comptroller for the United States. He selected Herbert C. Hoover, to whom the world is indebted as Chairman of the International Belgium Relief Commission for his personal direction of the distribution of food among the starving Belgians.

Mr. Hoover is already urging sacrifice and food restrictions, for, as he states, "The war will probably last another year and we shall have all we can do to supply the necessary food to carry our Allies through with their full fighting stamina."

The Problem for Ontario

The land under cultivation in Ontario in 1916 was 365,000 acres less than in 1915.

Consider how much LESS Ontario produced in 1916 than she raised in 1915:

	Year	Acres	Bushels	1916 DECREASE Acres	1916 DECREASE Bushels
Fall Wheat	1916	704,867	11,942,050	105,315	12,794,961
"	1915	811,183	24,737,011
Barley and Oats	1916	527,886	12,389,029	24,432	7,504,100
" "	1915	552,318	19,893,129
Peas and Beans	1916	94,542	1,243,973	32,401	799,070
" "	1915	126,943	2,043,043
Corn	1916	258,332	12,717,072	51,441	9,043,424

Potatoes and Carrots	1916	137,523	7,408,429	34,411	5,858,594

Mangel-Wurzels	1916	42,793	9,736,015	8,006	15,600,308
and Turnips	1915	50,799	25,336,323

Other crops show as critical decline.

Reports from Ontario on the condition of fall wheat for 1917 are decidedly discouraging.

As there is an average of not more than one man on each hundred acres of farm land in Ontario, the prospects indicate even a still smaller acreage under cultivation in 1917 unless extra labor is supplied.

Food Production is the Greatest Problem the World Faces To-day

Owing to destruction by submarines, ocean ships are scarce.

It is much easier to protect shipping between Canada and England than on the longer voyages from India or Australia.

One vessel can make twice as many trips from Canada to Britain as from India, and four times as many as from Australia.

Therefore, every ton of food stuffs grown in Canada is worth to the Motherland two tons grown in India or four tons grown in Australia.

Why the Call to Canada is So Urgent

If this country does not raise a big crop this year, not only will the people of Canada suffer but the Motherland and her Allies will suffer and their military power will be weakened if not paralyzed. Therefore, the right solution of the present war problem comes back to the farm, as to a foundation upon which our whole national and international structure must be built and maintained.

The Second-Line Trenches

—McCay in The New York American.

Copyrighted by the International News Service, New York.

The farmers know that they are the last reserve, and that the soil on which crops are grown is the strategic ground on which wars are decided. To their care is entrusted the base of supplies.

To enable the farm to do the work two factors are essential. The first is Time. Whatever we are to do must be done at once. Nature waits for no man. The second is Labor. Many farmers cannot plant the acres they would because they cannot get the necessary help. Many are afraid to increase their acreage because they fear they would not be able to cultivate and harvest an unusual crop after they have raised it. If they are to do the work that is essential for them to do, the last man in each city, town and village must be mobilized at once.

Every man not on Active Service can help. In every city, town and village are men who, by their training on the farm, or by their present occupation, can readily adapt themselves to farm work. These can render no greater service to the Empire at the present time than by answering the call of the farm. Capable men and boys willing to learn should not allow their lack of farm experience to stand in the way.

Can the employer render a more signal service in this crisis than by encouraging these men to help the farmer to cultivate every available acre, and by making it easy for them to go?

Ontario's farm lands are waiting—the implements are ready—the equipment is complete—the farmer is willing—all he needs is labor.

So short is the world's food supply that without increased production many in Canada must go hungry, and even with enormously increased production we cannot expect cheap food. The world is waiting for our harvest.

If peace should be declared within a year, the food conditions will be no better, for the accumulated hunger of the Central Empires must be met. This will absorb a large part of the world's supply.

We do not know when this war shall cease. It is endless—its lengthening out has paralyzed the thought and conception of all men who thought about it and its possible time of conclusion. Three months—six months, we said; nine months, a year, we said; and yet two years and eight months have passed their long dreary and sanguinary length and there is no man who can tell how long this gigantic struggle may yet last.

Lloyd George, in a letter addressed to farmers throughout the Empire, said:

> "The line which the British Empire holds "against the Germans is held by those who WORK "ON THE LAND as well as by those who fight "on land and sea. If it breaks at any point it "breaks everywhere. In the face of the enemy the "seamen of our Royal naval and mercantile marine "and the soldiers gathered from every part of our "Empire hold our line firstly. You workers on land "must hold your part of our line as strongly. Every "full day's labor you do helps to shorten the struggle and brings us nearer victory. Every idle day, "all loitering, lengthens the struggle and makes defeat more possible. Therefore, in the nation's "honour, heed! Acquit yourselves like men, and as "workers on land do your duty with all your "strength!"

So, for the honor of Canada's soldiers in France—and for the glory of our New-born Nationhood—let it be said of Ontario's citizens that, in the hour of our greatest need, their response was worthy of their sons.

We owe a great debt to those who are fighting for us.

We Must Produce More Food

JUST AS YOU MAKE IT.

Life is just a constant grind,
  If you wish to make it so;
All of the breezes are unkind,
  If you grumble while they blow.
Every hill is bleak and drear,
Not a song bird that you hear
Ever sounds a note to cheer
  If you wear the mask of Woe.

Life is triumph, life is joy,
  If you wish to make it so:
Why let the little ills annoy?
Toss them off and let them go.
All the woods with glee may ring;
Every season may be Spring,
If you have the heart to fling
  Laughter in the teeth of Woe.

Fo' othah bodily ills yo' take othah pills; but my deah bredren, dere's only one kin' of pill for a soul dat's out of ordah, an' dat's de Goss-pill."

Advertise It!

One day a farmer said to another "I have a big pine stump in a field, what shall I do with it?" "Advertise it" replied his friend. Advertise it! That's the thing to do in most cases. The time has passed when neighbors want to be bothered about things lost, found, strayed or even stolen. If you have a thing to sell, or want to buy or exchange, save worry and shoe leather. Advertise it.

Sapper Austin Dandeneau, son of Mr. J. D. Dandeneau of Hespeler and brother of L. Dandeneau, lacrosse player is reported wounded. He has done fine work at Front, being a winner of the D. C. M. for bravery under fire. He went overseas with the 34th Batt. giving up a good position at electric light plant to enlist. He has been wounded in ankle and shell-shocked. Sapper Dandeneau is well known in these parts as he visited at the home of Pat. McGarrity of Fairbanks Farm.

Will Drill Oil at Flesherton.

Last week's Flesherton Advance says: A couple of oil men have been in town for the past week and are getting the machinery on the ground preparatory to boring. The big boiler and other material was brought in last week. They will bore on a lot owned by W. A. Armstrong at the south end of the village. It is with much satisfaction that the citizens note these preparations to prove what is underneath and whether the Kerdect will is a ghost or something more material.

Bruce Women Independent.

Pending a meeting of the provincial organization, the sub executive of the W. C. T. U. of this county, at a meeting held in Chesley, pledged itself to support only those candidates who will support advanced legislation for the safe-guarding of the home. They will demand of the candidates that they work to secure amendments that will prohibit the marriage of feeble-minded, that will provide for the appointment of women judges to deal with juvenile offenders, and for the appointment of public health nurses to the provincial board of health.

Locked in the Church.

There was no service in the Methodist church on Sunday evening.—And thereby hangs a tale. Two young ladies of the village entered the church shortly before seven, to attend the service, and before they became aware of the fact that the service had been cancelled, the caretaker came along and locked the church door and went away. The two prisoners, becoming aware of their predicament, tried the various doors and windows of the church but all were secure. Nearly half an hour elapsed before they were able to attract the attention of bypassers, and they were finally liberated.—Mildmay Gazette.

Will Make Rock Cement

The Durham Cement Work is to be started up again as a rock cement mill with a capacity of 1500 tons a day. It is a well-known fact that rock cement can be manufactured much cheaper than marl cement under ordinary conditions and is a better quality of cement. Mr. R. H. McWilliams, a former manager, is to be the new manager. Mr. McWilliams has been running a stone quarry at St. Marys. The new organization hopes to effect an annual saving of twenty thousand dollars a year by using hydro. The addition of such a large hydro customer to the Eugenia System will have the effect of materially reducing the cost of hydro in this district.

Metcalf Rearrested

As a young man named R. W. Metcalf, stepped out of the cells at the County Gaol yesterday morning after spending six months behind the bars, Chief Ferguson stepped forward and rearrested him. Metcalf has just served six months for false pretences and he is wanted at Stratford on a similar charge. An officer came up from Stratford on the noon train and took Metcalf back with him.

Supported The Central Route

Mayor Halliday and Wm. McDonald of Chesley and Jas. Douglas Reeve of Hepworth were the representatives for Bruce on the big delegation of about 300 that appeared before the Premier and three members of his cabinet last Thursday in support of the Central Route through Kitchener and Guelph, as opposed to the Southern route through Brantford and Hamilton for the proposed Provincial Highway. The Premier promised to take the views of the delegates into consideration. Work on this highway to which the Govt. contributes 70 p. c. will not be undertaken till after the war.

Wouldn't Help Enemy?

The recent announcement in the Press that a number of Canadian prisoners had been forced to work in coal mines because they refused to work at munition-making, leads his friends here to believe that Victor Bell who is a prisoner of war in Germany was one of the number that refused to make ammunition for the enemy to fire. It is recalled that in a recent letter from Victor, which was published in the Telescope, he said that the place he was working reminded him of Cobalt, and he also asked that some soap be sent him that would take black off his hands. These two statements taken together would seem to indicate that he was working in a coal mine and no doubt that is as near as he could come to telling his whereabouts without being stopped by the German censor.

OUR WESTERN LETTER

It is about time that Eastern papers were publishing paragraphs to the effect that seeding is completed throughout the North West Provinces. Spring is very slow in arriving here. Practically no spring weather has started in these parts yet. A few farmers in desperation have begun plowing but they are only puddling in the mud. On Easter Monday we had a very heavy snow storm and since then it has snowed about every other day. One great beauty of this country is you haven't to wait for the frost to get out of the ground, season as it is out enough to let you plough you get after it as the land does not heave and stay wet.

This has been a hard winter on feed, we had an exceptional snow fall and cattle had no chance to rustle, but had to be hand fed all winter. Lately I met an old neighbour who moved south near Calgary. He tells me they had hardly any snow in his neighborhood this winter. He only used his cutter two weeks. Some people seem never to know when they are suited. We had a neighbour, he came in here, homesteaded, then sold out and went to Wisconsin or Illinois. After a couple of years he was back and rented a farm then he left Idaho. In a couple of years he was back and bought a farm, after about a year he left for Montana but was back the same Fall. He stayed another two years then left for Texas, eighteen months saw him back, he has completed another two years and has now had a sale and left for Washington. He is always looking for greener pasture, yet when he gets away Alberta seems the greenest and he comes back. I suppose inside a couple of years he will be back again.

Words of Praise

Ezra Haist, Crediton East, Ontario, says:

"I feel it my duty to say a word of praise for Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer which I used last spring on a barley field and other crops with very good results."

Extra Straw Pays Fertilizer Bill

H. Wilson, Thedford, says:

Have been using Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer for the past ten years and can recommend them as first-class. I believe I get enough extra straw to pay for the fertilizer and some years, almost, if not fifty per cent more wheat per acre by its use.

Each year I sow a piece without fertilizer and the difference between the fertilized and the unfertilized is so great each year that I am fully convinced it does not pay me to sow wheat without fertilizer."

130 Bushels Of Corn Per Acre.

Archie Dick, Chatham, Ontario says:

"I have used Homestead Bone Black Fertilizer and can recommend it very highly. I put one ton on eleven acres for corn and although the ground was poor, from that field I realized 130 bushels to the acre.

There were other kinds of fertilizers used in our neighborhood, but they didn't prove as satisfactory as the Homestead."

A PUZZLING CASE

"Because who knows what new developments may take place in this case, and throw us out of our calculations. After Ilma Celinski's evidence, I thought it was she who had murdered her mistress, at the instigation of your Mr. Dallas. Now, I know that Dallas had nothing to do with the affair, in spite of the case we have so carefully constructed against him. No, it was Ivan who obtained the black carnation from Lippinton. It was Ivan who obtained the clock-work cartridge from Kutusoff, and it was Ivan who was the lover of Ilma Celinski."

"A Russian and a Pole—oh, absurd."

"Love knows no nationalities, my friend; so why should not this Pole love a Russian, even though he belong to a nation hated by her countrymen? Yes, believe me, major, I am right. This girl loves Ivan, and changed these bouquets at his request."

"Then you still believe those bouquets were changed?"

"I do."

"And that the fatal bouquet was thrown by Gilbert?"

"Yes; but I am hesitating as to whether the bouquets were changed at the Hotel Europa or at the theatre, when Tressinger was absent from his seat."

"If they were changed in the theatre, Ilma Celinski could not have done so."

"No! no! You are right. How stupid of me," said Tancred, in a vexed tone, rising to his feet. "I am not infallible—I make mistakes—it is only your detective of romance that is never wrong. But I am convinced that this girl Ilma is mixed up in the affair, else why should she give false evidence against Sir Gilbert?"

"Yes, indeed; and why should Dallas post black carnations from Paris, when he has nothing to do with the commission of the crime?"

"Oh, the [illegible] completely at sea. You may laugh at me, major, but it is no laughing matter, especially for your friend. I cannot reconcile all these conflicting statements, and whether the crime was committed by Dallas, Ilma, or Ivan, I am at a loss to say."

"Well, how are we to proceed?"

"Ask me something easier."

"You surely don't abandon the case?"

"No, I do not, but I am doubtful for the moment as to what is the best course to pursue."

"Why not ask Melchizedek."

"A good idea. I'll see him to-night, so I will tell him the whole facts of the case, and obtain his opinion. You and I, Major Granby, are only amateur bloodhounds, and liable to error. We require a professional man hunter."

"Who is also liable to error."

"True! true! Still Melchizedek is used to these perplexities, and may spy a way out of this labyrinth where we see none. I think it will be best to give the case into his hands."

"No, Tancred," I said, firmly; "I have taken up this case, and am determined to find out the truth."

"Melchizedek will do that for you."

"I prefer to do it myself."

"Well, well, major, have your own way; but do not forget that this is no holiday task—a man's life is at stake."

"We will ask Melchizedek to assist us," I suggested, willing to meet the lawyer half-way, seeing that the case was of so grave a complexion.

"Certainly. I think that would be the wisest plan. I think I can guess what he will suggest."

"Well?"

"That we should interview three people."

"Dallas, Ivan, Ilma."

"Exactly. My dear major, you are truly an admirable detective. We must see Dallas, and find out the reason for his extraordinary proceedings regarding the black carnation."

"But he is out of town."

"No, he isn't. Melchizedek found out that he has returned."

"And Ilma?"

"We must discover her motives also, and her connection with Ivan or Dallas."

"By the way, I told you Dallas also had been to Lippinton."

"Yes; perhaps he stole the black carnation."

"In that case, Ivan must be innocent."

"I don't know! They each might have stolen one, and while Dallas sent his bud from Paris to frighten Mazzucata, Ivan might have used his for the infernal bouquet."

"No, that is impossible, and I will tell you why. This carnation plant had twelve blossoms, now there but eleven, so only one bud could have been stolen."

"In that case, the same bud must have been used for the warning and the bouquet."

"Which suggestion points straight to Ilma's evidence regarding Gilbert taking the black carnation from the Hotel Europa and putting it in the bouquet."

"You are right, but if you recollect, I surmised that Dallas was also in the room, so he also might have taken the carnation from the glass of water and put it in the bouquet, after which the girl changed them."

"Then they could not have been changed at the theatre."

Tancred made no reply, but drummed on the table with his fingers in a most irritating manner.

"Besides," said I, thoughtfully, "if what you say is correct, it proves the guilt of Dallas, and the innocence of Ivan."

"It does! it does! I am completely bewildered. But there's one thing I wish to find out."

"Yes?"

"What Ivan knows about Miss Maxwell."

"Do you think he knows anything?" I asked, sceptically.

"Well, she hinted to you that he did. When we hear what Ivan has to say about her, it may throw light on the present darkness."

"Ivan may refuse to open his mouth."

"It's not impossible. But seeing how he is mixed up in this affair, in order to clear his own character, it will be wiser for him to speak."

"He may explain everything."

"It's to be hoped he will for his own sake. What's your opinion of the case, major?"

"My dear young friend," I said solemnly, for at the moment, I felt solemn, "I cannot give you my opinion at present, for it changes at every new aspect of the case. I had a theory respecting the guilt of Dallas—then one about a secret society—a third making out that Ilma Celinski was guilty, and my last idea was in favor of Ivan being the criminal, which theory my conversation with you has just upset. Four theories, and as far as I can see, all wrong."

Tancred roused.

"No. I did not specialize any business, so as not to put him on his guard; well, this morning, he sent up a messenger from the Hotel Europa, asking me to call between 2 and 3 o'clock this afternoon."

"Is he staying at the Hotel Europa?"

"Yes. Wanted to be near Mazzucata, I suppose. But what about luncheon?"

"Come with me to the Old Friends," I said, and on his accepting the invitation, we left his chambers, and drove at once to St. James' street.

Unfortunately, owing to our appointment with Signor Ivan, we were unable to linger over our luncheon as I would have wished, which in itself was sufficient to put me out of temper. If there is one thing of which I am careful, it is my digestion, and a hurried meal is an experience which I am such averse to undergoing, especially as the Old Friends' cook had provided a most delightful repast. As it was, we had to devour our food with the utmost celerity, and then, without time for a soothing smoke, hurry off to the Hotel Europa in order to see Ivan. Truly, detective fever is an unpleasant disease, as it upsets the entire system with a constant rush of thought and employment.

On giving our cards, we were taken at once to Signor Ivan, and ascended in the lift to the third floor of the hotel, where the singer had his rooms. The apartment into which we were shown was furnished in a tint of dull red, and the windows looked out on to Northumberland avenue. There was also a grand piano covered with loose sheets of music, and the scores of various operas, numbers of photographs, among which we espied one of Mazzucata, and in one corner of the room a slender rapier with mother-of-pearl handle, doubtless the sword of some stage hero. Far below, from the windows we could see the traffic flowing through the street, but the noise of the moving multitude came but faintly to our ears. Neither of us spoke a word, for, being as we thought on the verge of a tremendous discovery, which involved the death of a man, we felt disinclined for conversation, and remained silent, looking out of the window into the abyss below.

Suddenly, we heard a door open, and turned sharply, to see Signor Ivan standing on the threshold, with a conventional smile on his face. This famous tenor, this secret conspirator, this suspected criminal, was a tall, handsome young man, with a mild expression of countenance. His tartar origin was betrayed by his high cheek bones and also somewhat narrow eyes, but otherwise his features were very good, which led me to suspect, what I afterwards found to be the case, that his mother was of Circassian nationality.

Advancing towards us in silence, he placed his feet close together, and bowed in continental fashion, after which he begged us to be seated, and placing himself on the sofa, awaited our explanation regarding the reason of our visit.

"You speak English, Signor Ivan," said Tancred, noting with a sigh of relief that the singer's first speech was in that tongue.

"Oh, yes," replied Ivan, slowly, but distinctly. "I have spoken English for many years; so, if it shall please you, we will converse in that language, unless," he added, laughing, "you prefer French, Italian, Spanish, Russian, or German."

"I prefer my own language, thank you," answered Tancred, also smiling; for, really, the manners of the young man were very ingratiating; "and so, doubtless, would Major Granby."

As to my knowledge of foreign tongues is entirely confined to French, as rendered by the novels of Gyp, Mendes, Malos, and Loti, I hastily assented to Tancred's proposition, as the interview was too important to run the risk of my misunderstanding on account of Parisian idioms and colloquialisms.

"Very well, gentlemen, we will speak English," assented Signor Ivan, with another smile. "And now, may I ask your reasons for this interview?"

"We were told to see you by Miss Maxwell," said I, pointedly.

Ivan started violently, and flushed red under his sallow skin.

"Miss Maxwell!"

"Yes, of Lippinton, where you went to see her about the Black Carnation."

I saw Ivan pressing his hands together with such force that the knuckles grew white, from which I judged that he was striving to suppress some strong emotion, caused by my unexpected remarks.

"Miss Maxwell! Lippinton! Black Carnation!" he stammered, hurriedly. "Really, monsieur, I am at a loss to understand the meaning of these words."

"Signor Ivan," said Tancred, suddenly, "we have come to see you about the murder of Madame Mazzucata."

"My dear major, both of us are poor hands at this sort of business, so I really think we had better leave the case in the hands of our Hebrew friend."

"Melchizedek?"

"Yes. That name means King of Justice, you know, so perhaps in this case, he will prove his right to the name, by bringing this cunning assassin to the gallows."

"It's a most extraordinary case."

"It is a case, which, if written in a book, would cause the reader to say, 'Oh, ridiculous! such a thing never took place,' but then you know, my dear Major Granby, 'truth is stranger than fiction,' as this affair of the opera house proves. When it is all over we will write a book on it, major, and make our fortune out of it as a shilling shocker."

CHAPTER XI.

The next day, I had the pleasure of being introduced by Tancred to Melchizedek, who was an ugly Jew with an intelligent eye. Indeed, he put me very much in mind of the Baron of Cranstown's goblin page, owing to his dwarfish looks, and I suspect his nature was not very dissimilar, for there was a malicious look on his wizen face. Notwithstanding this unprepossessing exterior, he was remarkably shrewd, and listened attentively to Tancred's recital of all the evidence we had collected together touching on Mazzucata's death. At the conclusion of this narration both Tancred [illegible] marks Melchizedek would make thereon, but to our surprise he held his tongue.

"Well, Melchizedek, what is your opinion?" asked Tancred, impatiently. The Jew twisted his soft hat into a ball in his thin hands, and looked at the lawyer cunningly, with his keen black eyes.

"Have none," he said, briefly, and again shut up like an oyster.

"Will you undertake the case?" demanded Tancred, in no wise disturbed by this reticence.

Melchizedek nodded, being a gentleman who evidently appreciated the value of words, and therefore wasted none.

"You will be paid well!"

Melchizedek nodded again, and smiled in an appreciative manner, after which, evidently deeming the interview to be at an end, he arose from his chair and shuffled towards the door.

"Where are you going?" I asked, curious to know what position this queer creature intended to take up.

"Lippinton," answered Melchizedek, and thereupon vanished, leaving Tancred and myself looking at one another in surprise.

"I cannot congratulate you on his intelligence," said I, shrugging my shoulders; "do you think he'll find out anything at Lippinton?"

"He'll find out all that there is to be discovered," retorted Tancred, rather displeased at my remark; "never judge by appearances, major. That man, dull as you deem him, is one of the sharpest detectives in London."

"Egad, he'll need all his sharpness to find out the truth of this affair."

"Well, he evidently thinks that the truth is to be found at Lippinton, although, I confess I don't see how he has arrived at such a conclusion. However, I am quite content to leave matters in his hands, and wait until he makes his report, which, I am certain, will go a great way towards solving the mystery, if, indeed it does not explain the whole matter."

"And, until he makes his report, I suppose we are to remain quiet."

"By no means. What about your detective fever, major?"

"It is worse than ever."

"Well, I will be your physician today, and cure you for the time being. It is now one o'clock," continued Tancred, glancing at his watch, "so I think we had better have some luncheon, and afterwards call on Ivan."

"Call on Ivan!"

"Yes. After your story last night, I wrote, asking him to make an appointment for to-day, as I wished to see him on business."

"On Mazzucata's business?"

"Indeed," replied Ivan, coolly, having now recovered his nerve. "I told all I knew about that affair to the judge in open court."

"You told all," repeated Tancred, with a marked emphasis on the last word.

"All I was asked by the advocate. Ah!" ejaculated the singer, with a start, "I know you now; you are the advocate of Sir Gilbert."

"Yes."

"Then, why did you not question me in court, Monsieur l'Advocat? Why do you come here to ask me about things of which I know nothing?"

"Are you sure you know nothing?"

"Monsieur!" cried Ivan, in a rage, springing to his feet.

"I beg your pardon, Signor Ivan," said Tancred, suavely; "I do not mean to be personal, but my friend here has seen Miss Maxwell——"

"Who says that you know more of this matter than you revealed in court," I finished, neatly.

The singer reflected for a few moments with a serious face, evidently debating in his own mind as to the best course to be pursued.

"What I do know throws but little light on the crime," he said, at length, with marked hesitation.

"If it throws any light at all we shall be grateful," observed Tancred, bluntly. "Come, Signor Ivan, tell the reason of your visit to Lippinton."

"I do not see that I am called on to do that."

"On the contrary, it is your duty to tell us all."

"And for what reason, Monsieur l'Avocat?"

"For the strongest of all reasons. You may save the life of an innocent man, who is at present in great peril."

"Sir Gilbert Tressinger?"

"Yes. You know he is accused of this crime, and you know he is guiltless."

"How do I know he is guiltless?" demanded Ivan, sharply. "You assume so much, monsieur."

"What is the use of all this fencing?" I broke in, impatiently, for my temper was rising. "Either Signor Ivan will tell all he knows, or he will not."

"Suppose he will not?" said Ivan, coolly.

"In that case I will go down again to Lippinton, and ask Miss Maxwell to reveal that which you wish to be kept silent."

"I do not wish it to be kept silent," said the signor, indignantly. "It has nothing to do with me."

"Perhaps not," interposed Tancred, promptly, "but it may have a good deal to go with Kutusoff!"

"Kutusoff!" repeated Ivan, with the most admirable self-possession, though his face turned gray. "And who is Kutusoff?"

"I don't think I need tell you that, Signor Ivan."

"And why not, Monsieur l'Advocat?"

"Because I know all about him and about you," said the lawyer, sharply; "it's no use your pretending ignorance, Signor Ivan, for I know everything."

"If so, why come and ask me for information?"

"Because you may be able to exculpate yourself."

"And from what?"

"Participation in the murder of Mazzucata."

"Monsieur!" cried the singer, in an enraged tone, "you go too far. I am not a good tempered man, and I will not put up with your insults much longer."

"What will you do, Signor Ivan? Call me out. I beg to decline. We are not in France."

"Monsieur!"

Tired Being Pleasant.

Virginia, a debutante, came in from a month's visit to friends. Dropping into a chair she sighed in satisfaction and involuntarily exclaimed, "Oh, I am so glad to be at home."

Her sister looked up inquiringly.

"Didn't you have a good time, Gin?"

"A good time! Yes," she responded, "a glorious time, but I am so tired having to be pleasant."—Judge.

LESSON VII.

Jesus the True Vine.—John 15: 1-16.

Commentary.—I. The vine and the branches (vs. 1-3). 1. I am the true vine—The grape was regarded as the king of fruits in Palestine. The vine grew luxuriantly and produced abundantly, and was a familiar object to those whom Jesus was addressing. In contrast to the vine which abounded in that country, Jesus declared that he was the true vine, the ideal vine. "The material creations of God are only inferior examples of that finer spiritual life and organism in which the creature is raised up to partake of the divine nature."—Alford. my Father is the husbandman—Jesus was constantly submissive to the Father and always honored him. He acknowledged the Father's right to plant the vine where he would and to exercise full control. The "husbandman" is the Lord who owns the soil, cares for the vine and attends to the branches and the fruit. 2. every branch in me that beareth not fruit—It is possible for all to be vitally connected to the Vine, but not all who profess to be branches of the Vine are such in reality. Many are externally joined to Christ by baptism and profession of faith, who are not vitally joined to him. Fruitfulness is the test of this union. The branches of the Vine bear the fruits of the Spirit, some of which are love, joy, peace, meekness, goodness, temperance and faith. he taketh away—The false professor or religion will not long be suffered to deceive the world and bring reproach upon the cause of Christ. that beareth fruit—The fruit mentioned in Gal. 5: 22, 23. he purgeth it—"He cleanseth it."—R. V. The "husbandman" takes away from the branch that which is superfluous and not conducive to the highest fruitfulness. The process of pruning may seem like a process of destruction, but it results in the production of more and better fruit. He would not have their vitality wasted on trifles. 3. now ye are clean—Carrying out the figure of the vine and its branches, Jesus told the disciples that they were purged or pruned. The had been undergoing the process of pruning during the three years or more that they had been following him. They were capable of bearing fruit, but they were to be further purged and made capable of bearing more and better fruit. because of the word which I have spoken unto you (R.V.)—Jesus had given his disciples careful and full instructions with respect to their character and conduct and his words had been effective in bringing illumination, conviction and transformation. They had been pruned through the searching, spiritual truths which he had uttered.

II. Conditions of fruitfulness (vs. 4-9). 4. Abide in me—This exhortation presupposes the fact that the disciples were in Christ as branches are in the vine. The relation is a vital one, and the responsibility for the continuance of that relation rests upon the disciples. They have power to break the connection and they have power to assume such an attitude that the relation will continue. And I in you—The branch is in the vine and the vine is also in the branch. The nature and sustenance of the vine pass into the branch, so Christians are in Christ and Christ is in them. If they abide in Him, He will abide in them. The word abide denotes permanency. It is a blessed truth that it is God's will that His people shall dwell permanently in Him. Except it abide in the vine—The connection must be vital between the branch and the vine or there is no fruit. If the branch is separated by the smallest fraction of an inch from the vine, its fruitfulness is at an end. No more can ye—Separated from the true Vine, His life cannot flow into us and we are unfruitful. 5. He that abideth in me—To abide in Christ there must be an earnest desire for that relation, a full surrender to Him, a hearty obedience to His requirements and a constant faith in Him. Much fruit—Not only is there fruit as a product of this relation, but there is much fruit. Christ dwells within and the outward conduct, the fruit, is in full harmony with His nature. Without Me—"Apart from Me."—R. V. As the branch which is severed from the vine bears no fruit, he who is separated from Christ does not produce the fruits of the Spirit. 6. If a man abide not in Me—A voluntary act. A vast responsibility is resting upon each of us. The penalty of not abiding in Christ is not simply to become unfruitful, but to be "cast forth," to become "withered," to be gathered and cast into the fire and to be burned.
